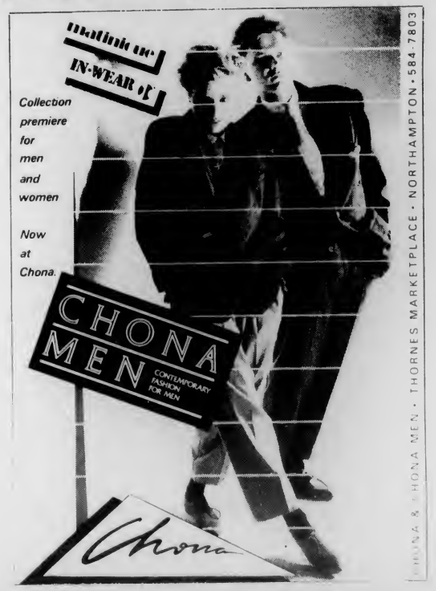
Amherst College offers global fest

The Amherst College Music Department has released its schedule for "Music of the Whole Earth," one of two music series being offered at the college this fall.

Chilean folk ensemble Inti Illimani will open the series Friday, Sept. 20, performing traditional and contemporary Latin American music. Tickets are $6 for the general public, $4 for students, and are available at the following locations: Fretted Instruments Workshop, For the Record, and the Food for Thought Bookstore, Amherst; Dynamite Records and Broadside Bookshop Northampton; and the World Eye Bookshop, Greenfield. Tickets are also available at the Buckley Recital Hall Box Office, Sept. 16-20, 11 a.m.-2 p.m.

The rest of the series is as follows:
Tuesday, Sept. 24- Krishnattam, a dance-drama troupe from India. Tickets are $3.50 for the general public, and $2 for students. Children will be admitted free.
Sunday, Oct. 27 — John Sprague and Ensemble performing "Heart of Gold," including improvisations of classical and jazz music, as well as selections by The Grateful Dead. The concert is free and will be presented in the Fayerweather Back Room.
Sunday, Nov. 3 — Jean Redpath will sing Scottish folk songs in this benefit for Amnesty International. Location and ticket prices to be announced.
Saturday, Nov. 9 — The Sofia Bilides Greek Folk Music Ensemble will perform at 8 p.m. Admission is $5 for the general public, $3 for Amherst College students. Tickets will be available at: Fretted Instruments Workshop, Amherst; World Eye Bookshop, Greenfield; Broadside Bookshop, Northampton; Maple Leaf Music, Brattleboro; and at the door.

All concerts will be at 8:15 in Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, and tickets will be available at the door one hour before the concert, unless otherwise noted. Call 542-2321 for further information.



UMass Theater Dept. releases schedule

The UMass Department of Theater has released the schedule for its Fall 1985 Rand Theater season.

Shakespeare's Macbeth will be presented Oct. 17-19 and 23-26. Moliere's The Miser will run Dec. 6-8 and 11-14. Curtains for all performances are at 8 p.m., except Sunday evening performances, which are at 7. Tickets will be available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-2511, and at all Datatix outlets. Box office hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Ticket prices are $4 for the general public and $3 for students.

A special discount will be offered to those who purchase tickets for both shows. Although the department has not yet ironed out the details, the subscription is expected to be similar to those offered in past seasons, in which theater-goers received a 25 percent discount.

The Fall 1985 Curtain Theater schedule is as follows: Sophie Treadwell's Machinal will be presented Nov. 5-9, and Beth Henley's Crimes of the Heart will run Nov. 12-16. All curtains are at 8 p.m. Tickets may be purchased through the Fine Arts Center Box Office, and ticket prices will vary.

Saxophonist to open Faculty Recital Series

Saxophonist Lynn Klock, accompanied by pianist Marion Gaffney, will open this fall's University of Massachusetts Faculty Recital Series. The program, offered by the University's Department of Music and Dance, will be on Thursday, Sept. 19, at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Admission is free.

The recital will open with the Eccles Sonata and Debussy's Rapsodie. The remainder of the program will be devoted to works written specifically for the saxophone, including Paul Hindemith's Althorn Sonata in E-flat, Barton Mclean's Dimensions 3 for saxophone and tape, Charles Koechlin's Edtudes for saxophone and piano, and Karel Husa's Elegie et Rondeau.

Cited by The New York Times for his "expertly demonstrated versatility of the instrument," Klock has given concerts throughout the United States, as well as on tour in the Virgin Islands and Poland.

Klock was the first saxophonist to appear with the Warsaw Recital Series. For further information, call the music office at 545-2227.

Gallery celebrates by saying, "Isle of View"

The University Gallery will open its 1985-86 season with "Ten," an exhibit marking the tenth anniversary of the Fine Arts Center (FAC), and the gallery.

The exhibit includes works by 25 artists who have had one-person shows at the gallery during the past decade, and encompasses photography, painting, and sculpture. The works are diverse, ranging from color Poloroid photos by William Wegman, to silverprint landscapes by Frank Gohlke, to realist and abstract paintings by Gregory Gillespie and Sam Gilliam, respectively.

The exhibit will be on view Sept. 14 - Oct. 25.

"Ten" also includes the decication of a permanent outdoor sculpture, "Isle of View," at the south end of the Campus Pond on Thursday, Sept. 12, at 3 p.m. George Trakas' sculpture includes two pedestrian bridges extending to the island at the end of the pond, and was partially funded by the National Endowment for the Arts (Art in Public Places category) and the Alumni Association. The rain date for the dedication ceremony is Friday, Sept. 13 at 3 p.m.

The university Gallery, which is located in the FAC, is open Tuesday-Friday, 11 a.m.-4:30 p.m., and weekends, 2-5 p.m.

Lesson #1: The Difference Between Music and "Hi-Fi"

There's a big difference between real music and "hi-fi". Unfortunately, most people shopping for stereo components never get to hear that difference for three reasons:

1. Most mass-market hi-fi equipment is actually made to sound alike;
2. Most stereo stores are not properly set up to allow you to hear any differences that might be there;
3. Most salespeople do not have the expertise to properly match system components for the best musical performance at a reasonable price.

AT MATRIX AUDIO, we take the time to pick components that DO sound more musical than anything else in their price range, and to set up our demonstration rooms so that you don't have to take our word for it: YOU can hear the difference for yourself!

Finally, MATRIX personnel take all the time necessary to analyze your current system for the most cost-effective way to better musical performance.

Visit MATRIX. Hear the difference between mass-market hi-fi and good old-fashioned music.

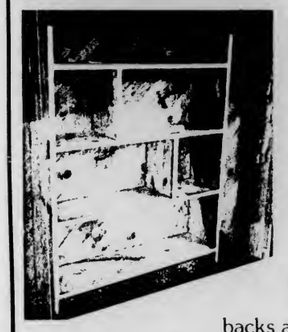
Novel leaps from roads to rivers

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

It's not surprising that Richard Ford's "A Piece of My Heart" has been lauded by such modern literary luminaries as Raymond Carver and E.L. Doctorow, nor is particularly astonishing his writing has been compared to that of Flannery O'Connor and William Faulkner. What comes as a shock is that this is Ford's first novel.



Ford's extensively-flawed hero, Robard Hewes, leaves a string of contruction jobs and Jackie, his wife of eight years, to seek out a woman whom, for twelve years, he has found inexplicably yet irresistably fascinating; his cousin, Buena.

Buena has been sending him brief, enticing perfumed notes for over a decade. She fights with her sweet but bumbling baseball-playing husband, W.W. She also fights with time, layering on cosmetics and frilly clothing, trying pathetically to "look like a young girl." She lives in a trailer and pleads with Robard to take her to Memphis, for a raunchy, yet perversely romantic night on the town.

Robard, though, spends most of his time on an uncharted island in the Mississippi River, protecting an eccentric old man's turkey farm with a shotgun and a Jeep. It is there that he meets Sam Newel, an overweight, suicidal lawyer who is attempting to put his life back in order.

As the novel leaps from pickup trucks on dusty roads to flimsy boats on the river, the characters materialize with all the vulgarity, poignancy and warmth of "real" human beings. The plot takes turns as unpredictable and sudden ans storms on the Mississippi.

Ford's book will do more than just take a little piece of your heart — it'll steal the whole thing away.

REM rocks Connecticut

REM
Saturday, August 24
Agora Ballroom, Hartford

By ROBERT H. GIPE
Collegian Correspondent

REM, post-punk shamans from Athens, Georgia, and darlings of the underground club scene and college radio set, brought their distinctive brand of psychedelia north to the Agora Ballroom in Hartford Aug. 24 and flattened the audience with one of their hardest rocking shows to date.

The Agora assemblage was rowdier than REM crowds of the past, as the group's increased radio and video exposure has broadened their audience.

REM's IRS labelmate and opening act, the Three O'Clock, suffered through a less than cordial response from the raucous gathering which had clearly not come to hear the Three O'Clock's offering of recycled LA rock. This was unfortunate, for the band turned in a respectable set of guitar pop music.

After the Three O'Clock's set, REM hit the stage like a runaway freight train, and crashed into Feeling Gravity's Pull, the first cut from their latest albumn, Fables of the Reconstruction. It was the harbinger of ninety minutes of no-frills rock and roll. Peter Buck crashed, through the first set, thrashing his Rickenbacker guitar about like a man trying to fight his way out of a tropical rain forest with a machete. Bassist Mike Mills, who has shed his trademark eyeglasses, gamboled about the stage like a schoolboy released. Drummer Bill Berry, clad only in black shorts, provided the thunder for REM's musical hurricane.

As a stage prescence, vocalist Michael Stipe hit new levels of funky. Stipe has hsorn his tawny mane and now sports a bleached burr cut which he covered with a 1936 newsboy-style cap for most of the show.

Musically, the band scored big points with Life and How to Live it and Auctioneer from the Fables albumn, and Hyena, an unrecorded original. Can't Get There from Here, a single from Fables featured in a video on MTV, also soared.

The band's sound was much more raw than it has been on tours past. Conspicuously absent were mellower tunes like Green Grow the Rushes and Kahoutek. The graceful Wendell Gee, also from Fables, was played in an early effort to pacify the crowd and keep it from charging the stage.

REM continued into a second encore, wherein the band degenerated into rock-riffing worthy of The Replacements. Stipe ambled through the Stones' Satisfaction, some old Kinks' covers and had begun the Who's My Generation when Mills and Buck took control churning into Wild Thing and Louie Louie, which threatened to go on interminably until Stipe unplugged the guitars.

There was less of the intimate back porch jamming feel longtime REM fans have become accustomed to. REM seems ready to make the jump up from the bar scene to the coliseum circuit. But old friends of the band should not mourn the passing of REM onto bigger things. In their Agora show, REM showed that they have still retained the imagination, sense of humor, and simplicity and purity of sound that make rock and roll work live.

'Foundations' to open Herter Art G allery

Herter Art Gallery will open its 1985-86 season with "Foundations," an exhibit of works by first-year art students. The show will open with a reception of Friday, Sept. 6, 7-9 p.m., and will run through Sept. 24.

The exhibit, which was juried by the students' teachers, includes drawings, and works in two and three dimensions.

At the opening reception, scholarships will be awarded to students who have distinguished themselves in Foundations, the university's first-year art program. According to Michael Coblyn, the gallery's director, approximately 10 students will receive awards of $100 or $200, and "one or two" artists will be considered for the Chancellor's Scholarship, which includes free tuition.

Herter Art Gallery is open to students and the public Monday-Friday, 11 a.m.-4 p.m., and Sundays, 2-5 p.m. Call 545-0976 for further information.

Student Union Gallery announces fall line-up

The Student Union Art Gallery will open its Fall 1985 season today, with "A Retrospective Exhibition" by UMass art professor John Grillo. Grillo's works include paintings, prints, scuptures painted objects, and charcoal drawings. Grillo's most recent work, the El Dorado series, will also be on display. The show will open with a reception from 5-7 p.m. and will run through Friday, Sept. 13.

"Art for Animals," a multimedia exhibit, will open Sunday, Sept. 15, with a vegetarian reception from 5-7 p.m. The show focuses on animal rights and will include slide shows and a film, as well as two-and three-dimensional works. "Art for Animals" will run through Sept. 27.

A yet-to-be-titled exhibit will feature 100 photographs smuggled out of Vietnam during the war. The show will be part of the university's Bilingual Education Week (Sept. 29-Oct. 6), and will be on view the weekend of Sept. 28-29, 2-6 p.m.

UMass professor John Grillo opens the Student Union Art Gallery season today with his work "A Retrospective Exhibition."

"BOSTON WOW!" a collection of works by five contemporary artists from that city, will be on display Oct. 6-18. The show, which was well-received in Boston, will open with a reception from 5-7 p.m., Oct. 6.

The life of Mahatma Gandhi will be the focus of an exhibit Sept. 30-Oct. 5. The show is one of several events marking the opening of the Peace Pagoda in Leverett.

A solo exhibit of paintings by UMass art graduate Betsy McLindon will open with a 7-9 p.m. reception on Monday, Oct. 21, and run through Nov. 1. McLindon will discuss the political climate for progressive artists on Oct. 22, at 5 p.m. in the gallery.

A group of area photographers who have recently returned from Russia will display their work in "The Cultural Peace Journey." The show will open on Nov. 4, and be on view until Nov. 15.

According to Jane Kreisman, the gallery's administrative director, the remainder of the semester will be devoted to exhibits of thesis work by MFA, BFA, and MAT (master's degree in art education) students.

The gallery, located in the Student Union Building, is completely operated by students on both the graduate and undergraduate levels, and stresses political art movements.

Gallery hours are Monday-Friday, 11 a.m.-4 p.m. Call 545-0792 for further information.

Turning the tables...

By JAMES NEILL
Collegian Correspondent

Camper Van Beethoven from Southern California, who cites reggae performer Freddy MacGregor and infamous thrashers Black Flag as noteworthy influences, have cut what is known as a cool record. Telephone Free Landslide Victory (Independent Project Records) utilizes ska, country, punque, and... well... one DJ called it "Weirdabilly".

In the grooves of this disc are an inspired rave-up of Black Flag's epic Wasted, complete with violin, some Island-flavored instrumentals (an unusual wedding of The Specials and Los Lobos), beer-bellied ballads (Where the Hell is Bill), spirited diatribes (Club Med Sucks) without the anger that hardcore music is prone to, and an overall feeling of good-natured twistedness (The Day That Lassie Went to the Moon). It's pressed in a limited edition of 1250 copies with a gorgeous cover.

Husker Du's new single, Makes No Sense at All (SST Records) is a killer. The derailing freight-train momentum of yesteryear's Huskers has evolved into a controlled mix of pop tradition and the urgency of hardcore. Husker Du's sound has reached fruition. Makes No Sense... is rife with hooks and is meticulously constructed without compromising Bob Mould's adrenalin-charged guitar blitzkrieg. Somehow the vocals emerge audible and intelligible above the commotion beneath them. This is aggressive bubblegum; mutant Partridge Family. The ultimate bubble.

The local trio Dinosaur has finally released their first LP on Homestead Records and a doozy it is, including monstrous mind-bending guitar, a small army of fuzz boxes, Neil Youngish harmonies, and delivery with unflinching resolution. These make Dinosaur's debut the most vital release to come out of the valley in many years. Hopefully their impact will be felt beyond the Pelham Hills.

You may have experienced Dinosaur while eating Brontosaurus burgers with Cactus juice in the Hatch last semester.

It's nice to have them here but can they stay in the area and avoid extinction? With the Rusty Nail up in smoke and Pearl Street as cautious as it has been in the past (although they do have a few surprises up their sleeves for this semester), what's a local band to do? Play the Wok? Head for the city, boys.

Other vital vinyl includes the beautiful Dreams So Real single Everywhere Girl (Coyote Records) produced by REM's Peter Buck. They're from Athens, Ga., where unlike in Amherst, there has been more than enough enthusiasm and talent to support a successful music scene. Two very talented Swedish bands; The Pushtwangers (Closer Records from France) and the Watermelon Men (What Goes On Recs.), have exciting new platters out. Lou Reed meets Jack Kerouac meets Uncle Remus on the delightfully offensive Mojo Nixon and Skid Roper LP (Enigma Recs.) It's chock-full of off-beat musical narratives, including the hitbound Jesus at McDonalds. The Lucy Show's Undone LP (out in the states soon) follows a string of impressive singles. Embarking on US tour soon, they're rumored to have Northampton on the itinerary.

Losers of last year's MTV basement tapes competition, The Beat Rodeo charmed hundreds of UMass summerbodies by opening for The Bongos at UPC's free concert by the pond in July. Their debut Staying Out Late (IRS) is a bona-fide beauty. The Dead Milkmen (Philly's answer to our own beloved Pajama Slave Dancers) present their first record, Big Lizard in my Backyard (Enigma) with their valley girl attempt, Bitchin' Camaro. Miracle Legion plays an inspired set on their LP The Backyard (Incas). England's The Three Johns deliver their best yet on their somewhat anti-American Death of the European single. It's backed with a lowdown and ugly version of T. Rex's 20th Century Boy. Australia's Screaming Tribesmen have their previously hard-to-find singles compiled on the forceful Move a Little Closer EP (What Goes On Records), demonstrating that some of today's most essential music originates down under. Elvis Costello and T-Bone Burnett, under the alias The Coward Brothers, shine brightly on the country-folky single The People's Limousine, available only as an import.

Primal Scream is one of many British bands all in a snit over their country's doting press coverage of American music. They feel music from England is being shunned. Seems the tables have turned. A few years back we were being Human Leagued and Heaven Seventeened to death over here. Primal Scream is fronted by Bob Gillespie, the drummer for the Jesus and Mary Chain, but the Screams' sound is about as far from the Chain's lawnmower worship as you can get. Their new single on the Creation label is very...well...pretty, one side recalling the early seventies hit One Tin Soldier.

Buy Fegmania by Robyn Hitchcock (Midnight UK or Slash US) and watch for a live albumn. Robyn hails from The Soft Boys, the same cult band that spawned Katrina and the Waves guitarist Kimberly Rew. Robyin combines Pink Floydist Syd Barrett's madness with the sixties sparkle of The Byrds. For drinking alone, the New Tom Waits Anthology is thoroughly intoxicating.

Movie madness...

Summer cinema 1985: the picks and the pits

By DONALD LIPPER
Collegian Staff

1985: The Summer. The Movies. The Pits.

At the beginning of summer, I was given a choice of either going to the movies at least once each week or having three solid months of continuous root canal surgery without anesthesia. I wish I had been given a third choice.

First the bad news:

PEE WEE'S BIG ADVENTURE: If you can read this review, then the jokes in this film are too dumb for you.

A VIEW TO A KILL: The confused and meaningless lyrics of Duran Duran's opening song mirror the script of the worst James Bond flick.

RAMBO: Ugh. Sylvester Stallone's neanderthal adventure. He goes to Vietnam to kill "gooks," rescue MIAs, make dumb speaches, and growl.

There were only a few really good movies here this summer, and you can probably guess which ones:

BACK TO THE FUTURE: Conceived and produced by Steven Spielberg, features Michael J. Fox (of NBC's Family Ties) as Marty McFly, a high school student in 1985 who goes back 30 years in time, traveling in a machine invented by a mad professor (Christopher Lloyd of Taxi). Directed by Robert Zemeckis (Romancing the Stone) this fast-paced science fiction comedy was the best movie this summer.

PRIZZI'S HONOR stars Jack Nicholson. Wait, let me put that in caps: STARS JACK NICHOLSON and Kathleen Turner as a husband-and-wife assassin in team (a family that slays together, stays together?) in John Huston's humorous send-up of The Godfather epic.

STREETWISE is an amazing documentary about kids who live on the streets in the red-light district of Seattle. Filmmakers Martin Bell, Mary Ellen Mark and Cheryl McCall filmed a group of young street dwellers from Labor Day through Halloween. The kids, including Tiny, a 14-year-old prostitute, Rat, a 17-year-old runaway, and a host of others, tell their stories with incredible honesty and power. The impressive thing is that the filmmakers were able to get such personal moments on film. If the film comes around to this area again, see it.

This summer boasted a bumper crop of movies that were just okay: PALE RIDER, COCOON, MAD MAX BEYOND THUNDERDOME, EMERALD FOREST, and SILVERADO.

In comedies, this was the summer of Chevy Chase, Tom Hanks and John Candy.

FLETCH was the best comedy this summer. Chevy Chase starred as a reporter trying to break the story of a beach-front drug operation when a millionare asks Fletch to kill him. Based on the very good FLETCH series of mystery novels by Gregory McDonald, this may be the first film in a series that will be very good for Chevy Chase.

I wish I could say the same about the sequel to NATIONAL LAMPOON'S VACATION, cleverly titled NATIONAL LAMPOON'S EUROPEAN VACATION, in which Chevy Chase reprises his role as Clarke Griswald, the typical middle-American dad in an endless search for fun.

John Candy appeared in three comedies this summer, (in ranking order, least funny to funniest): SUMMER RENTAL, in which he was a tense air-traffic controller determined to relax with his family in a rented summer beach house even if it kills them. In BREWSTER'S MILLIONS he co-starred as the best friend of Richard Pryor, who inherits $300 million. In VOLUNTEERS Candy shines as a Peace Corps idealist kidnapped by communists in Thailand. Nicholas Meyer (TIME AFTER TIME, STAR TREK II, THE DAY AFTER) directed this movie about a rich Yale graduate (played deftly by Tom Hanks) who is forced to join the Peace Corps to escape a gambling debt.

Tom Hanks also appeared this summer in THE MAN WITH ONE RED SHOE, a remake of the French THE TALL BLOND MAN WITH ONE BLACK SHOE. Hanks is also very funny in this film about a concert violinist who innocently gets caught in a web of intrigue. Jim Belishi is quite good as Hanks' best friend.

John Candy stars in Volunteers, one of the summer's big hits.

VOLUNTEERS
Directed by Nicholas Meyer
Starring Tom Hanks, John Candy and Rita Wilson
Mountain Farms Theatres

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Director Nicholas Meyer's new Volunteers has one thing in common with his chilling, made-for-TV The Day After.

It's excellent.

Tom Hanks, of Splash fame, has turned in his beach towel for the white dinner jacket, brand-new Yale diploma, and arrogant accent and attitude of Lawrence Bourne III. And, oh yes — Bourne has a $28,000 gambling debt, and a potentially lethal bookie as well.

Which is why he winds up on a plane headed for Thailand with a crowd of nauseatingly enthusiastic Peace Corps members. These optimistic-to-a-fault folks spend 17 hours singing such chart-busters as If I had a Hammer and Puff the Magic Dragon. Bourne's comment?

"So this is hell."

And although he's downright snotty, ("It's not that I can't help these people, it's just that I don't want to"), you can't help feeling a little bit sorry for him when he's left in a remote village with do-gooders Beth Wexler (Rita Wilson) and Tom Tuttle of Tacoma (John Candy).

Wilson is appealing as she valiantly struggles to teach the natives to boil their water, ("Germs are bad!"), but SCTV grad John Candy steals the show as the all-American male who falls into the hands of brainwashing Communists.

He's funny when he laughs. He's funny when he walks. He's funny when he runs into a tiger ("Oooh, you're a big kitty, aren't you?"). He's even funny when he's just standing around. Talent like that couldn't be kept in SCTV's Melonville for long.

Another actor worth watching is Gedde Watanabe, who plays At Toon, Bourne's English-speaking smartmouth sidekick, who calls Bourne names I can't repeat in print. "At," as Bourne calls him, spends his time getting high, bemoaning his virginity, and fending off the admiration of a bunch of suma guards who look like Jabba the Hut.

Meyer makes the most of culture clash, and even a cliche or two, (notably, parodies of Casablanca and Bridge on the River Kwai, as well as Around the World).

Volunteers is a well-constructed, sympathetic, good-time movie. See it.

Smith College set for fall theatre season

The Smith College Theater Department has released its Fall 1985 production schedule.

Kingsley B. Bass, Jr.'s "We Righteous Bombers" will appear in Theatre 14, Oct. 24-26, 30-31, and Nov. 1-2. Tickets will be $4 for the general public and $2 for students and senior citizens, except on Oct. 24, 30, and 31, which are "dollar nights." Tickets will be available Oct. 6.

Jean Anoulih's "Antigone" will be presented in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre Oct. 17-19. All tickets will be $1, and will be available on Oct. 3.

All performances are at 8 p.m. For further information, call the Smith College Theatre Dept. Box Office at 584-3023.

Amherst College exhibit visits New York

More than 60 drawings and watercolors from the Amherst College are on display in New York City's IBM Gallery of Science and Art.

The exhibit, which includes works by Andrew Wyeth, ranges from sharp, lively charcoal drawings by John Sloan to warm, gentle watercolor and pencil works by Winslow Homer.

The New York exhibition opened on Aug. 13 and will run through Oct. 19. For further information, call the IBM Gallery at (212)407-6100, or the Mead Art Museum, Amherst College, at 542-2335.

Pioneer Valley getaways offer the great outdoors

By ELIZABETH BROOKS
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley offers some great outdoor escapes, and you don't have to be Henry David Thoreau or Euell Gibbons to appreciate them.

If you are interested in a lazy afternoon of sunning and swimming, a romantic picnic on a mountaintop, a short but strenous hike to a summit tower with a spectacular view or a canoe ride down the Connecticut River, you might want to visit the following natural attractions in the valley. Directions to each will follow at the end of the article.

Puffer Pond in North Amherst is a local hot spot great for cooling down. It's a good place to get some sun, to swim or to hike. If you can, bring an inflatable raft since the beach area has limited space.

The pond is a picturesque area to people watch, birdwatch, or if you must, study. Located off of State Street and accessible by car, bus or bike, Puffers is a good place to mingle with friends and locals.

If Puffers Pond is a little too crowded, follow State Street east a quarter of a mile to Bridge Street. Under 'Silver Bridge,' as it is commonly known, there is a Norman Rockwell type of swimming hole, complete with rope swing. For potential Tarzan and Janes, watch out for rocks below the swing.

These are just two examples of the many recreational areas in Amherst. For more information, you can purchase the Guide to Amherst Conservation Areas and Trails at the Jeffrey Amherst Bookstore.

A 20-minute car ride north of UMass is the Mount Sugarloaf State Reservation. The mountain is named for its resemblance to the mounds of hardened sugar used by early settlers of the valley. Sugarloaf has an auto route so you can drive up and view the Connecticut River Valley.

For those who are industrious, the hike to the summit takes about 20 minutes. There are picnic tables, a lookout tower, and bathrooms for the desperate. From the tower, you can see the Holyoke Range, Mount Monadnock in New Hampshire and UMass among other sights.

The best view in the valley is from the summit of Mount Toby in Sunderland, a forested area managed by UMass. Mount Toby has a confusing but rewarding network of trails. You can pick up a trailhead just north of Cranberry Pond and the trail parallels utility lines to the summit. The round trip climb takes approximately one and one-half to two hours.

Ever wondered what that chain of mountains to the south of UMass is called? It it the Holyoke Range, one of the few mountain ranges that stretches from east to west. The Notch Visitor Center off of route 116 near the Amherst-Granby line provides a good starting point for either information about the geology of the range or for hiking trails. You can park at the Center and pick up trail maps and plan your hike.

Among the many possible hikes is a climb up Mount Norwottuck or Bare Mountain. The more adventurous hiker can follow the Metacoment-Monadnock ridge trail west over the range to the Summit House on top of Mount Holyoke, which is part of Skinner State Park. The remaining structure of the once luxurious home, to which visitors in the 1800s were transported by horse-power tramway, is currently undergoing restoration.

The hike from the Visitor Center to Mount Holyoke/Skinner State Park takes approximately four hours; the Summit House is accessible by car from Route 47 in Hadley as well.

To the east, Quabbin Reservoir is a lush and pristine 'man-made' wilderness and water system that provides Boston and its environs with clean water. The Swift River Valley, once composed of many townships, was evacuated in the early 1930s for the construction of the reservoir. People, houses, barns and even graves were relocated to make way for this new water system.

You can still see the remains of old roads leading directly into the water. Presently, picnic areas, scenic trails and fishing are permitted in designated areas around Quabbin. From the Quabbin Hill tower bald eagles and hawks have been spotted cruising the shoreline. Along the trails, deer, beaver, great horned owls and bobcats have been sighted. If you have a state fishing license you can rent a boat for a day and fish for bass, trout, pickerel, perch and land-locked salmon.

Quabbin: From Amherst, take Route 9 East to Route 202 in Belchertown. Continue East on Route 9. Quabbin is approximately five minutes from the junction of Route 9 and 202 on the left.

Banking on the best account to suit diverse student needs

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

In Amherst you'll find a variety of things to spend your money on and an equal number of places to store your hard-earned cash.

Considering the number of banks in town and their varied services, there is most likely a bank that can give you the type of service you need.

One factor of interest to most college students is the automated teller machine, (ATM)which several banks in the area offer with convenient machine locations.

Shawmut Bank, which has branches on Amity Street and Triangle Street, has two machines on the first floor of the Campus Center. This bank offers a checking account with no minimum balance and a $6 monthly fee, and a checking account that earns 5¼ percent interest with a $750 minimum balance; a $3 monthly fee plus 30 cents a check and 20 cents per ATM transaction is incurred if the balance drops. Savings accounts earn 5¼ percent interest with a $1 monthly charge or a $300 minimum balance. ATM cards are available with most accounts; a temporary card is issued which can be used for four to five days.

Another bank with numerous ATMs is Bay Bank headquartered on the corner of East Pleasant and Triangle streets. It has two machines in the newman Center, one at Hampshire Mall and another in Northampton. Checking accounts will cost you $6 a month with no minimum balance, or nothing with a $500 minimum in another type of checking account, which has a $2.50 charge is your balance falls below the minimum. You can earn 5¼ percent interest on a checking account with a $1,000 minimum, which has a $2.50 fee per month if the balance drops.

Bay Bank savings accounts have a $2.50 monthly fee if the $250 minimum is not kept; these earn 5½ percent interest. Bay Bank will have a special tent set up until Sept. 21 to ease the rush of students opening accounts.

Heritage Bank, at the corner of Amity and North Pleasant streets, offers ATM service to those with NOW and statement savings accounts. It has machines at the Hampshire Mall, the Price Chopper shopping plaza and the Newman Center. It offers checking accounts with a 5¼ percent interest on a $500 minimum balance or a $5 monthly fee if the balance drops below that. Savings accounts have a $200 minimum or will incur a $2 monthly fee; interest is 5½ percent.

The UMass Credit Union, located in the Student Union Building, offers 6 percent interest on a checking account with a $25 minimum; fee is $2 per month. Savings accounts have a $2 fee to open the account, which has a $5 minimum and earns 6 percent interest. The credit union has no automated banking machines.

Hampshire National Bank, on East Pleasant Street, has checking accounts with no minimum balance but a 20 cent per check fee. Another checking account, which earns 5¼ percent interest on a $300 minimum balance, will cost a $5 a month if the balance drops. Some student checking accounts can be kept open in the summer with no service charges.

Hampshire's accounts have a $10 minimum with 5½ percent interest and no fees. The bank has no ATM service.

Finally, the Northampton Cooperative Bank has checking accounts that earn 5¼ percent interest on a $500 minimum or a $3 monthly fee. Savings accounts have a $25 minimum with 5½ percent interest and no fees. It also has no ATM service.

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK

Freshman FRIGHT

Q: I signed up to take five classes this semester but when my registration came, two were oversubscribed. This is my first semester at UMass. Do I still have a chance to get into these courses, and if so, how?

A: Many courses at the University start out oversubscribed each semester, but they don't all stay that way. Some students who registered for the course may end up dropping it, and some may end up not returning to school after all. So, there may be a few openings. Upperclassmen and students majoring in the subject will have first priority at these open spots, though—but there's still hope. Attend the first lecture, speak to the professor after class and get on a waiting list.

You should, of course sign into some open sections as a back-up—you can drop those later if you are finally admitted to your first choice. In any case, don't despair—there are lots of interesting courses at UMass and you have seven more semesters to sign up for those two you might not get to take now.

Q: I've only been here for three days, and I could tell right away that I wasn't going to get along with my roommate at all. I always thought your first roommate turned out to be your best friend in college, and not only is s/he not by best friend, we don't even say hello! What can I do?

A: UMass is a huge school with many types of people, so it's not all that unusual that you've been paired with someone different from yourself. But that needn't discourage you.

First, consider that it's only been a few days, and all new students, no matter how "cool," are nervous, and this comes out in different ways depending on the person. Give it some time—be friendly, though not overwhelming; try to get to know this person before you give up.

If she's loud and you're a quiet person, discuss compromise—quiet hours (no visitors in the room or stereo, etc.) can be arranged. If you still find yourself at odds with her, it is possible to swap rooms (see the swap board outside the housing office in Whitmore) after a week or so, or even go in the housing lottery after two weeks.

But give it your best shot first—you may find that, while not your best friend, your new roommate is a good person to live with.

Senior PLIGHT

Q: When should a senior start writing a resume? When should she start interviewing for jobs after graduation? I haven't given too much thought to this and I'm starting to worry. I don't even know what to put on a resume!

A: Clark Edwards, associate director of University Placement Services, advises that all seniors who want a job upon graduation start getting their act together now. Placement Service offers a two-tier resume writing workshop; the second part is optional. The first level workshop will be held on Mondays from 10 to 11:30 a.m. during the fall, and interview workshops will be held from 10 to 11:30 a.m. on Tuesdays. As the first recruiters will be coming to campus in early October, deadlines for signing up to meet with them are at the end of this month.

While 300 to 500 recruiters seeking students in all kinds of majors will visit campus this year, students can look for jobs outside those companies using the computer job matching system at the University Career Center. The center also has resource materials to assist in the job hunt. It it located in what was formerly Fraternity/Sorority Park, just past Orchard Hill off East Pleasant Street.

Q: What's the difference between graduating with a second major and a second degree?

A: Students who graduate with two majors receive their degree (Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, etc.) in their first, declared major. The second major is listed below on the diploma. To graduate with two degrees, a student must complete 150 credits (instead of 120) and will then recieve two diplomas, one for each major.

The interesting part is that while core requirements may not be satisfied with courses in your first major, they may be satisfied with courses in your second major or degree. More information is available from the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advisir.; Center, 545-2191, E-20 Machmer Hall.

Q: This is my fourth and final year at UMass. It seems like all my friends have graduated over the years and each September I come back to school with no hope for the coming year. It's a little late to start making new friends when you're a senior, isn't it?

A: It's never too late to make new friends. As some smaller colleges, an entire freshman class could get to know each other in a period of a few months and most of that class will spend the next four years together. The size of UMass makes it more characteristic of life outside of school. People come and go. Those special friends you probably won't lose track of.

As for your social life here for the next year, pretend you're a freshman again and reach out to as many people as you can. There are unlimited opportunities to make friends. It's almost hard to avoid between taking classes and pursuing other interests.

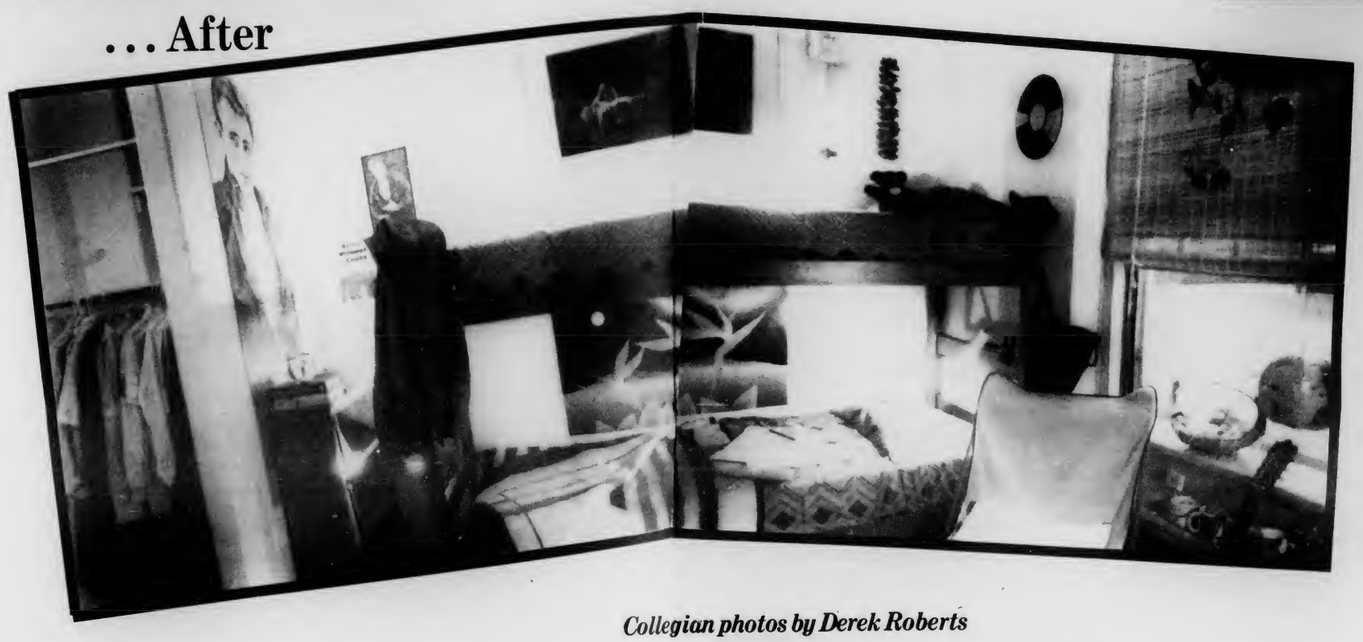
Designing a dynamite dorm room

- Roll up your sleeves and go for it...
- Create a particular atmosphere
- Try to agree with your roommate



Before

... After

Here's our recipe ingredients and all

By ANNE McCRORY
and RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

- What you have:
- Four bare walls
- A cold tile floor
- A ceiling, maybe some exposed pipes
- Assorted furniture, including two bunkable beds, desks, bureaus.

What you need:

- A little cash
- A lot of imagination
- Patience

Procedure: Get together with your roommate and see if you can agree on the kind of atmosphere you'd like to create. If this is possible, great. If not, you can still work with whatever materials the two of you have already brought and budget together for additional items.

Of course, if your roommate's idea of a dynamite dorm room is beer can sculptures and Motley Crue posters, and you'd prefer objects d'art and tapestries, there may be some conflict. But compromise is the name of the game in creating an environment you can both live in as well as in figuring out how to live with each other to begin with.

Furniture. The first thing to do is to work with the space you have, which most likely is not as much as you'd like. Rooms in different dorms and even in the same dorm can vary quite a bit, as can furniture, in style and quantity — but you'll have to live with whatever's given you. A few general suggestions to use the space you do have to its greatest potential:

- Bunk the beds. Everyone likes to get away from it, but sometimes you have no choice (as we did in our project). There is sometimes you have no choice (as we did in our project). There is some flexibility, however, especially if you have the older, metal frame beds: detach the spring base from the head and base boards of the lower bunk, leaving the top bunk elevated. This will give you lots of storage space underneath, and you can hang a curtain or tapestry to cover it, or let one side of the bedspread hang down.

You can then move the detached mattress and springs elsewhere in the room to use a couch for socializing, or position it so half as under the elevated bunk, leaving the top bunk elevated. This will give you lots of storage space underneath, and you can hang a curtain or tapestry to cover it, or let one side of the bedspread hang down.

You can then move the detached mattress and springs elsewhere in the room to use as acouch for socializing, or position it so half is under the elevated bunk, half extended outside. The bedframes should be tested for stability, of course, as safety is of prime importance.

- If you have enough space to not bunk the beds, try removing the springs from the head and baseboards, as described above, creating an openness of space in the room. The leg frames can be hidden under the mattress and springs — a choice preferable to putting them in storage, where they are known to disappear before the end of the semester when room inventory comes around.

Once you have the beds in an arrangement to your liking, play around with positioning the desks, bureaus, and bookcases. Because space was tight in our room, and there had to be some space to move around in, we chose to put the furniture around the periphery of the room.

We left one desk in its original position along the wall, moving the other to an adjacent wall where a bookcase had originally stood. We moved the bookcase to the wall facing the foot of the beds, where it was out of the way but still easily accessible. That opened up wall space for the bureau, which has originally stationed by housing services in the closet, making the rod to hang clothers there obsolete.

The ingredients. Once the furniture is in place, the fun part starts. First, we arranged the large items — the computer ($135/semester to rent at Computerworks) went on one desk; the stereo ($150 and up at the Sound Company) on the bureau. Then we picked up posters ($3-$10 at the Mercantile), bedspreads and some rugs to cover the floor ($11.95 each for the spreads, $36 for a 4x6 rug and $13.95 for a 2x3, all at the Mercantile).

Some useful, social items came next — a butterfly chair ($29.95 at Faces), an FM stereo-mini-cassette-TV (by Sharp, $275.95 at Adirondack Music), mugs and funky glasses (ours, $2.50 and up at Faces). Lamps (clip-on lamps, $9.95 each, kitty cat desk lamp, $29.95, both at Faces) to brighten things up. A full length mirror ($6.95 at Faces) positioned in the corner to add depth to the scene.

And of course a few practical items — a plastic desk organizer ($4.95 at Faces), wooden crate for albums ($7.95 at Faces), plastic trash can ($5.95 at Faces), lap desk for comfy studying ($6.96 at Faces) and complete shower basket (total, $25, see right for items at Crabtree & Evelyn.

Now we had it all — to be clean, studious partying students! Eight hours after we arrived in B25 Brett — and several disagreements and cups of coffee later — we had a finished room.

The trick is to keep it neat.

★ Contest ★

Are people always complimenting you on your room decor? Did you put extra effort into creating the ultimate crash pad? If so, now's your chance to show it off to the whole UMass community!

The Collegian is sponsoring a decorate-your-room contest, with categories for the most original, most attractive and most homey. Prizes will be awarded from the stash of gifts donated to us by area merchants to decorate our sample room.

To enter, snap a photo showing your decorating talent and submit it to Anne McCrory, 113 Campus Center, with your name and address. Deadline is Sept. 20. All finalists will be contacted for a photo session with a Collegian photographer (in your room, of course!), and winners will appear in a forthcoming issue of the paper. Don't be modest—enter today!

Special thanks to...

Special thanks to Larry Moneta, Sally Majewski and Derek. Without you, this project would not have been possible.

The Connecticut River offers excellent opportunities for those interested in canoeing, fishing and swimming. Whether you own or rent a canoe, it's nice to pack a lunch and spend a day either paddling down river from the Coolidge Bridge in Hadley to Mitch's Island or upriver to Elwell Island. Camping, picnicing, sunbathing and swimming are permitted on both islands.

The canoe trip to Mitch's Island takes approximately two hours, roundtrip; Elwell Island takes one hour. Keep a lookout for great blue herons or green herons along the riverbank.

Canoes can be rented through either the UMass Outing Club or sportman's Marina on Route 9 in Hadley. Prices for canoe rentals vary.

Directions:

Sugarloaf State Reservation: Route 116 North. Cross the Sunderland bridge into South Deerfield.

Mount Toby: North Pleasant Street to North Amherst. Bear right onto Route 63. Continue about seven miles until you see access road on left after Mount Toby horse stables.

Skinner State Park: Route 47 in Hadley.

Connecticut River: Route 9 West.

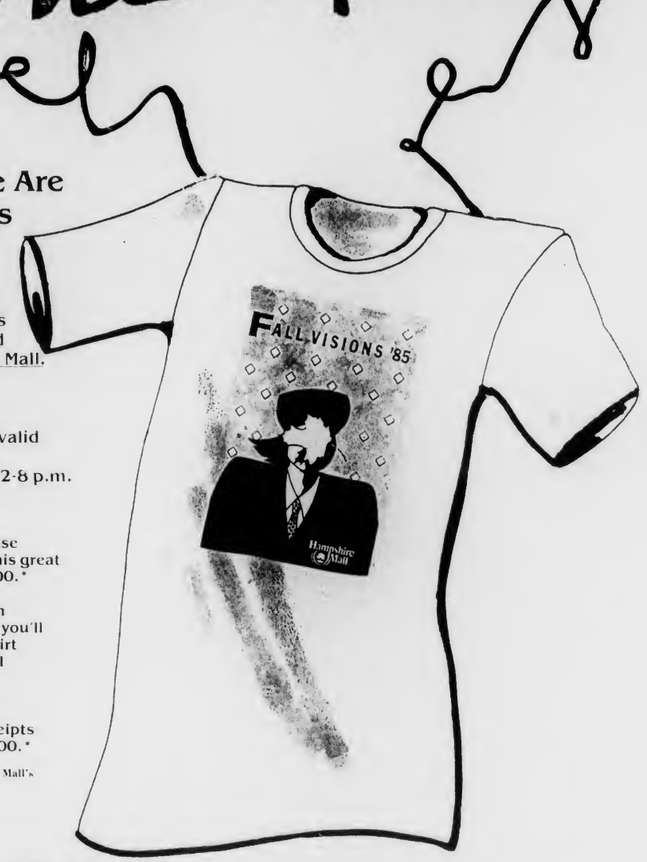
50 things to do while waiting in line

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Lines. They're everywhere this time of year: to sign up for classes, pay your bill, open a bank account, buy your books.



In case you're not used to them — and even if you are — we've come up with a few things to help pass the time...50, in fact.

1) Read the Collegian
2) Formulate the perfect argument to get into Econ 103.
3) Balance your checkbook.
4) Check out the student body(ies).
5) Play hackysack.
6) Reprogram your calculator.
7) Write your mom a letter.
8) Become close friends with the people in front and in back of you.
9) Spin around in place until you get dizzy.
10) Convince the people in front and in back that it's a lot of fun and they should do it too.
11) When the people in front get dizzy and fall down, cut in front of them.
12) Read a book.
13) Write a book.
14) Make up an alternate list of courses to take since you probably didn't get any of those you preregistered for.
115) While you're at it, do your schedule for next semester.
16) Okay, you might as well do it for the remaining six or so...
17) Learn a foreign language.
18) Sketch your dream (wo)man.
19) Make a plan to meet them.
20) If they don't exist, create them (See the movies, The Bride or Weird Science for additional help).
21) Make sure your watch is accurate by watching it constantly while counting to yourself.
22) Listen to your walkman.
23) Read all of the books on your course lists.
24) Plan a city.
25) Have someone hold your place and go to Europe (not for too long though).
26) Think of names for your future children.
27) Practice reciting the alphabet in case you ever get pulled over for drunk driving.
28) Worry about your financial aid.
29) Wonder if maybe the full time job you were offered at the car wash at home would have been better than this.
30) Figure out how to tell your roommate that you despise his or her pet iguana.
31) Make a plan that will cure world hunger.

A guide to pizza in Amherst

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Let's face it: at some point you're going to get the midnight munchies, be unable to tolerate yet one more D.C. meal or need some kind of excuse to take a study break.

And what can better satisfy any of the above than pizza?

If you haven't been in the area long enough to already have a favorite, you may face a dilemma as to whom to give your patronage. Who's still open at 2:45 a.m.? Who's the cheapest? Where can you get a pizza, and your roommate a salad?

The following is a list of Amherst area pizza joints with the basic facts about each. It's just what you'll need the next time you get a craving you just can't ignore.

Inside

The return of The Cage

Remember the Cage? It's back and (almost) ready after extensive renovations. The new track, bleachers and paint job are all featured in a photo essay by photo editor Derek Roberts. Basketball season starts November 23, and UMass opponents are already dreading the trip to Amherst. See page 7.

Football readies its revenge

After two straight 3-8 seasons, the University of Massachusetts football team is ready to turn the corner to respectability. Experienced veterans have blended with a lot of talented freshmen and tranfers to give head coach Bob Stull's team a new look for the 1985 season. The seasons starts on sturday against Morgan State at 1:30. For a preview of the season see pages 1 and 3.

Field hockey looks to tourney

The 1985 University of Massachusetts field hockey team is looking to advance to the NCAA Division I tournament, as it traditionally does. The Minutewomen are loaded with returning high scorers and a group of freshmen with unlimited potential. The strong get stronger as coach Pam Hixon readies her troops. For a preview of the season including positional breakdowns and Hixon's thoughts, see page 6.

Women's soccer: to Final 4 ?

Kristen Bowsher

Just how greedy is women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda? After bringing in the nation's best recruiting class last season, he has signed on three top goalies and four excellent field players this year. UMass advanced to the Final Four last season and are ranked second in pre-season national polls. Banda's goals? "Only to go as far as we are capable of," he says. That could mean a national title for the Minutewomen. Leading scorer Jolie DePauw's dropping out of players are back for one of womens soccer's most successful coaches. For a preview of the team and UMass' chances in 1985, see page 12.

Men's soccer, volleyball ready

Another leading scorer is missing, the men's soccer team is without Kurt Manal, far and away its best player last season. His leg injury hasn't come aorund and coach Jeff Gettler is searching for answers. Volleyball coach Elaine Sortino meanwhile, is looking forward to one her strongest teams in recent years as UMass prepares for its last season before moving up to Division 1. See pages 9 and 10.

And furthermore...

As for the rest of the teams, the cross country squads are primed for successful seasons. Catcher Todd Ezold (85) is tearing up the Penn League after being drafted out of UMass, the athletic deparment has sited a pair of key administrators and lacrosse coach Dick Garber has high hopes for 1986 after recruiting one of his best classes. Coming this week: Women's basketball recruiting news, Men's soccer opens its season, and a preview of the first 1985 football game — Saturday's clash with Morgan State at Alumni Stadium.

Nose guard Mike Dwyer (71) and the University of Massachusetts football team open the season at home Saturday at 1:30 against Morgan State.

UM bears down

Hard times over for Minuteman football

By PETER ABRAHAM

The 1984 football season was a hard one for University of Massachusetts coach Bob Stull.

After nine successful seasons as an assistant at the University of Washington, during which the offense he coordinated scored close to 28 points-per-game while setting school records in total yardage. Stull watched his first UMass team score less than 14 points-per-game while going 3-8.

Stull doesn't plan to suffer through another repeat of that season. An intensive off-season conditioning program and the potentially best recruiting class in minuteman history promise to make 1985 a better year for UMass football.

The Minutemen return 14 starters and have added a trio of junior college transfers that figure to see a lot of action.

"The main goal is to improve from last year, and I'm sure we'll accomplish that," Stull said. "We have a tough schedule, but I think the team knows what I want from them. We have a stronger, quicker and deeper team than last year. We should score more points and if healthy, the defense will be much improved."

UMass will open with Morgan State on Saturday at Alumni Stadium. The Bears were 0-11 last season, being outscored 136-14 by three New England teams and taking a 76-0 pasting by Delaware.

But after Morgan State, UM's schedule gets brutal as the Minutemen take on high-powered Richmond followed by Holy Cross (8-3) last season). UM then plays Harvard, fourth-ranked Rhode Island (with record-setting quarterback Tom Ehrhardt), Northeastern, Maine, Boston University, Connecticut, Delaware and New Hampshire. Richmond, BU and URI all made the I-AA playoffs last season, Delaware returns 18 starters from an 8-3 team and has never lost to UMass in nine meetings and New Hampshire returns All-American tailback Andre Garron.

But UMass will be ready. Stull's passing attack was limited last season due to the depth of the Minutemen in skill positions and various injuries.

UMass returns athletic spotlight

"I would have to say that the morale of the athletic department is as high as I have ever seen it. There are big changes going on at UMass."

— Frank McInerney
Athletic Director

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

1978. The University of Massachusetts men's basketball team goes 15-12. The football team wins the Yankee Conference title for the second year in a row and advances to the NCAA I-AA national championships, losing a well-played game to Florida A & M on national television, 35-28.

The men's lacrosse team is ranked 12th nationally at 9-5. They will go to sixth nationally the year after, and are ranked fourth in 1981.

1983. The basketball team goes 9-20, a terrible season but after a combined 17-90 record over the previous four seasons, it doesn't seem that bad. The football team goes 3-8 and repeat that mark in 1984. Lacrosse falls to 5-10.

The three major spectator sports at UMass went from feast to famine in a span of five years. Only the consistent success of the women's soccer, field hockey and lacrosse teams keep UMass on the athletic map among major sports. The baseball, volleyball, women's basketball, track and swimming teams are solid, but not in any spectacular

Strong recruiting season lifts lacrosse hopes for 86

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For 31 years University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Dick Garber kept his team in the top 15 nationally without the benefit of scholarship.

Despite high school stars turning down UMass for well-financed programs like Syracuse or John Hopkins, Garber managed to field winning teams. But the trend caught up to the only coach UMass has ever kown and the Gorillas slipped to 5-10 in 1983 and 6-8 in 1985, competitive but still a step away from being an NCAA power.

That has changed. When the athletic department revamped its priorities in May of 1984, dropping some sports and putting the money saved into others, Garber was awarded about four and one-half scholarships starting this year. He will eventually be given more, up to the NCAA limit of 14.

"It signals a new era in UMass lacrosse," said Garber. "I'm excited as hell. We're going to move the program into the spotlight."

Garber and assistant coach Eric Kemp hit the recruiting trail this past spring, armed with that scholarship money. It paid off. UMass will be bringing in 29 freshmen, 14 of which will receive some money.

"Some of the others are just as good as the scholarship guys, but decided late or decided to come without getting money. It's an impressive recruiting class, the best I've ever had," Garber said.

Some of the remanining money, about two scholarships worth, was spread out among better players remaining on the team. In all, 26 players will be receiving some aid.

UMass also signed up two more assistant coaches. Guy Van Arsdale, a four time All-American at Division III power Hobart, will be a graudate assistant along with Jeff Thompson, a two time All-American attackman at Middlebury and former assistant at Dennison. They join Kemp and attack coach Kevin Campbell to give Garber four assistants.

UMass will play basically the same teams they faced last season. Hofstra droppped the Gorillas and Garber is negotiating with up-and-coming St. John's University for a game at UMass. Army, New Hampshire, Harvard, Yale, C.W. Post and possibly the Redmen will play at UMass. The Gorillas will face Rutgers, Delaware, Syracuse, Dartmouth, Boston College and Brown on the road.

The recruits? Garber snagged three of Massachusetts state champion Longmeadow High's best players, the best goaltender on Long Island, two New Jersey All-Americans and two members of the junior college national champion Nassau Community College squad.

The recruits include: Matt Woods, a 6-3, 195 pound defenseman from Longmeadow, Greg Collins, an All-American midfielder from Longmeadow and John Fisk, a middie-attackman from Longmeadow and brother of current UM middie Greg Fisk.

Mapelwood, New Jersey's Columbia High produced two UM recruits in Brett Janks, a two-time All-American attackman who chose between Johns Hopkins and UMass, and Chris Zusi, a speedy midfielder that UM beat several other school to.

Brian McCarthy, a face-off specialist and high scorer from Hunington, Long Island, was going to Rutgers before signing with UMass. Adam Rodell, an All-American defenseman from Mt. Clair was sought by UPenn before going with Garber. One of the best players in the New York state tournament, Baldwinsville's Jeff Salinger (a defenseman) is also UMass bound.

The goaltender a lot of top schools coveted, Lindenhurst High's Sal LoCascio, made a late decision and is coming to UMass. He will challenge sophomore Paul McCarty, who played for the injured Gerry Moreau early last season and has reportedly been playing very well in a Baltimore

Minutemen get back into thick of league title chase

But UMass will be ready. Stull's passing attack was limited last season due to the depth of the Minutemen in skill positions and various injuries.

Offensively, quarterback Jim Simeone is back for UM. The senior has started for three seasons and holds the school record for completed passes in a season (147 last year).

But Simeone is being pushed hard by freshman redshirt Dave Palazzi. As of August 26, after a scrimmage, Stull listed Palazzi ahead of Simeone and said a decision on the number one quarterback wouldn't come until this week. Sophomore Mike Trifari and transfer Bob Williamson also are pressing Simeone and Alabama transfer Tim Hecht can not be counted out. Freshman Roger Baldacci and Bill Shaugnessy are also looking good.

"They all have great arms, but some of the other guys have better touch then Jimmy throwing short passes. I'd like to mix up the short and long game more this season. We threw a lot of long passes last season, but few were complete," Stull said. "I'd like us to run the option more often and generally have a more advanced offense than last season."

At running back, UMass finally has some depth. Tailback George Barnwell is the main threat. The leading returning Yankee Conference rusher and co-captain, rambled for 931 yards and three touchdowns last season. He is backed by sophomore Ted Barrett. Fullback Frank Fay has been shelved by a knee operation, meaning junior college transfers Al Neri (6-2, 230) and Anthony Strickland (5-11, 205) will take over.

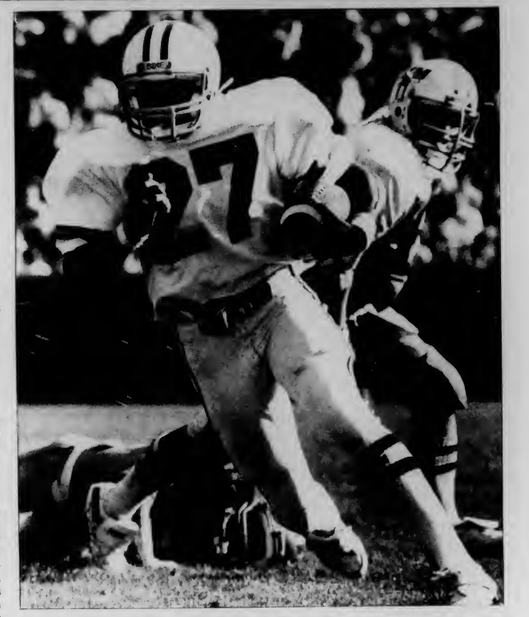
Neri and Strickland give UMass good size at fullback, something that Stull was looking for. "In short yardage situations, we were coming up without the first down too often," the coach said. "I think Neri and Strickland will get us that extra yard."

At split end, redshirt Tom Cioppa and Juco transfer Lonny Brock are competing to start. Brock has the advantage with tremendous speed and gives UM a legitimate deep threat. Flanker John Crowley is hoping for a rare injury-free season. The junior has great speed and strength and is one of the better athletes on the team. He will start with redshirt freshman Jerome Croom in reserve.

At tight end, Mike Kelley (6-4, 220) Bart Fuller (6-4, 230) and Dimitri Yavis (a 6-7 freshman who also punts) give UMass great depth. Ed Toffey (6-4, 235) is another solid TE.

The line returns two starters in right guard Stan Kaczorowski (6-2, 250) and right tackle Mike Briggs (6-2, 245). The left side will feature tackles John Benzinger of Bob Greaney and guard Sheldon Hardison. Back-ups include Mike Barrette, Bill Buttler, Peter Borsari and Sal Tartaglione. The center will be Peter Montini with John Lanza and freshman Craig Wagner backing him up.

Devensively, the three down linemen will be UMass' strength. Nose tackle Mike Dwyer (6-2, 265) and tackles Ed Sullivan (6-4, 250) and Bruce Strange (6-3, 235) give UMass a potent rush, if healthy. Manny Fernandez, Steve Robar, Joe Cullen, Mark McGinley and Mike Moran are in reserve.



The linebacker corps return only one starter in Vito Perrone, the team's leading tackler with 82 primary hits. Right now, however, he is listed bieng hard-hitting Steve Silva at left inside linebacker. The left outside slot is Paul Manganaro's. The right inside position is manned by red-shirt freshman John McKeown. Todd Rundle is right outside, but is being pushed by Jim Turner and Kevin Oulette which will give UM good depth.

The secondary of cornerbacks Chris Wood and Carlos Silva and safeties Paul Platek and former fullback Bob Shelmire is a good one. Wood and Silva started last season, Platek is a co-captain and one of the leading returning tacklers and Shelmire, after two years of frustration offensively, is a tremendous hitter. The secondary backs-up Silva, ex-receiver Jim Earle is behind Wood while Scott Brown and Kirk Williams are reserve safeties.

Tandler is a consistent punter who had an average of 36 yards last season. Placekicker George Papoutsidis is gone and Stull is searching for his heir. Kaczorowski is a possibility with freshman Tom Moran, Larry Brough and Silvio Bonvini also trying to win the position. Rolf Wendt, a former soccer player, came in two weeks ago and kicked well, but Stull is still worried about the kicking game.

"We'll be better — how much better remains to be seen," Stull said. Potentially this could be a very good team, we'll need some breaks against the better teams on our schedule, but overall I'm very confident in our chances."

"I don't like losing, nobody does, and I'm not going to see a repeat of last season. Those days, I hope, are gone for UMass football."

Tailback George Barnwell is the leading returning rusher in the Yankee Conference after running for 931 yards last season. He is also the leading returning pass receiver for UMass.

Women's soccer seeks return trip to Final Four

Player for player, UM may be the best

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Just how good is the University of Massachusetts' women's soccer team?

Good enough that head coach Kalekeni Banda can predict, despite losing his top scorer unexpectedly two weeks ago, that his Minutewomen "will do as well as last season, if not better."

All last season produced was a 15-3-2 record and a trip to the NCAA Division I Final Four in North Carolina, so Banda must have reason to be so confident.

He does. A young (seven freshmen and five sophomores) UMass team has as much skill as any Banda has had in his five years at the helm, and more speed. Banda, who has taken two teams to the Final Four and never finished lower than 12th nationally, expects the 1985 Minutewomen, ranked second in pre-season national polls, "will be as good as they want to be, and if that includes reaching the top, I wouldn't be suprised."

The chances of accomplishing that would be better with the return of last season's top scorer, sophomore forward Jolie DePauw. UM's top scorer (14 goals, six assists for 34 points) is taking the semester off, informing Banda just before pre-season sessions.

Banda will count on the returning sophomores for a bulk of his scoring. Cathy Spence (11-8-30) and Monica Seta (7-2-16) are both good scorers. Midfielders Carolyn Micheel (4-4-12) and Kristen Bowsher (6-3-15) will have to move up more often and get off shots. Middie Jamie Waston and defender Debbie Belkin are also good shooters.

Seven recruits (three forwards, a midfielder and three goalies) will play large roles in Banda's plans. The forwards were among America's best high school players and two may start for UMass.

Cathy Cassady and Michelle Powers will flank Seta on the forward line with Spence and Beth Roundtree coming off the bench frequently. Spence racked up 30 points off the pines last season, taking advantage of tired defenders. In Banda's offense, it's not who starts the game, it's who finishes it.

The midfielders are a solid group with Bowsher in the middle and Micheel and Watson on the sides. Cassady and Powers may drop back to bring more speed and ball control abilities to the middle.

Belkin and Chris Schmitt will be in the middle of the defense with Sue Bird (a co-captain along with Watson) and feshman Sue Montagne on the sides.

And, of course, there are the goalies. Banda made few excuses for last season's duo of Jeanne Paul and Lisa Ellis. Despite allowing less than 0.70 goals-per-game, Banda was displeased with his goaltending tandem, saying it cost him the three losses.

"We would always let up the easy goal at the worst time, and as a result, the defenders would play back instead of pushing the play. I wasn't pleased with our goalies."

Paul and Ellis left the team and Banda recruited three top high school prospects, hoping that one turns into "a team leader, a girl that will take charge and direct us, and win me the big games."

Carla DeSantis, Brooke Adams and Jean Holland were the top keepers in Massachusetts, New York and Colorado respectively and by the first game (September 11 at home against Keene State) Banda hopes to have a permanent keeper.

Defender Debbie Belkin is a mainstay of the UMass women's soccer team. Coach Kalekeni Banda's team hopes to return to the NCAA Final Four.

Banda thinks that with the increased maturity of the sophomores, the skills of the freshmen and his new goalie, UM could be better than last season.

"I want to eliminate the mistakes and mentally be a step ahead of our opponents, because on the level we play at everybody is equal physically, it's a matter of anticipation," banda said.

"We want to win our region (Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire) and get into the tournament, the rest will take care of itself. I think we are capable of going places."

UMass field hockey: bring on the powers

Rugged schedule faces stickers on tourney road

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon was asked how many times her teams have made the NCAA Final Four.

"Five times," answered Hixon quickly. "Make that four," she corrected herself, "I was already counting this year."

She's not being overconfident either. In seven years, Hixon has guided six teams to the national tournament. She took a young team into the tourney last season, only to lose to rival Connecticut 4-3 in four overtimes.

Three of the top four scorers return from last season. A high-scoring transfer and seven talented freshmen round out what could be one of UMass' best teams in the sport.

"Traditionally, we've been strong and I expect that we will have another good team," Hixon said. "We've got solid players at every position and I think the mental atittude to get through a tough schedule.

When asked to name a weakness, Hixon grew silent and after a few minutes of thought replied, "I don't think we have an actual weakness. The major problem is finding what group of girls will work the best together."

Offesnively, the Minutewomen return leading scorer Tonia Kennedy. The sophomore scored 13 goals and had four assists last season. Senior defender Megan Donnelly, an academic All-American and member of the U.S. national team now touring Europe, chipped in with nine goals and an assist. Junior midfielder Chris Kocot added six goals. Throw in senior midfielder Judy Morgan and junior forward Erin Caniff (four goals and an assistant each) and the scoring punch seems set, especially after adding freshmen forwards Kathy DeAngelis, Ruth Vasapolli and Julie Stuart.

Northwestern transfer Lisa Griswold has been labeled as "one of our best scorers," by Hixon and has two years of eligibility.

In the middle, look for Stuart, Morgan, Kocot, Lil Hultin and Amy Robertson. Defensively, Donnelly, Nancy O'Halloran, Karissa Neihoff and Sandy Crowley are back and will see a lot of playing time.

Four freshmen defenders: Pam Bustin, Colleen Reilly, Chris Gutheil and Kathe Derwin are all capable of breaking into starting lineup.

In the nets, sophomore Lynn Carlson allowed an average of 1.2 goals-per-game last season, but will be pushed by senior Kathy Rowe.

UMass outshot its opponents 451-158 last season and had an advantage of 263-113 in corners. This season, UMass will face one of the toughest schedules in the nation. The Minutewomen will open with Virginia and will tangle with the likes of Iowa, Temple, defending NCAA champ Old Dominion, Harvard, UConn, Michigan and Purdue.

"It's the type of schedule I like, it's one that is tough enough to test us and one that, if we manage a good record, will get us into the tournament," said Hixon.

"My goal is to take them as far as they can go," Hixon said. "I think the new players will adjust to our style of play. We have some kids who played in the Junior Olympics (DeAnglis and Bustin) and Donnelly will be much improved after the experiences she is having. I'm looking forward to this year."

When the Final Four is an old friend, being knocked out in the first round means there is a score to settle and the UMass field hockey team is ready to do just that.

Tonia Kennedy led the University of Massachusetts field hockey team in scoring last season with 13 goals and four assists.

Big changes . . .

. . . at The Cage

Renovations near completion

Design and text by Peter Abraham, sports editor

The Curry Hicks Cage has long been the symbol of University of Massachusetts basketball. A small, crusty old building, the Cage is nevertheless loved by all of the 4,200 UMass fans that crowded into it for each home game.

The building underwent extensive renovations starting last fall and the basketball teams spent their seasons in Springfield, playing before uninspired crowds of 300-500 people. The Cage is schedlued for completion by the first basketball game, November 23.

Photo editor Derek Roberts visited the site last week and came back with these images of the new Cage.

On top (left) the old Cage was a dark place, poorly lit and cramped, the newer version (top right) has been painted white, the dirt floor has been replaced by an all-purpose surface (which will be covered by a wooden floor for games.)

The old wooden track has been replaced by a new surface (below). The outside (right) will feature a new lobby and locker room area. The creaky stands are being replaced by retractable bleachers (bottom.)

The familiar scoreboard will remain intact (bottom right).

The Cage, when completed, will be used for basketball, volleyball, indoor practices for the baseball, softball, lacrosse and track teams as well as other functions.

"The Cage is a symbol of the effort the athletic department is making towards success," UMass athletic director Frank McInerney said. "It's a great building, and it looks good. I'll be glad to get our teams back in it."

With the injury to leading scorer Kurt Manal, forward Ferdie Adoboe (above) will be counted on for much of the men's soccer team's scoring.

Men's soccer suffers a bad break

Manal's leg injury limits booters offense

by PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

With all-star forwart Kurt Manal the University of Massachusett's men's soccer team is a very good one.

Without him, the Minutemen may be just a very ordinary team.

Manal, who led UMass with 11 goals in his freshman season, broke his leg during a spring game against Boston University. The break has healed but the leg lost much of its muscle, leaving Manal without the speed and stamina that made him a New England all-star.

As a result, Manal will miss the entire season. "With him, we can improve on last season, without him we're an unknown quantity," said coach Jeff Gettler.

UMass went 9-8-3 last season, upsetting powerful Providence College and the University of Connecticut on way to its first winning season since 1977. The Minutemen enjoyed a top New England ranking and national recognition before faltering late in the season. Gettler, in his fourth year, returns 14 lettermen and was hoping to achieve similar success, until Manal's injury.

Without Manal, Gettler is desperately seeking scoring. The remaining frontline players include senior Ferdie Adoboe. The triple jumper-turned-forward scored one goal last season and Gettler makes it clear more is expected of the speedy Amherst High graduate.

Ferdie just has to score for us to do well without Kurt," Gettler said. "I expect a lot of him."

Joining Adoboe is high school All-American F.J. Swicklbauer. "I expect F.J. to help us right away," said Gettler. "He's a talented kid with a good scoring touch. Again. we'll need him to score."

UMass' best player, with Manal on the shelf, is midfielder Andy Bing. "He's magic," said Gettler. "He scored the game-winners against PC and UConn last year and he's only a sophomore."

Bing, who scored five goals last year, teams in the midfield with senior Mike Bellino and junior John Shannon. Bellino missed all of 1985 with a knee injury while Shannon improved to the point where Gettler is labeling him as the key to the midfield's play. Senior Tom Uschok (four goals) provides needed depth and will see considerable playing time.

On the back lines, sophomore sweeper Matt Cushing returns after an injury plagued freshman season. "Matt's a great player who really backbones our defense," Gettler said. "We need a strong season from him."

Other back line players include Rich Baldwin, Paul Ricard and Matt Dowd. "They're all big strong kids, the type you need on defeuse," said the coach.

The UMass goaltending was a sore spot with Gettler last season. Don Donahue played much of the year and Gettler said that he has improved, but has other candidates to push him.

Freshman Sam Ginzburg and transfer Mark Newman (from Ohio State) are contending for the goalie job and Gettler hopes to put it in one man's hands before the season.

"It's a tough decision, but I think I'm ready to make a tough decision," Gettler said.

Another back that could see action is St. Peter's transfer Kevin Knopf, brother of graduated UMass baseball pitcher Jim. He has three years after starting for St. Peter's.

"I'd like to find consistent goaltending, more scoring (UMass scored 21 in 20 games) and general improvement from what I feel was already a good team," Gettler said. "This is the year UMass soccer could really go places."

If they survive their schedule.

UMass open in Akron against a tough Akron team and then Bowling Green, one of Division II's best teams. Akron was ranked seventh in Division I. They also face B.U., UConn, Brooklyn, Southern Connecticut and Harvard, all pre-season powerhouses.

"We have a depth and talent this season," the high-reaching coach said. "I'm excited as hell because I think we can do well."

Talented volleyball looks to tourney

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

In the seven years Elaine Sortino has been volleyball coach, she has never had to make the decisions she will have to make this season.

"In the past, I've had four, maybe five good players, I mean real good players," said the University of Massachusetts coach. "This season, I've got 16 players I can honestly say are good players, and I can only keep 12. It's a tough decision, but there are worse decisions to make."

Sortino has seven freshmen and a junior transfer that are new to the team. One of UM's few Division II sports, volleyball will move into the Altantic 10 next season. The A-10 is considered the best volleyball conference west of the Mississippi with such national powers as Penn State.

"It's good we're getting better players, because we're going to need them next season," the coach said. "But as far as this season is concerned, I'm very upbeat and excited about our chances."

UMass went 29-19 last season and made the post-season ECAC tournament. Sortino is hoping for a repeat of that season, if not better.

Returning for UMass are senior outside hitters Sally Mahar and Ann Ringrose. "They've been mainstays, especially Sally (a four-year starter) said Sortino. "I think they'll continue to play well."

Defender Debbie Cole is back along with middle blockers Marcy Guiliotis and Sarah Ryan. Sortino is looking for a setter, volleyball's version of a quarterback in that she runs the team's offense.

Five candidates have emerged for the vital position. Sophomore Cheryl Alves played last season and three freshmen: Julliette Primer, Cathy Lis and Julie Smith have good backgrounds. Former Polish junior team member Violetta Gladkowska, a transfer from Massasoit Community College in Brockton, MA. is an excellent player.

Four other freshmen will also be looking for positions. They are middle blocker Barbara Meehan and outside hitters Nancy Mc?arland, Christine McEnroe and Susan Power.

"I think our strengths will be that we will be a bigger (taller) team and therefore a better blocking one. We're drawing the Massachusetts kids finally, and they are good players. We're traditionally a strong serving team and I don't think that will change," Sortino said.

"We will be hurt by our lack of experience and I think that early on, we'll be exciting but ragged. I'd like to run a 6-2 set (two setters) so that will depend on two setters being good enough to play together. We'll know a lot more after the first few weeks of the season."

UMass will face a tough schedule with matches against American International, Lowell, Holy Cross and other regional rivals. The Minutewomen will also be in seven tournaments, including two it will host, the UMass Classic and the UMass invitationals.

Three junior college players are heading for Amhersst and will fit into the Gorilla's plans right away. John Jordan, the MVP of the JUCO tournament as a defenseman for Nassau and Chris Knapp, a 6-3 defenseman from Nassau, both have two years of eligibility. Baltimore native Paul Thomas attended Hofstra for a year, dropped out and played for the Coral Springs lacrosse club in Florida, a UM opponent during its spring trip. "He's by far the best club player down there," said Garber.

UMass Cross Country:
Men have experienced squad

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A young, but experienced, men's cross country team faces one of the toughest schedules in University of Massachusetts' history this fall.

Head coach Ken O'Brian enters his 18th season depending on six returning lettermen, five of which are either sophomores or juniors.

Senior John Panaccione, the school record holder in the 3,000 meter with a NCAA qualifying time of 13:52 last spring, has developed into one of the East's better distance runners. After leading the team to a fifth place in the New England cross country championships, he set school and personal records both indoors and outdoors, including a second place in the Eastern Championships with a 8:55 two mile.

Panaccione is joined by sophomore Paul Stanislawczyk, a solid second man on the team last season. He was fourth in the indoor two mile at the New Englands and a 3:52 1.500. Wayne Levy, a junior, can also be counted on for help. The Jamaica native showed his range last season placing in the Eastern's 3,000 and 10,000. In five years of organized running, Levy has shown outstanding improvement and is solidly among the Minutemen's top five.

Jan Novak placed in both the New England 1,500 and IC4A 4 x 800 relay.

Women look for a lead runner

Cautious optimism.

That's about the best way to describe the feelings of second year coach Caroline Gardiner when she talks about her University of Massachusetts women's cross country team.

"We have the kind of team that could go out and be real strong, or revert back to last year's form," said Gardiner. "It's funny, we have a group of girls that are all within a few minutes of each other, but no one runner that will go out and get us a place in a big meet."

After a 1-5 dual meet season and ninth place finish in the New England championships, the Minutewomen will be looking for improvement. The rugged schedule includes Yale and Dartmouth, two regional powers as well as the Rutgers Invitationals.

Last season's top six runners return and if that group remains injury-free, UMass will have a better team.

Junior Sally Howes was number one last season for the Minutewomen, but was slowed by sickness. Seniors Doreen Erickson and Lauren Heyl are back along with juniors Deidre Doyle and Laureen Doughty. Sophomore Sarah Kitchell ran well last season and could move to the front of the UMass pack. Junior Eileen Kelly spent much of 1985 on the injured list and her return will add depth.

A group of 5-10 incoming freshmen will "provide depth and push us from the bottom," according to Gardiner.

"We ran all bunched up last year, no one person took a big lead," Gardiner noted. "I'm looking for somebody to come in this year, become our best runner and place highly. At this point, without seeing the girls, I don't know who that will be. There are a number of girls who could fill that slot, it's just up to them to come out and take it."

"I think we're talented enough to do well," she said. "With a year of experience and hopefully no injuries, this team will be much better than last year's."

fashion.

The successful women's team make it purely on the skill of their coaches. With the exception of the men's basketball team, all UMass teams fall way below NCAA maximum scholarship levels. Some awared no scholarships, but play a schedule of fully-funded teams. The Curry Hicks Cage, one of New England's most historical basketball arenas, falls into a state of neglect and disrepair. Practice facilities are few and assistant coaches are rare for many sports.

Fall 1985. To a person, every coach talks of having "great" seasons. Teams are looking forward to the play of in coming freshmen, in many cases high school All-Americans. New basketball and football coaches are in the midst of long-range plans that end with UMass being back at the top. The Cage is undergoing a two million dollar facelift and a new multi-purpose stadium is under consideration. Full-time assistants and graduate assistants are added to almost every sport. The times, as Bob Dylan sang, they are a changing.

It is safe to assume that the football team will be better then 3-8 and in time, as coach Bob Stull brings in the conference's best recruits, will be one of the dominant I-AA teams in the East. The men's basketball team has recruited players from the Washington, New York and Baltimore areas with the help of well-connected new assistant coach Dennis Jackson.

Lacrosse coach Dick Garber, going into his 32nd season, predicts a "new era" for his team and is plotting his climb back to the top.

The women's basketball team has 14 scholarship players for the first time. The men's soccer team, after its first winning season since 1977, is taking on nationally ranked teams. The traditionally successful women's teams are getting increased scholarship help and landing recruits that they had little chance at before, players that will push them that extra step come Final Four time.

Volleyball, one of the few Division II teams, is planning its baptism into Division I in 1986. The softball and baseball teams bring in the region's best prospects. Several incoming baseball players were drafted by the major leagues, but take UMass' scholarship offer.

The school has added such features as a new weight room and a strength and conditioning coach to go along with it. The recruiting of high school athletes becomes a priority and the funds are provided to accomplish that a young associate athletic director, experienced in rebuilding programs, is hired.

The rebuilding of UMass athletics did not come about without its victims. Seven sports were sliced to the club level and left by the wayside to fend on their own. Protests abound, but die quickly. The money saved is put into the other programs. A fund-raiser is appointed and begins a program designed to increase scholarship levels and enhance the overall program.

McInerney doesn't point to the cutting of the seven sports, but admits that it played a large role in creating the improved morale of his department.

"Things do seem to be looking up," he said. "I think the Cage is the best symbol of this. People look up at it and realize we are making the effort."

In any school, sports are important. There will always be those who will dismiss sporting events as trivial, but for hundreds of players and thousands of fans, sports are a way of life. Our society is such that a University, no matter what its academic standing, is such that a University, no matter what its academic standing, is known by its teams. UCLA means basketball, Nebraska and Penn State are football. No student, if given the choice, would want his school to be tabbed as a loser.

The efforts have been made by those in charge and the atmosphere in Boyden Building is refreshingly good. It is now up to the students, because a good program needs support.

The 6-2 junior has been versatile.

Bill Stewart, a sophomore, was a consistent number three runner for UMass, taking 19th in the Atlantic 10 championships. He set personal marks in the 800, 1,000 and 1,500.

Steve Tolley overcame lingering sickness last season to place second in the Eastern 1,000 and ran the IC4A 4 x 800 relay. He is the team's fastest runner over 1,500 meters (3:50.2) and will add considerable depth.

Sophomore Rick Dow was a steady top seven performer last season and has done 9:10 over two miles. Another sophomore, John Lorenzini, won the Eastern 10,000 and will contribute.

The schedule includes such powers as Boston College, Yale, Georgetown and Dartmouth. They also have the Easterns, the Atlantic 10's New England's and IC4A's.

Athletic department fills key positions

By PETER ABRAHAM
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts athletic department filled one key position and created another with two personnel moves made recently.

Dan Ghormley was appointed as associate athletic director, replacing Chet Gladchuck who accepted a similiar position at Syracuse University last winter.

Ghormley, 43, was athletic director at Illinois State University prior to taking the UMass offer. He has also worked as associate executive director of the Track and Field Association of the United States and assistant athletic director at the University of Hawaii. He is a 1966 graduate of Washington State.

The department also chose James Braun as director of athletic development. Braun, a graduate of Marquette University and St. Mary's College, assumed his duties last spring. At UMass, Braun will be responsible for developing a comprehensive giving program to be used by the department to upgrade scholarship levels and enhance the overall quality of the teams. He has served in a similiar capacity at Portland State, Arizona State and Washington State.

Assistant baseball coach Dave Littlefield has left UMass to take the full-time assistants job at Clemson University.

Littlefield, who had a graudate assistantship under head coach Dick Bergquist, concentrated on the pitching staff while with the Minutemen.

In other baseball news, senior catcher Todd Ezold was selected by the New York Yankees in the annual spring draft in June.

Ezold, a Pittsfield native, was selected as a pitcher/catcher and after signing was assigned to the Yankees New York Penn League farm team where he has been hitting over .330. The strong-armed catcher missed much of the 1985 season with a tendon injury but had the physical tools needed to catch the scout's eyes. He was one of the final cuts from the 1984 U.S. Olympic team.

Senior designated hitter Todd Comeau and shortstop Angelo Salustri were chosen as first team All-New England players. Comeau, who set a single season record with 62 hits and RBI (57) batted .380 for UMass. He also holds the career hit record with 181. Salustri batted a career-high .335 for the Minutemen.

The UMass men's lacrosse team had sophomore attackmen Tom Carmean chosen first team All-New England after a 28 goal-34 assist season. The second team was loaded with Gorillas as defensemen Tom Aldrich' and Mark Stratton were selected along with midfielder Karl Hatton and attackman Tom Lukacovic. Lukacovic, Hatton and goalie Gerry Moreau were chosen to play in the New England East-West senior all-star game at Trinity College last spring.

In final national statistics, Carmean finished sixth in the nation with an average of 3.1 assists-per-game and was seventh with 5.7 points-per-game.

Lack of insurance closes campus bars

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Because the University of Massachusetts currently has no alcohol liability insurance, the school will not serve alcohol on any of its campuses and will not allow any organizations to bring alcohol on campus.

After an unsuccessful search for a new, overall insurance policy, UMass settled on an initial $40,000 policy with its previous insurer Imperial Casualty and Indemnity of Omaha. However, the new policy doesn't cover alcohol related accidents, leaving UMass campuses dry, according to UMass treasurer Robert Brand.

To acquire alcohol liability insurance, UMass must wait to apply to a pool of private insurers set up be the state which begins operating in November, said 1st Deputy Insurance Commissioner Roger Singer.

In the meantime, the Campus Center, which sold close to $5,000,000 worth of alcohol yearly, will lose those sales, which are highest when UMass is in full session, according to Director of Auxilliary Services Ashoke Ganguli.

"How much business we're going to lose I don't know. Our conferences book two or three years in advance," he said. Some groups have already cancelled their conferences, he added.

The insurance pool, named the Joint Underwriters Association, will have the authority to write alcohol liability policies for public and private institutions and businesses, Singer said.

In discussing the aquisition of a liability Brand said, "We could rule ourselves out or the insurance premium could be prohibitively expensive. We have no idea on what criteria that premium would be based. The Amherst campus could be hit very hard with the premium, we don't know."

Although the association begins work on Nov. 1, the University may not see a proposed policy before the end of the year. "It's a good possibility" that UMass will not serve alcohol for the rest of the semester, Brand said.

The underwriters association will probably have a cost rating system based on the volume of sales, according to Singer. It also may include factors such as bartender training and demerits for liquor law violations, he said.

The Blue Wall cafeteria, which has not turned a profit recently, will probably house a juice bar and cafe although no final decisions have been made, said Ganguli.

"We're working with the (Campus Center) Board of Governors," he said, "hopefully, we'll serve non-alcoholic beer and drinks such as that. We have to roll with the punches," Alchohol may never again be served in the Blue Wall but Ganguli said, "We haven't made that decision yet, it's too early.

According to board member Laura member Laura Gottschalk, comedy night and other programming such as bands will continue at the Blue Wall. "There will be high class foods that are more expensive and not served at other places on campus," she said.

Griffith-Johnson dies after illness

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Thelma Griffith-Johnson, the first director of affirmative action on campus died in Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton last week after a long illness. She was 60.

A memorial service was held for Dr. Griffith-Johnson, who died Tuesday, at the Augustus Savage Gallery at the New Africa House on Saturday.

"As the first director of our Affirmative Action Program, (Thelma Griffith-Johnson) earned a reputation as a compassionate and thoughtful administrator," University of Massachusetts Provost Richard O'Brien said. "Her legacy will include a more humane environment in the workplace both here and in many other institutions. She helped numerous people and we will miss her."

Dr. Griffith-Johnson came to the University in June 1982 when the Affirmative Action Office was reorganized. The office is responsible for handling grievances from members of the University community who feel wthey have been discriminated against. It also oversees the school's equal opportunity in employment guidelines.

She was also a board member of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black and Minority Students, as well as a member of the Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst.

Born April 13, 1925 in New York City, she was the daughter of the late Edward B. and O. Naomi (Niles) Griffith. She was the widow of Jay Everett Johnson, who died in 1973.

Before coming to Amherst, Dr. Griffith Johnson was the regional director of the

Thelma Griffith-Johnson; at 60

Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission Office in Harrisburg and adjunct professor at Lincoln University in Oxford, Pa.

From 1971 to 1975, she was an assistant professor of urban teacher education at Livingston College of Rutgers University, where she also served as a consultant to the dean of academic affairs and the dean of student affairs.

Dr. Griffith-Johnson held a number of consulting positions. They included work with the New York State Deparment of Education, Hunter College's department of teacher education and the National Association for Child Development.

She was a conferee at the White House Conference on Education in 1962 and the White House Conference on Youth in 1964.

She received her doctor of education degree in 1981 and her master of education degree in 1973, both from the University of Massachusetts. She received her bachelor's

Salary study stirs campus

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

A new salary plan designed to create equitable and competitive pay scales for professional non-academic employees at the University of Massachusetts has given momentum to a two-year-old union drive on the Amherst campus.

Recommendations from an outside consultant's study commissioned by the University in 1983, were modified, and implemented this July resulting in specified salary ranges for various positions, altered job descriptions and adjusted salaries.

In a memorandum to all professional staff dated June 1983, Chancellor Joseph Duffey stated, "No one's salary will be reduced as a result of this program. Rather, this is a positive program designed to establish equitable salary ranges and proper relationships between positions."

However, the study done by Olney Associates Inc. of Boston, has some professionals signing union election cards. The employees effected are the only UMass workers not unionized. They are represented by the Professional Association of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

If the Office and Professional Employees Union can come up with election cards signed by half of the association members, it will file a petition with the state Labor Relations Commission to hold a union election.

"As of yet the Exective Board of the Professional Assocation is unable to support the Olney Study," stated an April 16 memorandum from the professional association. The Amherst campus administration approved the Olney recommendations six days later. An ad hoc committee with representatives from the professional association and the campus administration was set up in July to make recommendations concerning various factors in the Olney study. Once Olney came out and it didn't help, many professionals sought to unionize," said union organizer Steve Hunt.

degree from Philathea College in London, Ontario in 1958.

She is survived by a son, Kaaba of Harrisburg, Pa.; three daughters, Elissa and Laura Griffith-Johnson and Johnelle Childs, all of Amherst; a sister Marjorie Griffith of New York City; and two grandchildren.

Trustees give initial OK for fiscal 1986 campus budget

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees has temporarily approved the fiscal 1986 budget with a 10.2 percent increase for the Amherst campus for contractual pay hikes, improved equipment and increased operating costs.

Despite the increase, the budget is characterized as level funded because more than 90 percent of the increase will pay for payroll increases, according to Budget Associate Frederick Goodhue.

One million dollars was added to the budget for graduate stipend increase with another $1 million reallocated within the academic affairs budget for additional equipment, said Goodhue. More than $10 million was added to the budget for personnel costs, trustees spokeswoman Joyce Hosie said.

Other significant items in the budget are $1.3 million for high cost courses such as engineering courses where laboratory work is necesary, $4,140 for increased utility costs and $1,240 for an opportunity fund for the hiring and retention of minority and women faculty, Goodhue said.

Extra funding to allow the inflation was not added to the budget. "Naturally, the campus would have preferred that inflation was allowed for in the budget," he said. Because inflationary increases are different for the various University expenses, it is hard to tell what effect inflation will have on the Amherst Campus, Goodhue said.

According to Hosie, the budget for fiscal year 1986, which began in July, will be voted on by the full board at its Oct. 2 meeting.

UMass gets staff newspaper

Campus Chronicle will publish weekly

A new campus newspaper, published by the University Relations and Development Office, will be delivered weekly to all campus offices starting this semester.

The Campus Chronicle, an eight-page tabloid, will bring news and information to the University community, according to Chronicle Editor Michael Gery.

"You can expect to see major news of the campus, brief articles on individuals' accomplishments, a calendar of campus events and notices on policy announcements," Gery said.

"You have to have a newspaper for "the more than 5,000 employees on campus and "this is one way to do this and it can be fun at the same time," he said. "The Chronicle should be fun and it should be friendly.

"It will be a real newspaper. It will look and act like a real newspaper," Gery said. "It's not a fly-by-night operation. The administration is taking this very seriously. We're talking somewhere around $80,000 to start up the operation," Gery said. "About $12,000 will go towards furniture and the operating budget will be about $60,000 a year."

Vice-Chancellor for University Relations and Development Deirdre Ling will act as publisher of the state-funded Chronicle which will not solicit advertising, according to Gery.

Mandela's daughter becomes UMass student

Makaziwe Phumla Mandela

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Makazine Phumla Mandela, daughter of jailed South African dissident Nelson Mandela, has arrived at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst to begin her work as a graduate student, hoping to use her studies to "bring a better society" back home.

At a press conference last week, 31-year old Mandela said though she has no personal or ideological differences with her father, who has been imprisioned for 23 years by the South African government, she maintains her "own ideals and (her) own choice in life."

Her father, now imprisoned in Pollsmoor, a maximum security prison in Cape Town, is the leader of the banned African National Congress, an organization committed to ending the South African system of apartheid, which segregates and disallows freedoms to majority blacks in that country.

Mandela last saw her father on July 7 and reports "he hasn't lost his hope" and "he is prepared to spend the rest of his life in jail" if it will further the anti-apartheid cause.

Her step-mother, Winnie Mandela, who was banned as a person by the South African government in 1966, has been under restrictions since then and recently had her home burnt down amidst increasing violence in the white-ruled nation.

"People expect that being Nelson Mandela's duaghter, I should be political and militant," she said, stressing that she feels more comfortable talking about women's issues than she does discussing those directly related to politics.

Enrolled in a graduate program concentrating on sociology and women's studies, Mandela says she hopes to become a better researcher and writer which she said will "help improve the situation of women in our country, so they will be better prepared to face the future." She said she chose to study in the United States rather than South Africa because it "has a long history of the women's movement."

"Women have a low perception of themselves in the country. There are hardly any jobs to accomodate them, and they must rely on men for support," she said.

However, Mandela points out she has seen improvement in the quality of life and amount of freedom for women over the years and she is optimistic about her goals to "organize" and "create potential for feminism" in her country so that women may work for better economic conditions for themselves and join the fight to produce a more positive political condition for all South Africans.

Coming to the University as a Fulbright scholar. Mandela applied at the urging of Chancellor Joseph Duffey, after he learned her father had told a reporter of Makaziwe's desire to study abroad. Mandela said she chose the University "because UMass was the only university offering such a good program in women's studies."

In her three weeks in the United States, Mandela says she has had little time to study about American people but that her experience so far has been that not enough people are aware of what goes on in South Africa so as to make an accurate assessment of the situation. But adds, "What you see in American newspapers is what is going on in south Africa."

Mandela lived in the Transkei, an independent state in South Africa which is not under the "state of emergency" imposed on other areas of the nation. She worked as a social worker and lived with her husband, a teacher, and three children. She holds undergraduate degrees from South Africa's Fort Hare University and the University of Natal.

Trustees divest from South Africa

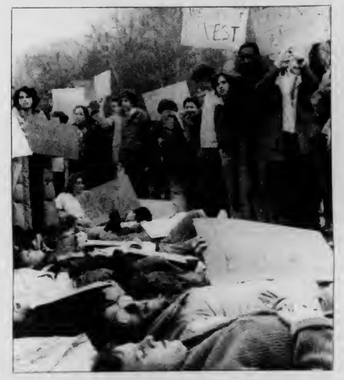
By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts became the 16th college in the country to sell all its stock holding with firms doing business in South Africa, when it did so July 25 without fanfare or ceremony.

The sale of nearly 10 percent of the University's total stock portfolio occurred 11 days before the August 5 deadline voted on by the University's trustees.

The University followed its customary practice of not announcing its stock holding sales, even after widespread campus debate on the issue, two student sit-ins and 33 arrests this spring.

Student Government Association Co-President Stacy Roth said the sale "was a very good first step," but added that the University "can act as a catalyst for other university administrations." Roth expressed disappointment over the quiet announcement of the sale.



The July 25 sale consisteed of $370,064 of the University's total portfolio which has a market value of $4 million.

UMass received $97,037 for 1,400 shares in Banker's Trust New York Corp., a lending institution; $60,900 for 1,200 shares in J.P. Morgan and Co., another lending institution; $40,753 for 1,575 shares in industrial equipment manufacturer Foxboro Co., and $174,374 for 3,000 shares in home products maker Proctor & Gamble.

A major force behind the sale resulted from the findings of the Commission on South African Investments of the University of Massachusetts, a 10-member group of students, faculty and administrators formed in repsonse to student demands during a four-day sit-in at Whitmore in April. Its report, issued April 28, recommended that the University sell its holdings in the above-mentioned firms.

Although UMass is the 16th school to totally divest, it was one of the first to partially divest in 1977, according to Joshua F. Nessen, a spokesman for the American Committee on Africa in New York, a private group which campaigns for divestment.

Despite the divestiture, eight of the 32 people arrested on trespassing charges at a May 1 sit-in are refusing to pay court costs in exchange for dropping the charges. They want to use their trials Sept. 13 in Hampshire District Court to bring attention to ending all economic ties with South Africa.

Amherst College students stage divestment protest. As violence increased in South Africa, students around the country protested financial invovement in that country.

$5m computer grant largest ever at UM

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The largest single grant in University of Massachusetts history, $4.7 million from the National Science Foundation, has been awarded to the Department of Computer and Information Science.

The grant will more than double funding to the department which is already considered one of the nation's top centers for computer research.

The award, will be used for research in cooperative distributed problem solving and will support research in artificial intelligence and distributed and parallel processing.

The grant, to be supplemented by more than $1 million from the University, will provide for the purchase of new equipment — a network of LISP machines and a large scale multi-processor — maintenance of that equipment, support staff to run the equipement and staff to help build the software base necessary for effective research, said Professor Victor Lesser, the principal investigator for the grant.

"The grant is national recognition of the quality of the deparmtent," said Lesser.

The five-year grant went into effect July 1, and this type of grant "assures the top quality of the department," he said.

Lesser and department chairman Edward M. Riseman will direct a substantial part of the grant to "artificial intelligence" research, the science of programming computers to solve problems the way people do.

In addition, Associate Professor Krithi Ramamritham will work with "distribued and parallel processing," the art of programming computers to work together rather than constructing single, large computers.

Cooperation between the artifical intelligence and the distributed and parallel processing research is important, according to Lesser.

"This grant will try to get these groups together and provide a good vehicle for distributed and parallel processing people to evaluate their (artifical intelligence) ideas," he said.

The grant, awarded as part of the National Science Foundation's Coordinated Experimental Research Program, was started five years ago to help researchers break new ground in computer science. The award is given to no more than four schools each year.

Fire delays computer start; $10,000 needed for repairs

The UMass CYBER computer system may be inaccessible to some students until tomorrow after a basement fire last week in the University Computing Center in the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

Immediate damage resulting from the fire, which was confined to the system's electrical distribution panel, is being repaired at an estimated cost of about $10,000 Chuck Lyman, assistant director of the center, said.

"The fire just caught us at the wrong time," he said.

The cause of the fire, which was reported to the Amherst Fire Department, remains undetermined.

Permanent damage to the system's hardware was unknown as of publication, but problems resulting from the shutdown may occur, Lyman said.

"Whenever you take a computer of this size down, there are hardware parts that are affected by the sudden shutdown which may cause problems in the future," Lyman said.

The fall housing crunch: dorms overflow

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

An estimated 300 students are temporarily without rooms in residence halls due to the annual fall semester housing shortage, said a University of Massachusetts housing official.

Gerald Quarles, housing assignment coordinator, said 165 beds have been set up in temporary rooms, or "swing spaces," and 72 beds in the Campus Center Hotel have been reserved for students without housing assignments.

The on-campus housing office expects to fill empty spaces vacated by students who do not show up or who choose to live off-campus during the first few weeks of the semester, Quarles said.

"There is always a certain number of no-shows but the problem is to figure out how many there will be," he said.

An increase in the expected number of first year students also added to the housing shortage. Approximately 400 extra first-year students had to be accomodated by the housing office, which did not expect to house more than 4,000 freshmen this semester.

Solving the housing crunch is like "crystal ball gazing," said Quarles, "We really can't say what the pattern is going to be this year.

"Every year about 150-200 juniors and seniors eventually choose other options and wind up living elsewhere," he said.

Returning students will most likely be assigned swing spaces because priority is given to new students. Students who received late acceptance notices are not guaranteed housing, however, and are given the option to enter the University in the spring when there is more housing available, he said.

"In the spring there are hundreds of vacancies because people graduate or go off campus," he said. Because the housing shortage only happens in the fall, housing officials do not feel the need to build more residence halls on campus. "It's hard to make an argument for more housing for a one semester problem," said Quarles.

The current University housing policy permits only juniors and seniors to live off-campus. Quarles said recommendations have been made for the past two years to allow sophomores to live off campus. But University officials have rejected the proposal because they need students to fill up the residence halls to keep costs down.

"If we don't (fill up the residence halls), the rates would go up. This way we can spread the cost and keep prices down," said Quarles.

Situation similar off campus

Students seeking off-campus housing are racing to secure the several housing options still open to them.

"There's been a 1 percent vacancy rate for over a decade. Needless to say, it's not going to get any easier," said Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office.

An average of 200 people come in the office to pour over the listings every day, said Levenson. Located upstairs in the Student Union, the office lists the available housing options and offers assistance to renters who have to make quick choices in this scarcity situation, she said.

"Most places that are left aren't close to campus and if they are, they're expensive," said Levenson.

More housing will probably open up after summer tenants inform their landlords whether or not they will stay for the semester.

Single rooms in family homes and work in exchange for rooms are several living arrangements that students can consider in addtion to traditional off-campus housing.

"Because housing is scarce, people have to be creative with their options," said Levenson.

"The scarcity also makes tenants captive consumers," she said. it's unusual for students to pay less than $225 a month plus utilities for housing within a 50 mile radius.

The Off-Campus Housing Office is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday and will be open from noon to 5 p.m. on Saturdays until Oct. 5.

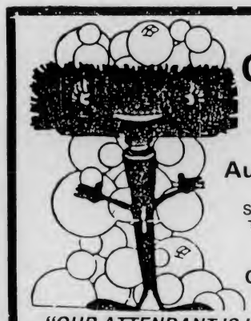
★ Olney

In evaluating positions to set salary levels, Olney Associates used a sexist bias, Hunt said, because their rating system over-values physical activities which are traditionally associated with men's jobs.



In Addition, he said, "It's been a big secret. Every other consulting company tells you why you are at a certain salary level. Even if you could find out, you can't appeal, there's no appeal procedure for it."

Professional's interaction with other employees was accounted for in the study, while interaction with students was not, thus discriminating against employees who primarily work with student organizations, Hunt said.

Many of those professionals who are paid out of the Student Activities Trust Fund, had their job descriptions changed. "They no longer report to students but to the administration," Hunt said. The trust fund is made up of student's activities fees.

Transition comes to the School of Management

Spiro promoted to acting dean

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

While the search for a dean for the School of Management has yet to yield a final candidate, associate dean George Spiro has been named acting dean for the coming year.

Spiro, 37, has served as associate dean since 1976. His appointment, announced in July by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, became effective late last month as Dean Harry Allan stepped down to return to teaching. Allan had been dean since 1978.

Spiro said he intends "to pursue aggressively the basic mission of the School of Management, (which is) to serve the Commonwealth and the nation and their management communities in the private, public and non-profit sectors by providing highly educated managerial talent and advancing the state of knowledge."

Spiro has a bachelor's of science degree in personnel and industrial relations and a law degree from Syracuse University, and a masters degree from UMass. He has published extensively in various law journals and has been co-author of books such as The Dynamics of Law and Business Law. He is a past president of the North Atlantic Regional Business Law Association.

While Spiro's appointment will last a year, Sidney Surfin, vice-chairman of the dean search committee, said he hopes the group will have a final candidate by November. The committee is composed of 12 people, including two students.

Acting SOM Dean George Spiro.

The search, which began in January, drew 60 to 70 applicants, of whom between eight and 10 were qualified, Sufrin said. The committee now has three or four final candidates, one of whom they will recommend to Chancellor Duffey.

Former Dean Allan, who is not on the search committee, said last week that the new dean could be of a business or academic background, as there is no single profile of what makes a good dean.

"The important part is that the school is at a position in its development that it should be attractive to good people, " he said.

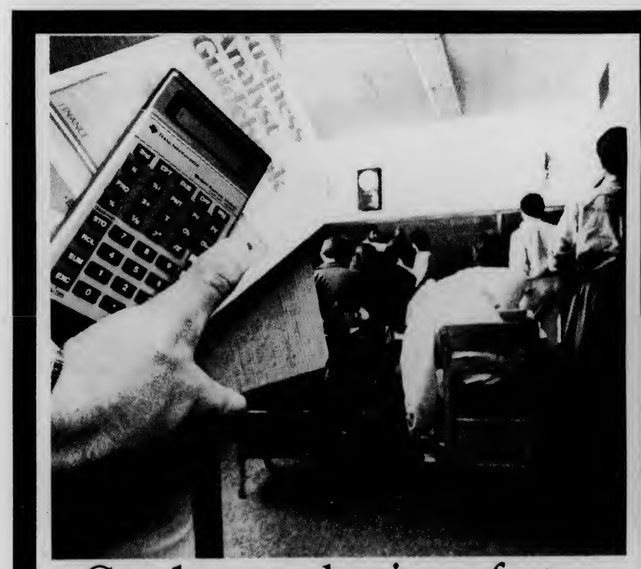
Dean Allan to return to faculty after 15 years as administrator

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

He's been an administrator for 15 years — a dean at Syracuse University for six, provost at Northeastern for two, then dean of the School of Management at the University of Massachusetts since 1978. Now, he says, it's time to return to teaching.



Harry Allan, 57, is sitting in his new office, SOM 201A. He looks relaxed, some reading material out, as he takes a few minutes to speak to a visitor. He describes the way he feels about his latest career move in one word — "terrific" — and adds that he could jump right into it now. But first he'll spend the fall semester reading and doing research — "catching up in my discipline," he calls it — to brash up on what his administrative duties did not formerly allow time for.

Allan first came to UMass in 1965 as an associate professor business, working as a full professor from 1967 until becoming dean of the School of Management at Syracuse in 1970. He originally came here "because I thought then, and I still think, UMass was a very exciting developing university," he says. "I wanted to (do) my little part in the development of the school and the University, knowing when I came it was a school that was doing well and getting better."

Former Dean Harry Allan.

The school has grown in its quality of faculty, students and business and alumni ties under Allan's tenure, but not in size; while demand for admission to the school and its courses has increased, the administration decided to cap its size because

New campus alcohol policy

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Regulations for drinking in residence halls have been revised to accomodate the small number of University of Massachusetts students who are now of legal drinking age.

Even though more than 80 percent of the University students are not 21 years old, the new policy still allows those students of age to drink in the residence halls. However, they are only allowed to drink in their rooms and not in corridors, lounges, kitchens and other common areas, which are defined as "public space."

In addition, students of legal drinking age are allowed to entertain no more than 15 people in their room. Parties with more than 15 people must be registered with area coordinator offices. Until each residential area elects its student house council officers, students will not be able to have registered parties in the Southwest residence halls, Russell Keck, Southwest Area Coordinator, said.

"We can't approve any parties until each area establishes their party policies," Keck said.

However, Sylvan, Northeast, Orchard Hill and Central residential areas will be allowed to register alcohol-related events while the new party policy is being drafted, said Susan Allen, program coordinator.

The current party policy is different for the east and west sides of campus because of the differences in building structure and the different ages of students living in the residential areas. Allen said the policy will be re-written to be consistent throughout all the residential areas.

Drinking will be allowed in public spaces if the event is registered with the residence hall staff, Allen added.

Residence hall staff said they are not expecting too many problems with under-aged students drinking in the residence halls. "We're not anticipating a lot of problems. Our goal is to educate students about the policy," said Carol Wallace, Orchard Hill/Central area coordinator.

"We want everyone to know what's expected of them," Keck said, "and we're going to emphasize alternatives to drinking."

"We want to teach life skills and what they can do with their leisure time besides sit in their rooms and bend their elbows," said Keck.

The residential alcohol policy does not clearly state how the policy will be enforced and does not define now resident assistants (RA's) will deal with violators of the policy.

The RA's goal is not to go around and figure out "how we can bust so and so," said Keck, "but if there is a room full of people calling attention to themselves and they're all freshmen, then judicial references will have to be made."

"We have to remind students that they are not protected from being arrested. The residence hall is not a sanctuary," said Charles Durant, assistant director of Housing Services.

First year students and those returning to residence halls can expect their RA's to remind them of the new alcohol policy at floor meetings and as alcohol related problems occur.

"The RAs are going to use their own discretion. We don't want to force people to be closet drinkers," Durant said.

The Tucker Taft building in Amherst center has opened its doors to the public.

New shops open in Tucker Taft

A new professional building, developed by D'Angelo, Inc., at a cost estimated over $1 million, has opened for business in Amherst center and includes three retail specialty shops.

Located on North Pleasant Street beside the Amherst Fire Department station house, the Tucker Taft building took approximately one year to build from start to finish. The land was bought by the D'Angelo restaurant chain for $465,000 July, 1984, according to Amherst Assessor Office documents, and the estimated cost of the new building was $830,000 as of July 1984.

The total cost market value of the property was $175,000 in fiscal year 1984 and rose to $370,600 in 1985.

The structure contains three retail stores serving the Amherst and surrounding areas. One store, Trader Fred's, deals in discount brand name clothing, and the other two, D'Angelo's Sandwich and Steve's Ice Cream, cater to culinary tastes.

The four-story, red-brick building looms where once a service station and garage stood. The new addition to the Amherst skyline, according to George LaBonte, Amherst resident and building employee, is equipped with elevators and is accessible to handicapped people.

Two local firms, Kathy Stefan Real Estate and Gillen Partnership, Inc., architects, were involved in making the building a reality.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Student Invovement

Welcome and welcome back.

As some of you may know, the Collegian is a financially-independent student newspaper distributed throughout the five college community. It is also the largest indepedent college daily newspaper in New England, and, unlike many of its counterparts, the Collegian is entirely student run.

In addition to the Collegian, opportunities abound for student involvement in the college community. Besides classes and homework, the student who supplements his/her studies without her activities stands to gain much more from this period of education.

The Collegian is here for you. Even if you don't want to come down and work in the news, business, or production departments of our operation, we encourage calls for events and other newsworthy items.

Likewise, we encourage student invovement in the countless aspects of University and community life. Organizations on and off campus give participants a chance to branch out and learn something new, and gain valuable experience for life.

Often times, the active student is the active citizen. If you do choose to indulge in the Collegian, please contact the desks of the editors; news, photography, arts, editorial/opinion, women's issues, black affairs, graphics, and sports.

The Collegian is an equal opportunity publication, open to the ideas and suggestions of the diverse population in this area. We stress our approachability, despite the chaotic nature of the news business.

So, as you settle in after what we trust was a productive and enjoyable summer, consider the Collegian, or any of the other student groups that abound, as part of your daily routine.

Unsigned editorioal reflect the majority opionion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

Advice for first year students:

What every first year student should know:

— No matter what anyone tells you, the University computer is the ultimate authority. That is, you don't have your housing, grades, courses, credits, waivers, or your bills paid unless the computer says so.

—Despite the fact you may not like the food served at the Dining Commons, you will gain weight when you eat there.

—You will have your false ID taken away from you at some of the bars in town. However, this will not prevent anyone from trying to use fake identification.

LARRY BOUCHIE

—The Library Tower does not periodically spit out full bricks onto pedestrians below, only chips within the fenced in area. Also, it is no longer the tallest library in the world, as someone added a few more floors to their library in the Guiness Book of World Records.

—Recent studies show there is little correlation between the number of hours spent studying and individual grades received. Which means you can now blow off your studying in pursuit of other activities and no longer feel as guilty.

—The campus pond is not fit for swimming, unless you're a duck, and even then it's suspect.

—Legend has it that the statue of Metawampe behind the Student Union Building will drop his spear should any student ever graduate with their virginity. This has yet to happen.

—You can get out of any academic commitment, with a little creativity.

—Your car will be towed whenever it is parked in a no parking zone, usually when you need your car the most.

—the best entertainment in town is in the Campus Center Concourse watching the people go by.

—The best places to go cruising are the Dining Commons and the Hatch, so leave you car at home where it won't get towed.

—Amherst is the most socially aware city in the world, or tries to be.

—Get good grades this semester, because you won't when spring hits campus.

—Southwest Residential Area is the world's largest playground.

—The more you need something the longer the line you will have to wait in.

—The more you need money, the less likely you will be able to cash a check anywhere, no matter how long the line you've been standing in.

—Just because a bathroom is marked men, women, or coed, doesn't mean it is. Check first, or your parents may be very suprised when they go to use one.

—The business and engineering schools are not impossible to get into, but you'll have to be persistent and creative.

—Attendance is mandatory only in those classes which you will perpetually sleep through.

—Any professor can be talked into holding class outdoors or postpoining an assignment due date. Try it, you'll be surprised.

—Regardless of what they say, no professor is the ultimate authority in their field, but it doesn't hurt to make them think you believe them.

—If you must nap during class, proceed to the back of the lecture hall where you will not be disturbed by practical jokers of incensed professors.

—Each time you put your laundry through the dryer, you will lose one sock, just as you do at home.

—The dogs who roam the campus freely are generally harmless and do have owners, somewhere.

—It is harder to fill out the necessary forms for on campus employment than actually working.

Larry Bouchie is the Editorial Editor.

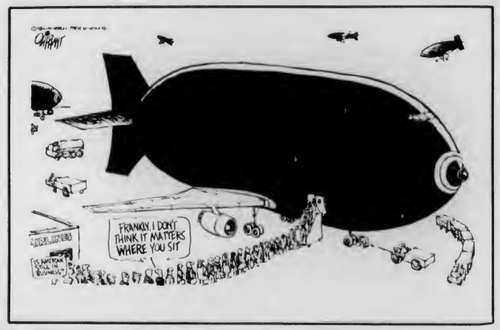
SGA works for students

Welcome to campus everyone! We wanted to take the opportunity to re-introduce or introduce (as the case may be) ourselves to you. We are Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess, your new Student Government Association co-presidents.

As the new academic year begins, it is the perfect time for us to explain who we are, why we are here, and to ask for your input and assistance. You will hear from us regularly throughout the semester, so that everyone is kept up to date on the hot issues.

Basically, the SGA President's Office divides into two areas of interest. Stacy is the campus president and she is responsible for representing the undergraduate student body to the University administration, faculty, and staff. Stacy works on various issues which affect the quality of life for the students at the University.

Dani holds the office of student trustee. He is a voting member of the University Board of Trustees and spends a significant amount of his time in Boston attending meetings and lobbying. Dani works to safeguard student rights and to provide for student needs, while working with the University's administration in Boston.

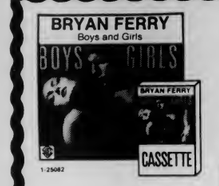


When they both work together, both of these officers can have a significant impact on the policies of the campus community. As we have stated before, it is important that we know what issues are important to you and that you understand our commitment toward letting students set our agenda.

In the coming semester, we will face many intense issues. Whether it be the Residential Alcohol Policy, the new graduation ceremony format, financial aid, or more study space on campus, the President's Office is always ready and willing to talk with you about your needs and opinions.

Yet, the only way we can make it all worthwhile is with your help. If you have a problem or want to work towards solving one, Student Union Building, Amherst, Ma., 545-0341.

A university like UMass cannot function without students. Indeed, every day its major life and pulse are entered around the student body. Take the initiative. Get involved. Together we can make a difference.



Stacy Roth, Campus President
Dani Burgess, Student Trustee

The Collegian welcomes letters, column, and cartoon submissions. Submissions should be mailed to the Editorial Editor at the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003, or they can be dropped off at the Collegian classified ad counter in the basement of the Campus Center. Due to the volume of mail received, individual replies cannot be made.

All letters submitted for publication must be signed and include the author's address and telephone number, which will not be published. Letters must be typewritten and double spaced at 67 characters per line. Column submissions should be between 40 and 60 lines. All submissions are subject to editing for clarity and length. —Editor.

Local folk attend conference

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

This summer six members of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst community attended the Non-Governmental Organization's Decade for Women Conference in Nairobi, Kenya.

The non-governmental conference is one for local and regional groups not affiliated with any government. It was seperate though overlappin in time with the United Nations Governmental Conference for Women, also taking place in Kenya.

The theme of the conference was "Equality, Development and Peace," which according to the U.N. International Women's Committee, "reflects the complexity of the changes needed before women can take their rightful place in the world beside men."

"Roberta Uno-Thelwell, director of UMass Third World Theater, said that rather than bringing back one thing from the eight days she spent in Africa, she returned instead with a "renewed faith in the women's movement."

"I came back here with the sense that the women's movement is an ongoing process, and that women from all nations will continue to communicate and work together," she said.

Uno-Thelwell said she was given the "rare opportunity" to learn about Third-World women and their unique problems first-hand, gaining what she said was a "different perspective on women's global issues."

"We expect our world, that is the Western World, to be the authoritive word on all political subjects. But here (at the conference), you were forced to look at things in an international settings," she said.

She said women of the Third World were "well aware" of their own problems. "These women urged enlightenment to occur within their own cultures rather than people from the West going in and deciding what their problems are."

Uno-Thelwell described women's issues as being "inseperable" from politics, and called a US governmental delegation order to seperate the two, "absurd."

"For example," she noted, "you can't address apartheid without confronting a women's role in that society on those issues directly related to women as a whole, because if a (country) doesn't have basic human rights, you can't have progress and you can't be free to create."

Many members of the non-governmental organization were given accomodations almost 50 miles from where the conference was being held, where transportation was "inconvenient" which Uno-Thelmell said, made it "difficult but not impossible to participate."

Also attending the conference was the director of the Office of Third World Affairs, Sherwood Thompson, who said a male delegate at women's conference provided him with a unique opportunity to observe talented and concerned activist women organize and promote their issues in an effective manner."

Funds for the trip came from the Hamlia Fund administered by the Dean of Students Office, Nummo News and several other student organizations.

"if we increased the size of the SOM to meet all of that demand, it would throw the balance (of the University off," he explains.

Enrollment now stands at about 2000 undergraduates, 300 masters degree students — 100 of them off campus in Holyoke — and 55 doctoral candidates.

Allan is also proud of the Small Business Develpment Center, a consulting and training service to businesses throughout the state, which was created ion 1980 and is headquartered at UMass. It now services about 3000 business a year and is "thriving," Allan says.

His experiences as a dean, Allan says, will enhance his teaching "quite a bit" when he resumes, for one, teaching business law in the spring.

"A dean is a manager," he says. "Not just the school (of management), but the whole university is in many ways like a large business. I know more about the managing of a complex organization."

Allan says he has no further aspirations as an administrator and feels confident that his decision to move back to students is the right one,

"I wouldn't change anything (about the) past seven years — the university is a good place for me and it still is," he says. "I'll be a good teacher and do research as the faculty does."

About one-quarter of the estimated 440 University of Massachusetts students waiting for on-campus housing can begin moving into residence hall spaces today which are considered vacant because the students assigned to them did not report by 12 p.m. yesterday.

Among the students receiving housing assignments today will be 17 first-year students and 83 sophomores, who will be notified when they report to the housing office, Joe Zannini, executive director of housing said.

The annual fall semester housing shortage is more extreme this year due to a greater number of returning students, a freshman class which is larger than last year, and the increased popularity of on-campus housing, Zannini said.

There are still many accomodations open in the local area, which some students don't want because they are not close enough to campus," Zannini said.

About 240 students waiting for on-campus housing have been temporarily accomodated in the Campus Center Hotel and other "swing spaces" on campus, such as dormitory lounges, while an estimated 200 more housing candidates are staying off-campus.

Students didn't recieve housing assignments because of late acceptance or late payment of University bills, Zannini said, but temporary spaces are considered part of the normal tuition bill.

"It's uncomfortable," Scott Powers, a first-year student said from the Campus Center Hotel which he is sharing

Air Force eyes new GWEN site

May drop Amherst proposition

By ROB SKELTON
Collegian Staff

Opposition by Amherst residents may have caused the Air Force to look for another site for its Ground Wave Emergency Network Tower (GWEN).

The post-nuclear attack communications facility, which was also rejected by residents of Hawley, may be located in Barre, on land owned by the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Air Force has filed an application with the corps to build a broadcast complex on land near the Barre Falls Dam in Worcester county, according to the Boston Globe.

The proposed 300-foot tower, which is one in a national network that would enable contact between political and military leaders in the event of a nuclear attack, was proposed by the Air Force for a farm in Amherst.

The Stanley Street site was opposed by residents, who maintained that the tower would encourage the belief that a nucelar war could be won.

The Amherst Town Meeting and Board of Selectmen voted against the plan last spring, although national security considerations could override the zoning laws and feelings of townspeople.

If a GWEN tower is built in Barre, there would be no need for another in Amherst, according to Air Force spokesman John O'Brien.

"To put it simply, there is a tower needed. If we build on B, then we wouldn't need A. We haven't ruled out Amherst as a site for GWEN however," he said.

Personnel changes occur at Whitmore

Economic specialist enlisted

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

James Leheny has been promoted to associate chancellor at the University of Massachusetts, from his position as associate to the chancellor, and Jaymie Chernoff has been named to replace Leheny in his old position this summer.

While serving as the chancellor's chief of staff, Leheny will also be the campus liaison to the President's Office and the board of trustees in Boston. Leheny had been an associate to the chancellor for the past two years, and had worked on the campus long-range plan, budget requests, and assisting Chancellor Joseph Duffey in his duties as co-chair of the Governor's Commission on Mature Industries.

Jaymie Chernoff, previously an economic development specialist in the continuing education program, has been named an associate to the chancellor.

Since 1966, Leheny has been an English professor, teaching undergraduate courses in British and Irish literature and expository writing. Leheny has also published a scholarly edition of Joseph Addison's political essays and an anthology on politics and arts for "Eighteenth Century Life."

Leheny received his masters and doctorate degrees from Washington University and his bachelor's degree from the University of Connecticut. From 1964 to 1966, he studied at Oxford and was research assistant to the Secretary General of the Council of Europe.

Chernoff, an economic development specialist in the University's continuing education program since 1981, said last week that she expects to work primarily on economic and development projects of the Chancellor's Office.

"I have several projects that reflect the Chancellor's interest in economic development, both internationally and nationally," she said, "including a working conference of 30 to 40 executive officers, economic columnists, and presidents of other educational institutions in the New England area."

That conference, to be held here in October, will focus on the issue of American competition in the international market and what the role of New England businesses and educational institutions will be, Chernoff said.

"The issue of competition is critical," she said, "and higher education plays an important role in providing human resources."

Chernoff received her bachelor's degree from Northwestern University and her master's degree in regional planning from UMass, Amherst.

Evaluation books arrive tomorrow

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The 8 a.m. class worth waking up for, and the one with the professor that puts insomniacs to sleep can both be found in the Course and Teacher Evaluation guide (C.' TE) which comes out tomorrow.

The CATE book is a yearly guide written from students'opinions of courses and teachers they have taken.

"It's the only channel for students to hear from other students, (this is) something you can't get from the catalogue," said Gayle Wintjen, chairwoman for Academic Affairs of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

"The evaluations written are not statistically significant, but the book is pretty accurate by the evaluations submitted," Wintjen said. She said each class evaluation is carefully weighed before it is printed in the guide.

The major problem the CATE guide has is the lack of returns they receive from the students, said Wintjen. Six percent of all students respond to their questionnaires.

"Every year we are trying to improve. We are sending out more questionnaires and setting up a table in the Campus Center Concourse helped," Wintjen said. "We are thinking of doing personal interviews," she said.

The CATE guide is given a budget of "approximately $10,500 for printing," said Wintjen. More funds are supplied for sending out the questionnaires and printing envelopes.

The CATE staff has four full-time employees during the summer when the book is put together. The CATE guide staff works under the Academic Affairs of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The 12th edition of the CATE books will be distributed tomorrow in the Campus Center Concourse. Because of the exorbitant printing costs, 9,000 will be available this year.

Massachusetts opts for safe slogan

BOSTON (AP) — State officials continue to look for new ways to remind Massachusetts motorists to use their automobile seat belts, But they showed great restraint themselves in rejecting the slogan, "I Got It On."

That suggestive slogan was one of several discussed for a Labor Day Weekend campaign designed to encourage seat belt use, said Barbara Kopans, a spokesman for the Executive Office of Public Safety.

Instead, state officials emblazoned the phrase "It's the hip thing" on hundreds of T-shirts distributed to motorists.

"I don't find it embarassing," Kopans said yesterday. "It was just one of several ideas we came up with and we decided to use the other one. It was safer - and we want people to be safe in their cars."

UMass gets computing coordinator

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Joining the ranks of homeless students, the University's new associate vice-chancellor of computing and information systems, Douglas E. Abbott, is living at the present, out of a suitcase.

Abbott, who began his new job yesterday, is living in a motel, awaiting completion of his new Amherst home. The former vice-provost of computing at Lehigh University, Abbott will serve as the coordinator for computer-related activities. He will also be responsible for developing a campus-wide micro-computer systems.

"I'm excited about being here," he said in an interview yesterday. "UMass provides an excellent opportunity to develop a coordinated computer plan."

At Legigh, Abbott engineered a plan for campus-wide computing. All faculty members were provided with a micro-computer, and a purchase plan was created for students. Abbott said he would like to develop a similar plan for UMass.

"In most respects UMass is at the position Lehigh was in three years ago," Abbott said, "but the upper administration is committed to improving the system."

"The excitement the project has generated really makes it fun to work on," he said.

Abbott said he is examining the entire computing system to determine what can be improved.

He is presently working on a new telephone system which would provide a data service over the phone, including access to the library card catalogue and to the University's computer, CYBER.

"The process is well underway," Abbott said, "we could be looking at system selection by next spring."

"Many universities talk about developing such a program, but UMass is working on it," Abbott said. "It's what we need to be a first-rate academic institution."

Before his appointment at Legigh, Abbott was a professor of mechanical engineering at Purdue University. He received his undergraduate, master's and doctoral degrees from Stanford University

FYI:

New tailgating rules

Regulations for tailgate parties at football games have been released for the 1985-86 year.

— Time limits: Tailgate parties may be held from 11 a.m. until the beginning of the game and for one hour after the end of the game.

— Location: The grassy area south of the football stadium will be available for parking and parties. The gate on the south end has been expanded to accommodate more people and to facilitate access to the stadikum. The parking lot north of the stadium will be reserved for season ticket holders, handicapped persons and special guests of the University.

— Alcohol: Kegs and other large volume containers are prohibited at tailgate parties.

Financial aid awards checks will be available at the Bursar's Office in Whitmore Administration Building on the following schedule:

Sept. 9: A-L only
Sept. 10: M-Z only

The office hours for check distribution are 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and current student IDs are required. Check distribution will also be available after Sept. 10.

Selectman Richard Minear said, "I think it is off the list, and I'm happy for Amherst."

"There were a good many objections from townspeople, about the site, and there was a lot of pressure to put it somewhere else. Locating it elsewhere doesn't make me much happier. It seems to me that the system as a whole doesn't make sense," Minear said.

Chairwoman of the Amherst Board of Selectman Barbara Griffiths said "We did not want this happening in Amherst. There were a variety of reasons for not wanting it, but now those who want to work on the broader issue can do that in a different arena. I breathe a sigh of relief for Amherst."

The GWEN facility is designed to withstand electromagnetic pulse, which results when nuclear weapons are detonated and which knocks out normal radio communications.

Opponents of the plan formed a "No GWEN Alliance" to counter the Air Force's intentions. Members from Amherst and surrounding towne are fighting GWEN because it was part of the Pentagon's preparation for fighting a nuclear war, according to alliance member Nancy Foster.

The Hampshire County Commission held a well-attended public hearing in February, which ended in a split vote and a compromise letter to state and federal officials urging them to review the Air Force plan critically.

Faculty Senate considers revised grievance policy

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

A grievance policy which provides a set procedure for students to resolve their academic conflicts with professors has been in the works for seven years and will be presented to the Faculty Senate for approval this month.

The University has set procedures for sexual and racial harassment but has been operating without a standard undergraduate academic grievance policy. Instead, each school within the University has its own informal rules which students can follow, said Gayle Wintjen, chairwomen of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Government Association.

"There's a void we're trying to fill," said Wintjen. "Each college (at UMass) has a different way of handling grievances. Some don't even have one," she said.

Most students who run into academic problems with their professor are encouraged to resolve their disputes with either their instructor or department head, said Ombudsman Howard Gadlin.

The proposed grievance policy will make a formal hearing board available for students and faculty who cannot settle their problems through informal means, said Wintjen. She said the policy will also provide students with a formal means of recourse to solve their problems.

"A grievance policy is not meant to solve differences in academic judgement," Gadlin said. Students who disagree with a grade they received do not have grounds for complaint, but if a professor unfairly singles out students to assign more difficult work, then they can resolve their grievances through the proposed policy, he said.

The Academic Affairs Committee has been working on the proposed policy, he said.

Gadlin said previous academic disputes settled through the ombudsman office have involved professors who have scheduled surprise exams or who have significantly changed course requirements during the semester.

The Academic Affairs Committee has been working on the proposed policy with the Faculty Senate's Academic Matters Council and the subcommittee on policy, Wintjen said. Subcommittee member Larry Benedict said the proposal is almost ready to be voted on by the council this month.

Benedict said work on the policy has been stalled for several years becuase of change in student and faculty leadership involved in policy-making. He said the committees started with an original draft but changed it after reading a model policy from another school. The proposed draft, "is an amalgamation of both and reflects our own circumstances at the school," he said.

Texas company gets phone book contract

By MAT ATKINS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student telephone directories will not cost the school money and will be available in early October.

Last semester, phone books were not published because of a complication at Turley Publications Inc., the company contracted to publish the books. Associate Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks said the directories were not printed "because of factors beyond our control."

The Directory Company of Lubbock, Texas was awarded the contract to publish the fall 1985 and spring 1986 phone books. According to the contract, the books must be delivered three weeks after the list of names and phone numbers are delivered. The University plans to supply the informatin Sept. 13, Brooks said.

The Directory Company will publish the phone books at no cost to the University. The next closest bidder would have charged the University $17,000. "No cost to the University is my favorite bid," Brooks said.

In the past, one company was contracted to solicit the advertising for the phone books. This company then subcontracted with another firm to print the books. The Directory Company will be responsible for all phases of publication of this year's phone books. "They are in the business, and the sole business of making telephone directories," Brooks said. This year's phone books will be of better quality than those of previous semesters.

The difficulty in getting the directories out early is in collecting and processing the addresses of students living off-campus. "The problem is, and has always been, to get the directory out expeditiously while still accomodating the total student body," Brooks said. Any student living off-campus who has recently moved must submit a change of address form to the registrars office by Sept. 6 in order to have their correct address and phone number appear in this semester's directory.

with two others, "it's all because I got an honors scholarship and the papers didn't come through on time."

Students who do not have housing because of late acceptance are not guaranteed housing, but are urged to attend the University next semester when some students graduate or move off-campus.

New gonorrhea strain poses threat

BOSTON (AP) — The appearance in the United States of a penicillin-resistent form of gonorrhea could pose "a major health problem" unless measures are adopted to control this form of venereal disease, health experts warn.

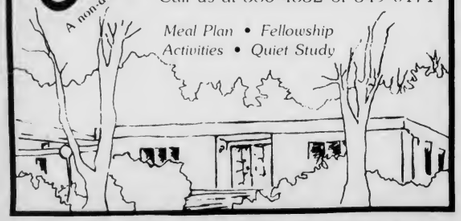
Penicillin is the standard drug used to treat gonorrhea. A strain of the bacteria N. gonorrhea that caused an outbreak in North Carolina two years ago is not killed by this antibiotic. However, it can be controlled with other drugs.

Doctors recorded 199 cases of the penicillin-resistant gonorrhea in Durham in 1983. Another 31 cases occurred last year. Now, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control report that this strain has turned up in several other states.

Until recently, this bacteria was common in the Far East but not in the United States.

Other penicillin-resistant strains have been seen in the United States, but they outwit the drug by producing an enzyme known as penicillinase. The new strain does not make this chemical. Instead, it developed its penicillin resistance through ag genetic mutation.

"Unless surveillance and control measures are adopted," the doctors wrote, "chromosomally mediated resistant N. gonorrhea may become a major problem in the United States."



The North Carolina victims were cured with the antibiotic spectinomycin.

The doctors have since determined that the new variety of bacteria is resistant to penicillin but susceptible to streptomycin and spectinomycin.

"Since this type of penicillin resistance has not been considered a serious practical problem until recently, there has been no routine surveillance for such strains," the doctors wrote.

A report on the North Carolina outbreak was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Absurdity toward S. Africa

Stephen Erickson

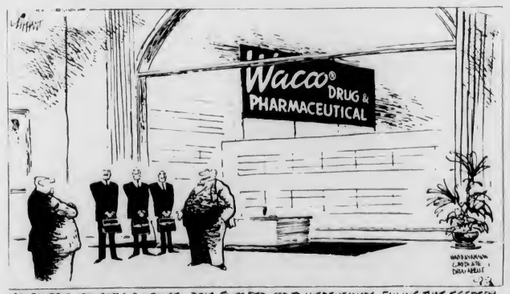
From liberals, "progressives," socialists, and assorted "anti-nukers," comes the cry for dialogue and understanding with the Soviet Union. Such people argue that it is only the fear the Soviet leaders have of the West that gives them their repressive tendencies. Calling the Soviet Union an "evil empire" is counterproductive, just as aggravating the Soviets by bringing up the ussue of the cancerous "spy dust," which is used against Americans by the KGB in Moscow, hurts U.S.-Soviet relations. Liberals say accusations and name-calling will not make the Soviets more amenable to our wishes. Only through contact with one another at the government, academdic, and trade levels, it is said, can we understand each other well enough to both live in peace and improve both our societies by learning from one another. Such a policy, as advocated by our left of center friends, might be described as . . . "constructive engagement."

Hmmmm . . . "constructive engagement?" . . . now where have we heard of this policy before? Ah yes, that's President Reagan's "racist" policy in South Africa, that place of ultimate evil, where the least little bit of contact with the United States will give our stamp of approval to Apartheid. It is said the Soviet Union requires understanding, but apparently the case of South Africa demands ostracism. Leftists claim the two situations are quite differenct from one another. Let us examine just how different they really are.

The Soviet Union has made it abundantly clear, through both words and deeds, that its ultimate goal is world communism under direction from Moscow, and that its chief obstacle in obtaining this goal is the existence of western civilization, with the United States as its chief target. South Africa, on the other hand, has always been friendly towards the United States, and supplies this country with minerals critical to the well being of our economy and national security.

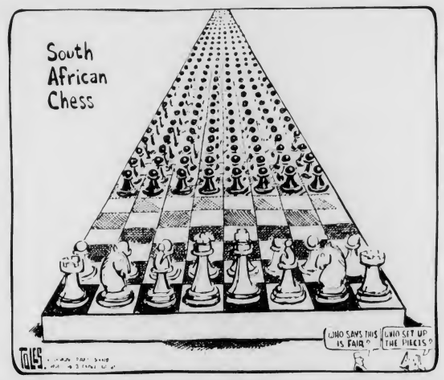
Both the Soviet Union and South Africa have repressive tendencies, but as opposed to the Soviet Union, South Africa has opposition political parties and a free press which is often highly critical of its own government. The Soviet Union is a totalitarian society, where everything is run by the state and subject to its strict control. In South Africa, people speak out freely against their government. South African dissident Bishop Tutu and Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov are both Nobel Peace Prize recipients, but while Tutu appears almost nightly on Western television, Sakharov rots in Siberia.

Absolutely no dissent is permitted from the strict Communist Party line within the Soviet Union. Control is so tight that revolt is impossible as protests are curshed before they can begin. Although restricted recently, Americans have witnessed many protests against Apartheid within South Africa on the evening news. Even if such events were allowed to occur in the Soviet Union, the western media is so restricted that it could get nowhere near them.



The Soviet Union, together with its Eastern European allies, serves as a massive prison surrounded by barbed wire and machine guns, where thousands who wish to emigrate to the West are forbidden to by the state. South Africa has free emigration, and in fact has a very high immigration level as many Africans migrate to South Africa to find a higher standard of living than on the rest of the continent. (A standard of living that divestment would cripple.)

The South African government is elected principally by the white electorate. The Soviet government is selected by the Politburo of the Communist Party. The government of South Africa represents a fairly wide range of political viewpoints, whereas one only rises to power in the Soviet Union by representing the status quo. Therefore, relative to that of the Soviet Union, the South African system of government is a more dynamic one, more capable of significantly changing itself peacefully.



The purpose in drawing these comparisons is not to exonerate South Africa, but merely to put things into perspective. A Democratic Congressman from Pennsylvania described South Africa as having "the most evil system in the world." The news media, various sit-ins, and divestment campaigns lead one to believe such erroneous statements. Even if we were to assume that the Soviet Union and South Africa were equally oppressive, which they clearly are not, should we not give preferential treatment to friendly governments as opposed to hostile ones?

Constructive engagement only has a chance of working on countries that are friendly to the United States. To try and gently persuade our enemies while crippling governments that hold us in higher regard is to base foreign policy on the absurd.

Rob Skelton

Most college students get a summer job. Many summer jobs are, to be honest, boring. Students break from boredom by dreaming—of next weekend or a special place, perhaps of a loved one and, of course, of the future.

My job gave me lots of time to think of those things—summer jobs are good for that. So while I was toiling away trying to think of a better way, I came upon that three-letter word: Art.

Instead of putting up with a dull occupation is it possible to transfer the zeal of enjoyment to a career choice, the way people use causes to champion themselves and their pocketbooks?

Three professional examples come immediately to mind: members of Congress who use politics as a ticket to travel (fact-finding wanderlust' private-sector executives and company-billed dog boarding; and Bob Geldof singer-turned relief-ambassador.

The Lowest Common Denominator here is the fringe benefit. Every job has 'em, and some more than others. Art has the most appeal to me, because it's the most accessible.

Art has taught me that, basically, anything goes. That's a lesson many politicians use. To succeed in both worlds requires skill, savvy and a gambler's disposition. It sounds like business, huh?

Big business. And those who make it to the major leagues make the big bucks, and, big benefits.

I've got certain skills, some savvy, and certainly a gambler's disposition, but I'm just too weird to make it through business school. I'm too corrupted to go into politics, so what is left?

Art. Some of the things that pass as "entertaining", or "beautiful" in the arts are definitely not put out by the top of the league, the cream of the crop, or what have you.

Some of the radio jingles I hear could even have been written by a six-year-old. Even works of Picasso, I'm afraid, resemble kindergarten masterpieces. And some of the stuff that passes as sculpture—witness the UMass campus—could just as easily be lost in a junkyard.

I'm not bitter about all this. Actually, I want to get in on it. If someone can get paid for doing this stuff, power to 'em.

It is a little-known fact that hundreds, if not thousands of dollars are available for artistic projects as long as an acceptable articulate proposal is submitted before certain deadline dates.

Remember, anything goes, as long as it can be justified. Even in this age of drastic domestic cutbacks, you'd be surprised out of your hand-painted coveralls what you can get with a little imagination. So don't drop out of school, just learn how to write grant proposals.

That's just what Bob Geldof did. The self-described "second-rate" rock star convinced the biggest names in England, and then the world, to contribute to a worthy project. Even though he "didn't get paid" for it, you can sure bet he always ate well and slept comfortably, and received other FBs, even whilst "fact-finding" in the Sudan.

Now Bob Geldof has it made. His band, The Boomtown Rats which was withering before Band-Aid materialized, will most certainly benefit. I can safely predict they will appear fifty miles of here within fifty weeks from now.

Me, I'll use my skills and savvy, and with a little luck will market Geldof teeshirts and posters, create a sculpture and dedicate it to the Boomtown Rats, write a radio jingle promoting their tour, and present each member of the band with personalized pen & ink souvenir sketches.

It doesn't matter that I have no artistic talent whatsoever. Anything goes, remember? And I'll probably get backstage passes to the show; soon after that I'll write a book chronicling my experiences.

Stayed tuned.

Talking Heads hit middle age

Little Creatures (Sire)
Talking Heads
By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

The new Talking Heads album, Little Creatures is their most commercial effort yet, though somehow the perfect follow-up to last year's Stop Making Sense, the Talking Heads first real entrance to mainstream, large scale media. Or to put it another way, the Talking Heads will probably play the Centrum for the first time, the next time they tour.

So what's wrong with that? Every band goes through a period of growth and development in which they become calmer, their period of rebellion over. Who would have thought that the group that sang "I Saw Her Standing There' would later write 'Michelle', one of the all time schlock classics of the sixties? And throughout their careers, the members of the Talking Heads have always prided themselves on their maturity and their ability to do without the traps of popstar life. Well, I suppose that Little Creatures is supposed to indicate a new point of maturity, a sort of act-your-age type affair, in which they are older so the songs are calmer and cuter. The song, "Road to Nowhere," captures the feeling of resignation and love for it perfectly with its chorus, "We're on the road to nowhere/Come on inside/Takin that ride to nowhere/we'll take that ride."

The point is that for years the Talking Heads have spent their time warning against just taking that ride for example in "Once in a Lifetime" the exclamation is "My God what have I done." In "The Big Country," the message is a simple analysis of American daily life that ends first with the line "I'm Tired of traveling/I want to be somewhere" and its chorus "I wouldn't live there if you paid me too." Somehow Little Creatures offers a kind of naivety which was not present on the Talking Heads' first two albums. On those albums, the naivety came with a mixed message of extreme awareness of what was going on inside one's surroundings while this album offers less of this and instead offers some kind of Leo Buscaglia philosophy. Let's face it, when the media, such as Time magazine, heralds any band, you know something is fishy. Not only that, the true nature of the Talking Heads' new popularity can be seen by the rejection of their past material as "bizarre," as it was in Time.

So what is this new album about? The album contains nine songs including that FM smash And She Was which is now the root of rockblocks across the country. The four original Talking Heads play almost everything on the album. The drums are very high in the mix so you hear more of Chris Frantz's cymbol playing than ever before, which is not necessarily for the better. His drumming seems to have taken a step backwards, but he might be playing what David Byrne told his to, anyway.

Many of the other songs are rewrites of old Talking Heads or, in the case of "Walk it Down" a rewriting of a David Byrne song from The Catherine Wheel, My Big Hands (Fall Through the Cracks) combined with Girlfriend is Better from the last album, (studio album that is). What is frustrating about this album is that David Byrne is an excellent songwriter, so that no matter what we writes one is bound to find it catchy like a trashy song on FM, which if you listen to it enough you will learn to love. And already I find myself humming "Perfect World" which is a really trashed song, but it is catchy so hum it I will until die most likely replacing the Roches song, "Better World" in appropriate situations.

Boiling it all down we find that the new Talking Heads album,, "Little Creatures," is a retreat from their past efforts, even from their last studio album. While it is nice to find the band playing as a foursome again it is at a cost. This album is quite likable if you have no previous feeling for the Talking Heads; otherwise expect comparable production but somewhat less interesting songs. Tina Weymouth does play bass a little more on this album, thank goodness, and after all "And She Was" is a pretty good song.

New Cure album delightful, diverse

The Cure
The Head on the Deer
Elektra Records

By JAMES NEILL
Collegian Correspondent

The Head on the Deer is The Cure's eight LP. Their lineup has been somewhat transient in the last couple of years what with band leader Robert Smith moonlighting with Siouxsie and the Banshees and bassist Simon Gallup on leave. The new roster includes a total of five musicians including ex-Thompson Twin Boris Williams. As most early Cure fans know, the band underwent a sort of structural and artistic meltdown during and after their 4th LP Pornography. They had completely milked what had up until that time, been a source of music easily as moving and emotionally demanding as that of the late Joy Division. Bleak musical attitudes like this can be easily torn apart as Joy Division's Ian Curtis demonstrated with his suicide. Robert Smith, apparently more detached than Curtis from the fatalistic ideas the music suggested, chose life . . . But to what end?

New Order rose from Joy Division's ashes to carve a safe and lucrative niche in the British synth pop scene whilst Smith and co., with the exception of a few songs that rank with the best of their early material, opted for a callioped approach to the quirky pop of their first LP. A lot of people liked it. It was cute but for those of us who remembered "Faith" and "Seventeen Seconds" it wasn't The Cure. The live album was refreshing, drawing largely from the early material, but the question must be asked; who, what, and where are The Cure now.

Whereas the last studio LP The Top was frustratingly disjointed, The Head on the Deer is delightfully (if a bit derivatively) diverse. Taking a cue from New Order, the single "Inbetween Days" blatantly borrows the Order's market-tested sound in order to sell some records. No problem. People have to eat. "Besides," says Smith, "They've ripped off [Cure song] "A Forest" on their new album. They just slowed it down." No other song on The Cure's latest sounds anything like New Order or anything like any other song on the album for that matter. Smith: "I wanted ten songs which sounded very different from each other." Mission accomplished.

"Kyete Song" has an oriental flavor. "The Blood" sports some decent Spanish guitar and lyrics ala Sting (". . . Tell me who doesn't love what can never come back?"). "Six Different Ways" resembles "The Love Cats" and "The Caterpillar." "Push," a rather simple guitar exercise and chant that sounds fab loud, sounds more like Big Country than The Cure. The insane "The Baby Scream" picks up where "Shake Dog Shake" from The Top LP left off. "A Night Like This" is vintage Cure at its best. Smith calls it "the most entertaining album The Cure have ever done." Funny, I'd never considered applying the word "Entertaining" to The Cure but the fit's not so bad now as it once would have been. They will tour the U.S. in October; approximately 30 dates.

UM soccer rebounds to gain tournament split

Offensive explosion downs Bowling Green, 4-2

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Jeff Gettler was worried, but only for a little while.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer coach, missing his leading scorer Kurt Manal due to a season-ending leg injury, watched his young team sputter offensively, losing 1-0 to Akron in the first game of the Bud Holiday Classic in Akron this past weekend.

But the Minutemen, playing with confidence, bounced Bowling Green 4-2 in the second round to take second place in the four team tourney.

"We missed a lot of golden chances in the first game, mistakes I attribute to first-game jitters and the fact that the freshmen were playing college ball for the first time," Gettler said. "But we turned it around in the second game and showed what we're capable of doing on the field."

UMass lot to Akron, a seventh-ranked powerhouse, due mainly to missed chances. Akron outshot UMass 22-12, but the Minutemen put six shots on goalie Glen Sharkey.

Akron scored with five minutes left in the game as Pat Nash took a cross from Graham Evison and beat UM goalie Don Donahue (four saves).

UM pulled its sweeper and inserted another forward, but Akron held on for the win.

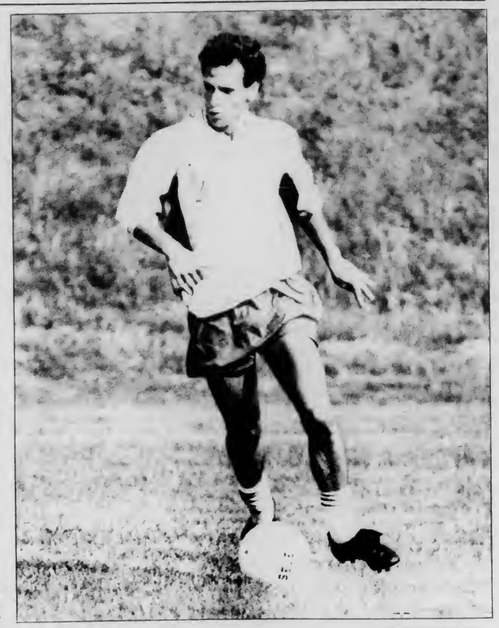
Against Bowling Green, UMass came out smoking, scoring 50 seconds into the game as freshman forward F. J. Zwicklbauer took a pass from Tom Uschok and converted his first collegiate goal.

Bowling Green tied the score, but UMass went ahead to stay at the 19:27 mark of the first half as Swedish transfer Anders Hedelin, a late addition to the UMass squad as a center forward, scored with Ferdie Adoboe getting the assist.

Hedelin, a transfer from the University of Stockholm, may give Gettler the scoring punch he needs with Manal out of the lineup.

Uschok then scored with Hedelin assisting just 4:03 into the second half as UMass took a commanding 3-1 lead. Andy Bing then scored what Gettler labeled a "brilliant" goal, taking a Zwicklbauer feed 8:40 into the half.

"We played very well in the second game, much better than the first game. We did a lot of things well," Gettler said. "I was pleased with our effort."



Freshman goalie Sam Ginzburg started the Bowling Green game and according to Gettler played well. Donahue played in the second half, allowing one goal. Ginzburg played despite an injured leg that didn't allow him to punt the ball upfield.

Gettler said he was happy with the play of his forwards and defensemen Matt Dowd and middies Tom Shannan and Uschok.

"The team really came together in the game, and I was kind of worried about how we would react after the first tough loss," the coach said.

"Zwicklbauer and Hedelin give us scoring ability upfront, something I was really seeking with Kurt (Manal) being out. It's important that our forwards recognize scoring chances and capitalize on them. If we do that, we'll win our share of games."

UMass faces Boston University in Boston next Tuesday and return home for Fairfield on Thursday. They are ranked sixth in New England.

Palazz tabbed as QB starter

Freshman redshirt quarterback Dave Palazzi will start for the University of Massachusetts in its first game of the season, Saturday at home against Morgan State.

Palazzi, a 6-1, 193 pounder from Leominister, did not play last season for the Minutemen. He has looked impressive in pre-season for the Minutemen. He has looked impressive in pre-season scrimmages, running 45 yards for a touchdown one time and showing a good arm and touch.

Palazzi replaces senior Jim Simione. Simeone started all 11 games last season and six his sophomore season. He holds UMass records for passes completed in a season (147) and passes attempted (313). He is currently listed second in depth charts.

Several newcomers figure to play key roles in Saturday's game (1:30 at Alumni Stadium). Transfers Al Neri and Lonny Brock will start at fullback and split end respectively. Freshman redshirt John McKeown will start at inside linebacker and six other freshmen and one transfer are listed as second string. The troublesome placekicking position has gone to freshman Silvio Bonvini.

Women's hoop lands two top recruits for coming year

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Plenty of good things happened to the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team during the off-season.

1. For starters, no players graduated giving head coach Barbara Stevens a good nucleus to build the 1985-86 team with.

2. Two talented recruits, a forward and a point guard, signed with UMass and in time will contribute to the program.

3. Stevens added two assistant coaches, giving UMass a three and one-half to one player-coach ratio.

But one very potentially bad thing happened to the Minutewomen. The Atlantic 10 conference, the third toughest women's league in the nation, will start double round robin play this season, meaning UMass will play nationally-ranked teams like West Virginia, Penn State and St. Joseph's twice instead of just once. Traditional New England opponents (and frequent UM victims) like Boston College, Holy Cross and Northeastern had to be dropped.

"It's a challenge to be playing the type of schedule we have," Stevens said. "I think we have the talent to compete against the schools we have in the Atlantic 10. I'm glad we have everybody back and are bringing in good recruits. I'm looking forward to the season."

UM picked up 6-0 forward Beth Wilbor and 5-4 point guard Chris Zullo. Wilbor, from Hunterdon Central High in Flemington, N.J., averaged 22 points-per-game and 16 rebounds for a 22-4 team that reached the Class 4 state quarterfinals.

Zullo averaged 16 points for undefeated (26-0) St. Peter's High in New Brunswick.

"Beth is a quick forward that has a nice outside shot," Stevens said. "She can rebound well. She'll have a slight adjustment to the college game, but after that I expect her to contribute."

"Chris is a speedy push-it-up type of point guard, something we don't have," Stevens noted. "She can run the floor well and really lead the offense. Our current point guards (Mary Marquedant and Joann Dupuis) are more slow-down point guards and take more time to set up the offense. That's good to have against some teams and in certain situations. But I like the flexibility that Chris will provide. If I think we can run on a team, she'll be out there."

UMass ended the season on a positive note, an overtime loss in the A-10 tournament to a tough West Virginia team. "I think we learned a lot last season," Stevens said. "Experience is a big plus for us this season."

Pam Roeker will take a part-time assistant coaches position with UMass. She was an assistant at Wisconsin-Green Bay and is experienced in admissions policies, meaning she will be a help during recruiting season. Karen Byrne, a former Providence College player, will take the graduate assistants job.

Minuteman Mumblings: On the men's basketball side, coach Ron Gerlufsen is preparing for his third season, a season that will feature eight new players (John Milum, Fitzhugh Tarry, David Brown, Joe Fennel, Sean Mosby, Mike Mundy, Ben Jones, and Duane Chase). Many of the incoming freshmen spent the summer in Amherst working out. UMass will face Michigan State, Kent State, and New Mexico in the Lobo Classic early this season in Alberquerque, New Mexico. Seniors Horace Neysmith and Donald Russell were not drafted by the NBA and are considering various offers from the Continental Basketball Association and foreign leagues. In other A-10 news, West Virginia rebounded from what was considered a poor recruiting season by landing Daryl Prue, Georgetown's top recruit who was refused admission to the school for academic reasons.

St. Bonaventure center Barry Mungar may have to red-shirt this season with back troubles. The big center spent much of last season on the bench due to his injury and over the summer the pain has not lessened. Former A-10 rookie-of-the-year, Bonnie point guard Alvin Lott, has left the school amid rumours of drug problems. He was denied admission into Iona after trying to transfer.

UM athletic action kicks into gear

Local sports action will get underway Saturday as the University of Massachusetts football team opens its 1985 season with Morgan State, 0-11 in 1984 and 0-1 thus far in 1985, on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Alumni Stadium.

Second year coach Bob Stull's squad will be looking to improve on last year's 3-8 mark and freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi will be making his first varsity start.

There will be plenty of other UMass athletic action next week.

The seventh ranked field hockey team, shooting for another trip to the Final Four, opens its season on Sunday with 11 a.m. match with 11th ranked Virginia on the turf at Springfield College. U.S. National team member Megan Donnelly heads up a cast of talented Minutemen stickers.

Kalekeni Banda's fourth ranked women's soccer team opens up its season on Wednesday with a home match against a pesky Keene State team at 3 p.m. at Boyden Field

The women were 15-3-2 last year and finished third in the nation for the second year in a row.

The men's soccer team travels to Boston University Wednesday but opens at home against Fairfield next Thursday at 4 p.m. The volleyball squad opens its season at AIC on Wednesday but returns to campus next weekend, Sept. 13-14 to host the 16 team UMass Invitational at Boyden Gym.

Some of the top teams to be in Amherst this fall include the Holy Cross football team (Sept. 21), Rhode Island football (Oct. 5), Delaware football (Nov. 9), Providence men's soccer (Sept. 25), Harvard men's soccer (Nov. 6), Connecticut women's soccer (Oct. 3), defending women's soccer National champion North Carolina (Oct. 12), and defending field hockey national champion Old Dominion (Oct. 13) with the Temple (Oct. 12) and Connecticut field hockey (Nov. 2) squads visiting Amherst too.

Police, UMass, consider campus jail

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

A new state law requiring police to physically search prisoners every 15 minutes has prompted community members and the Police Advisory Board at the University of Massachusetts to consider building a jail on campus.

People arrested and detained by campus police are currently transported to the Amherst Police station and held there until bail is posted, said Gerald O'Neil, director of public safety. A campus police officer is required to search the individual detained under arrest or protective custody to prevent suicide and injuries.

"The University has to be responsible for people detained in lock-up here. We don't have the personnel to service other agency's problems," said Lt. David Jankowski from the Amherst Police Department. The jail also holds people from neighboring towns with no holding facilities, he said.

People arrested by University police usually spend between 15 and 30 minutes in a cell before they are bailed out, O'Neil said. He said a campus holding facility would save campus police from having to take people downtown and would keep accountability of prisoners to only one police department.

Women arrested or placed in protective custody by campus police must be transported to Northampton because Amherst has no facilities for women or juveniles, O'Neil said.

The Citizens' Advisory Board, composed of faculty, students and staff representing various campus constituencies, sent out a memo last spring to solicit responses to the idea of building a facility on campus. The board stated that holding cells on campus would accommodate people on a short-term basis, between six to eight hours, until bail was posted or until an individual was freed from protective custody.

Police place people in protective custody when they are excessively drunk, violent and/or endangering other people. Last year, campus police placed 71 people in protective custody and arrested 336 people, said Lawrence Holmes, assistant director of public safety.

The advisory board began to consider the possibility of building a jail on campus after hearing about the Amherst Police Department's dissatisfaction with being liable for people arrested by campus police.

Police settle with former student

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

The Amherst police have paid $24,000 this summer to a former University of Massachusetts student who was allegedly beaten by two Amherst police officers in an incident which occurred in 1981 at Brittany Manor Apartments.

Michael Reagan originally of Amesbury, Mass., filed suits in federal court stating that Amherst Police Officers Michael Sullivan and Sgt. Richard Buckley allegedley engaged in false arrest and imprisonment, malicious prosecution, use of excessive force, intentional infliction of emotional distress, denial of medical treatment, and assault and battery, according to court papers filed in federal court.

According to the lawsuit, the officers were responding to a call about a noisy party and after breaking up the party, Officer Sullivan allegedly overheard Reagan make a comment regarding the age of police Sgt. Buckley. The suits allege that Officer Sullivan responded to the comment by pushing, punching and beating Reagan and was later joined in the attack by Sgt. Buckley and other Amherst police officers.

Reagan was subsequently charged with multiple counts of assault and battery on a police officer, disorderly conduct, and malicious destruction of property. Court papers stated Reagan was later found innocent of all charges by a Hampsbire County six-person jury.

His case against the Amherst Police Department was filed in May of 1982 and was settled out of court, according to court documents. He had asked for "Several hundred thousand dollars," said his attorney, Charles DiMare of Legal Services (LSO) at the University.

Defendants in the lawsuits were Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia and the Town of Amherst, according to court documents.

Report confirms Amherst rental housing crisis

By PHILIP SERAFINO
Collegian Staff

While many University of Massachusetts students seek off-campus housing in vain, the Amherst Rent Control Study Commission has recommended that the Amherst selectmen ask the University for land to develop subsidized housing.

In a report released last week, the commission also recommended that a rent review board be established to protect tenants from large rent increases.

Commission chairman Kenneth Mosakowski called the report "the most definitive study done on rental housing since I've been in town government."

The commission found "that a serious shortage of residential rental housing exists in Amherst; that there are unnecessary obstacles to the construction of new, low and moderate-cost rental housing; and that tenants face continuing problems in finding affordable housing in Amherst."

To alleviate the shortage, the report recommends that the town revise the current zoning by-laws "to permit rental housing to be constructed in more areas of town," and that the Board of Selectmen submit a request to the University for the doantion of land for development of subsidized housing.

The report found that the massive growth of the University between 1960 and 1983 was not accompanied by a corresponding increase in student housing. "The Commission feels that the demand for rental housing caused by the University exceeds what the present Amherst housing market can supply," the report states.

"The population explosion has to be dealt with, and the University hasn't done that," Mosakowski said.

The final recommendation states that the town should "take all possible steps to increase the Amherst Housing Authority's chances of obtaining housing development funding."

"A serious shortage of residential rental housing exists in Amherst."
—Amherst Rent Control Study Commission report

Mosakowski stressed that the proposed rent review board is not a form of rent control because it does not encompass a rent freeze or rollback. Previous attempts at rent control in Amherst were defeated because they contained these provisions, but Mosakowski said the rent review board is based on one in Lowell, Massachusetts, and that "the Lowell version does not call for a freeze or a rollback of rents. There is no hint of that here, and if there was I wouldn't vote for it," he said.

The Rent Review Board proposed by the Commission would maintain accurate lists of all rental units, insure that all properties meet health regulations, hear complaints from tenants about rent increases, and have the power to examine records and documents relating to rentals.

The Board would also be able to "establish a formula for determining the reasonableness of rent increases while assuring that renatl properties produce adequate income for their owners."

In addition, the Board could establish procedures for determining whether a decision in a particular case applies to comparable rental units, insure landlords and tenants speedy and fair hearings, and protect tenants from eviction as a result of seeking relief from the board.

The Rent Control Study Commission was established at a special town meeting in October 1983 to study the rental housing market in Amherst and determine whether there was a need for rent control.

Mosakowski said that the reports have not been fully circulated yet, but he hopes to have feedback from the community within two weeks. If the feedback is positive, Mosakowski said he will prepare an enabling act for the October 21 Special Town Meeting. An enabling act, accompanied by the signatures of 100 registered voters, would be voted on by the Town Meeting. If approved, it would go to the Massachusetts Legislature for approval. Once approved by the legislature, the enabling act would have to be voted on by the regular Town Meeting in the spring.

BC explains policy of academic freedom in handling of theologian

NEWTON (AP)—Boston College governs itself and does not come under the jurisdiction of church authority, its president, the Rev. J. Donald Monan,said in defending the handling of a theologian who was to teach there.

Monan's remarks were made Wednesday to about 500 faculty and staff at the Jesuit university's annual faculty convocation.

He told them he did not believe they "needed convincing of Boston College's long-standing and deeply rooted commitment to academic freedom," the Boston Globe said yesterday.

Monan rebutted charges that Daniel Maguire, a professor of theology at Marquette University in Milwaukee, had been asked not to teach at BC this summer because of ecclesiastical pressure.

Maguire was among a group of Roman Catholics who signed a New York Times advertisement opposing their bishops' stand on abortion. He had said BC canceled his course because of his views on abortion.

Monan said Maguire agreed not to teach the two-week course and complained publicly that the college had linfringed on his academic freedom after cashing the check he got under the agreement.

"Boston College is an autonomous university whose ultimate governing body is its board of trustees," Monan said, "No ecclesiastical authority possesses jurisdication over the affairs of the university."

Because a charge of pressure from church authorities had "fed speculation in the news media," Monan said he would 'go on record to say that no ecclesiastical authority from near at home or from afar attempted to influence me or in any way even communicated to me, directly or indirectly, regarding professor Maguire or any other member of our staff."

SGA student payroll cuts increase volunteer positions

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Many Registered Student Organization jobs will be performed on a voluntary rather than paid basis this semester, because of the Student Government Association's tight budget.

Before the budget was passed May 1 by the Undergraduate Student Senate, funding for RSOs had to be cut by about $175,000 because of the senate's budget crunch attributed to "full costing," a 2.4 percent trust fund accounting fee required by the University.

Faced with these mandatory cuts, the Senate Budget Committee cut back on student payrolls, where most of the cuts have been made.

"Things can run fine on a volunteer basis," said Jordan Rosner, budget committee chairman. "It's been my experience that volunteers have done more work than the people who have been paid."

Rosner said that 72 cents of every dollar that is paid into the Student Activity Fee goes into someone's paycheck, and thus he said, the committee wanted to cut the student payroll instead of cutting the organization's services.

In fiscal year 1985, $209,862.37 or 17.8 percent of the total budget was allocated to student payrolls. The budget committee, looking at the payroll accounts, made major cuts for fiscal year 1986. The present budget calls for 130,156.00 or 12.43 percent of the total budget for student payrolls.

Rosner said the toughest step taken on the budget was the committee's decision to liquidate the budget reserves, which serve as emergency funding when necessary. He said the committee will have to repay about $25,000 each year over the next three years back into the reserve fund.

"It makes the SGA responsible for repayment over the next three years when the fund itself is already in question," Rosner said. "And we still have to meet increasing costs of professional staff that's always going up," he added.

Rosner said the budget is the best one possible when faced with mandatory cuts. He added, "I'd be distressed to see the level of payroll come back to the way it was. It was terrible."

Any changes in the current budget will be discussed at the first SGA meeting on Sept. 11.

Martial arts weapons found

A large quantity of martial arts weapons was confiscated during a search of a Hamlin Dormitory room Wednesday and an investigation and arrest are pending, according to University of Massachusetts police.

Possession of martial arts weapons is a felony, police said.

In other police action:

•Four hundred dollars damage was done to a 1985 Oldsmobile after a hit and run accident on the first level of the Campus Center Paraking Garage. There are no suspects.

•A resident of Kennedy Dormitory was arrested Wednesday night and charged with possession of a forged Massachusetts license and being a minor possessing alcohol, police said.

•A wallet containing $100, a driver's license and other personal items was reported stolen from the Fine Arts Center. There are no suspects, police said.

He also said that only the rent review board would need to be passed by an enabling act. The other recommendations could be dealt with by the Board of Selectmen or at a regular Town Meeting.

Realtors Robert Shumway and Marvin Spence would not comment on the report, but realtor Kathy Stefan expressed misgivings, saying "I am opposed to a body of people I don't know deciding I should charge for rent. I think the way to do things historically has been the free market; supply and demand." Stefan said she was concerned that the people chosen for the board may not be qualified to make decisions regarding rent.

Seven Amherst residents were appointed to the commission: George Drake and Robert Radoff, by the Board of Selectmen; Homer Cowles, by the Board of Assessors; Douglas Elder and Linda Smith by the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee; Joanne Levenson, by the Fair Housing Commission; and Kenneth Mosakowski, by the Housing Authority.

Applications up 6 percent; admissions office more selective

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Admission to the University of Massachusetts was more rigorous this year because first-year student applications increaded 6 percent over last year.

"This is the most selective we have been in the last 10 years," said Timm Rinehart, interim director of admissions.

To reflect his year's high standards, the statistics of students' scores on Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT), which measures a student's ability in math and English, show 400 students with combined scores an average of 200 points above the national average for college bound high school seniors. In math, an even more impressive 1,000 first year students have SAT scores an average of 200 points above the national score.

Rinehart said there are a combination of reasons for the large increase of applications. "The overall thing is that the University is being perceived as valuable," he said. "People are realizing that students can get a quality education at UMass.

He also pointed out that education at UMass "is a great price for in or out of state."

This year's freshman class is composed of about 4200 of the 18,250 who applied.

Within the individual colleges, there has been a continuing trend for more applications in the School of Management (SOM). This year there were 3,500 SOM applications for only 300 available spaces.

George Spiro, acting dean of the SOM, said students are applying to the school because it is practical for employment after graduation. "They are looking for a degree that will get them a job," said Spiro.

Aside from the increase in the number of SOM applications, the computer and information sciences department and the division of hotel, restaurant and travel administration have also received more applications.

Every Greek area house inspected and set for occupation

Collegian photos by Paul Desmarais
Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity from inside and out (inset), is one of the 23 Greek buildings that recently passed Amherst fire and building inspections.

By MICHAEL ALTER
Collegian Correspondent

All Greek area houses passed their Aug. 29 fire and building inspections after only seven of the 23 buildings passed initial inspection August 12.

Robert White, coordinator of Greek Affairs, said, "Two inspections are required each year, one for opening in the fall, and one for opening in the spring.

"The inspections are required by state law following the vacancy of multiple family commercial residences," White said. Greek houses are considered in that category.

"Some of the worst houses last year, were the best this year. Last year only one house passed inspection the first time through," White said.

The inspectors and White came up with "a working arrangement to achieve houses fit to live in, for the benefit of all the residents," White said. "We are consciously making an effort to upgrade the Greek area."

White said he was appalled by the conditions of many of the houses when he began the job last August. "What I witnessed were very deteriorated and poor conditions. The Greek system had to improve," he said.

"The houses are improving physically, and in other ways, brothers and sisters are getting a greater appreciation of themselves and their houses by working together to improve them," White said.

Sharon Fil, house mother of Sigma Kappa sorority, said the inspectors were more than fair, "It's about time they cracked down. Some of the houses fluffed by in the past. It was a lot rougher this year."

Phillip Rodowicz, president of Delta Chi fraternity said, "The things they (inspectors) find are things which help improve the safety of all fraternities and sororities."

"Inspectors have bent over backwards for us," White said. "They are not required to reinspect, but they have."

Are all-Black colleges an endangered species?

By MANNING MARABLE
Special to the Collegian

Is there a conflict between the goal of full racial equality within American society and the continued preservation and improvement of historically Black colleges, both private and public? Some educators and civil rights leaders state that racial integration must inevitably mean the recruitment of white administrators, faculty, and majority white student bodies on Black campuses. In a number of instances, this has already occurred. But is this strategy in the best interests of Black America?

Part of the answers to our current dilemma may be gleaned from history. Sixty-two years ago, three thousand Black people attended a public forum to discuss the existence of all-Black Cheyney State Normal School. The featured speaker, W.E.B. du Bois, the founder of the NAACP, argued on behalf of Cheyney State. Racial segregation in principle was wrong, he declared, but "ignorance was worse than Jim Crow." Blacks had a moral and political obligation to defend Black higher education.

A group of Black Baptist ministers contacted Du Bois, questioning whether he was "for Jim Crow schools or against them." Du Bois carefully outlined his position in his reply. "I believe that a 'Jim Crow' school systems is the the greatest possible menace to democracy. At the same time," Du Bois added, many all-Black schools "are doing excellent work . . . I believe in these schools in the sense that without them we could not have gotten our present education." Du Bois consistently maintained this perspective the remainder of his public life. In his July, 1935 essay, "Does the Negro Need Separate Schools?", Du Bois again urged Afro-Americans to achieve academic excellence within separate institutions, while supporting the long-term effort to abolish racism.

Why are historically Black colleges absolutely essential for Black America's future? The current crisis within higher education stems from what I call the "paradox of desegregation." The majority of white society has rejected the social policy goal of desegregation in regards to public school systems--but this rejection has not included a desire to maintain the historically Black colleges.

For example, after a series of school desegregation victories in the Federal courts in the 1960s, public school systems were required to develop rigorous integration plans which reaffirmed "the original understanding" of the 1954 Brown decision, which "required integration as the means of insuring equal educational oppertunity." The legal turning point was perhaps the 1974 Milliken v. Bradley decision, in which the Supreme Court overturned a lower court order which mandated the consolidation of Detroit's public schools with 53 white suburban school districts. After 1976, according to legal scholar Derrick Bell, "the Court stiffened standards of proof in even those districts where large-scale busing would be limited to a single district. Arguments that segregation was unconstitutional regardless of how caused were rejected. Plaintiffs were now required to prove that school officials had acted affirmatively to segregated schools, and

Subminimum wage masks the real problems—Opinion

By NORMAN HILL
Special to the Collegian

Conservatives both black and white have long argued that poor people do not benefit from Welfare and other "interferences in the free market" such as minimum wage laws; rather they are priced out of the labor market and they become sucked into a cycle of dependency. For example, the black conservative Thomas Sowell has attributed the rise in black teenage unemployment in comparison with white teenage unemployment since the 1950's to the rise in the minimum wage.

Such arguments have resulted in many policy prescriptions. The latest to be pushed in a big way is the youth subminimum wage bill, which is meant to combat teenage unemployment, especially black teenage unemployment.

The bill would allow youth under 20 to work for $2.50 an hour (the minimum wage is now $3.35). It would supposedly prevent the displacement of older workers by taking effect only between May and October, and by mandating heavy penalties to employers who take on under-20 youth to replace older workers. Proponents of the bill say it would create 400,000 new jobs and give many unemployed youth sorely needed experience in developing work habits and discipline.

The idea that a subminimum youth wage would create jobs and not displace older workers is very hard to believe. People who are working at the minimum wage are already at the margins of the workforce, in jobs that are by their nature not permanent. Employers will not find more low-skilled jobs to offer merely because they can legally pay $2.50 an hour. However, if they can get away with firing their $3.35-an-hour workers and replacing them with the cheaper teenagers, they may very well do so.

It is highly unlikely that such employers will be caught. There is already a form of youth subminimum—it's called a student subminimum, and it's set at $2.85 an hour. In 20 years the Department of Labor has not snactioned one employer for displacing an older worker to hire a student.

The subminimum bill cannot create jobs; it can only depress wages at the bottom level of the labor market. The minimum wage itself has become an ipso facto subminimum, since it has steadily fallen with respect to the average wage. It fell from 51% of the average wage in the 1960's to 45.8% in the 1970's—and today is 40.7%. According to Sowell's thesis, then, black youth unemployment ought to have fallen during the 70's and 80's, but instead it was skyrocketing.

The real causes of the rise in black youth unemployment over the decades can be traced to some large trends, such as the mechanization of agriculture in the rural South; the decline of smokestack industries and all its effects on the black community; the tightening of the job market in the 1970's and 80's; the exit from cities of the black middle classes, portions of which traditionally provided an informal job network; and the work of the "underclass."

The government must take on the difficult tasks of promoting economic development and initiating greater educational and job opportunities for those who need it most. The subminimum wage is simply another way for the Reagan administration to avoid dealing with the real problem.

Announcements

The Counselor Advocates are a group of women committed to working against violence against women. They are looking for volunteers who want to become involved in either direct service work with victim/survivors or community outreach and training.

Free training is provided and credit may be available to students. Community women are encouraged to apply. Fall training deadline for applications is September 16, 1985. For more information please contact the Everywomen's Center, located at Wilder Hall at the University of Massachusetts, or call 545-0883.

The Everywomen's Center is sponsoring a support group for lesbians who have been or who are presently in a physically and/or emotionally abusive relationships. The goal is to provide a safe place for victims/survivors to come together for support and discussion.

A support group for rape survivors will focus on some common concerns facing rape survivors such as fears, anger, intimacy issues and family and friends reactions.

The group is free of charge and confidentiality is assured. For further information and to register please call the Everywomen's Center at 545-0883.

Everywomen's Center's Public Relations/Outreach Program is seeking volunteers interested in acquiring skills in mass communication, public speaking, and making and distributing publicity packages. Volunteers will assist in all program publicity and public relations including producing a newsletter. Previous experience is desirable, particularly writing and/or graphic skills. Training will be provided. For an application and job description ask the front desk person of Everywomen's Center Wilder Hall, UMass.

The un-manned sub Argo was used in conjunction with the Research Vessel Knorr to locate and photograph the sunken luxury liner Titanic.

Researchers heading home with film of Titanic

WOODS HOLE, (AP)—Researchers who found the 73-year-old wreck of the Titanic headed for home yesterday with promises of "spectacular" film from the expedition and some worries about scavengers.

The Navy-owned research ship Knorr, operated by Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, was scheduled to dock Monday at this Cape Cod town. But anxious Woods Hole officials said they would send a helicopter to the ship to bring home the film early.

Dr. Robert Spindel, head of the Woods Hole Ocean Engineering Department, said Dr. Robert Ballard, chief scientist on the U.S.-French mission, told him the film taken by a remote-controlled vehicle makes early pictures shown on televison "look like marginal quality."

Ballard will try to arrange a return trip, possibly next summer, to explore the sunken luxury liner in a manned submersible known as the Alvin.

☆black colleges

remedies were to be limited to the harm caused by the discrimination." Since the late 1970s, many local Black educational organizations have not pursued desegregation strategies, and have opted to improve existing school systems within a majority Black context.

Ironically, the desegration of Black higher education continues to accellerate. Former Black colleges--West Virginia State, University of Maryland-Eastern Shore, and Lincoln University of Missouri--have majority white student bodies. Within a decade, Tennessee State University and other state-supported, Black colleges may also have majority white faculties and student populations.

The demise of historically Black institutions might not be as regrettable if the recruitment of Black faculty, students and administrators had continued at white universities. Unfortunately, the trend at white institutions during the past decade has been toward greater racial segregation. The total number of Black college professors in the United States in 1981 was approximately 19,300, about 4.2 percent of all university faculty. Over one-quarter of this group are employed at junior colleges, and half teach at historically Black institutions. Only a small minority, probably less than 25 percent, are employed full-time at white, four year institutions. Since 1975, both the number and percentage of Black faculty at white colleges has declined. For example, of 500 full-time faculty at the University of Mississippi, 9 are Black (1.8 percent) and of Columbia University's 1,315 faculty, 20 are Black (1.8 percent).

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Dry Campus

Maybe UMass students are too susceptible to liquor advertising, maybe too aware of our fading "ZooMass" image; no less, there are more than a few of us who'll miss a fervent Friday TOC session or a tall, cool, Molson in the Hatch after a bout of studying. Returning to a dry campus was a disappointment and a surprise to us all. But, while the adminstration's actions were no doubt forced, alcohol restrictions may be a disguised blessing: until alcohol returns to campus (and it will, if we students have a say) we're forced to examine the role alcohol plays in our lives. And that, in retrospect, is not a bad thing.

We can pass the time thinking of the benefits - like fewer possible incidents of violence, specifically violence against women, which is a real and growing problem on this campus despite the denials of some people on campus. Or, less pressure among those who don't drink or party to conform to others' idea of "fun", which often constitutes drinking alcohol. Most importantly, it will pose, if not answer, such questions as, "Do I really need a drink to have a good time?", "Do I actually like the taste of alcohol, or do I just drink out of habit?", and "Do I have a drinking problem?"

For those who think, too, that the new residential policies are too stringent (no alcohol-related events may be held in Southwest, for example, until house elections are held) remember this: freedom is most often achieved at the sacrifice of other freedoms. Fostering an awareness of alcohol at UMass is more akin to a course in driver safety than a charge of driving while intoxicated.

The last think any of us--especially those of us who like to drink, and do--need is a sermon on the evils of drunk driving or cirrhosis of the liver. We should all--administrators and students--restrain any budding antagonism and try to understand that although the move to restrict alcohol sales was due in part to a legal and business decision, it has transformed itself into a very personal dilemma for us all, drinkers or not.

Bureaucracy comes to the Hatch, toasted, with cheese

Anne McCrory

I won't die from it, I doubt my cholesterol level will jump to new levels because of it, and I really won't gain any weight - well, maybe an ounce or two -from it, but at the time I was quite distressed.

I guess it's what it symbolized -bureaucracy comes to the Hatch. It's not like I haven't had my share of battles during registration week, and now this - I can't even order a simple sandwich, as I work overtime in the office on no sleep. It was, to use a trite cliche, the straw that broke the camel's back.

So, picture this: there I stand in the Hatch, disappointed that La Cuchina has not yet opened, and I am forced to make due with the selection I had already digested at lunch. I bummed out for a minute, and then decided to settle on a tuna fish sandwich. Not glamorous, perhaps, or all that stimulating to the taste buds, but a food somewhat nutritious that would satisfy my starvation. Simple, right?

But, NO. I can't order a simple tuna fish sandwich on rye bread or wheat or whatever - not without having it grilled with melted cheese. I don't need those calories for my diet and the grease will sit in my stomach during the long night ahead. I explain this to the woman, who was actually polite, but she says she is sorry, that there are no substitutions for the menu. You want tuna, you get a grilled tuna and cheese. Period.

So what do I do? I sigh, and look at my friend, who also will be working quite late, and is disdainfully ordering a jumbo burger and fries. He doesn't look too psyched either, and is quite understanding of my plight.

But to no avail. We discuss how ridiculous a policy is that forbids the preparation of foodstuffs differing from the set pattern, especially when the alternative is simpler, and thus more cost efficient for the operation. Again, the counter person is quite sympathetic, while diligently adhering to the company line.

I wondered what they told those employees in the Hatch so they would unquestionably believe that which is fed to them (no pun intended). I mean, it doesn't take brainwashing to convince the people in Whitmore that bureaucracy is a necessary part of things—no matter how frustrating students find it—because dealing with 19,000 add/drop, pass/fail forms and other sundry business requires an inflexible formula so thinks stay in order. But how busy do you think the Hatch was when I went in? My friend and I were the only ones ordering at the time, and there were maybe 20 people, tops, hanging out. You'd think just once, when it wouldn't cause anybody any trouble, they could make an exception to the strict menu rule. That the chef would agree to skip grilling the bread and adding cheese.

Maybe if he had heard the request himself, he would have complied. But that's bureaucracy for you. Your complaint never reaches the person who could resolve the conflict; it gets tied up somewhere in between. Petty troubles shouldn't be deflected to the person who could really deal with them—get rid of the complainant at the first level. Even when it causes unnecessary grief.

So, I ate my grilled cheese with tuna, as it's called on the menu. It was greasy, and it was still sitting there as I typed this column halfway through my shift. I wish the coffee shop was open—they took those orders just last week—or the sandwich part, or La Cuchina, was open. Until then, I'll try asking other counter people for tuna on rye bread or wheat or whatever, and see if I find a sympathetic ear among them.

Letters

I am writing to praise Stephen Erickson's article on South Africa in yesterday's Collegian. Why is it that liberal politics allow people to decide which governments the U.S. has a "moral obligation" to become involved with and which must be left alone? When there is a discrepency in conservative politics, we are led to believe that the end of the world (preferably by nuclear holocaust) is just around the corner.

When liberal politics contradict, it is always in the name of truth, justice, harmony, and all of the other idealistic laundry that seems to tag along on the left. The purpose of politics is to deal with governmental realities, not pipe dreams. The purpose of government is to secure for its people all the freedoms inherent in our system as well as the security needed to protect those freedoms, regardless of the effect on some other government.

That may sound cold, but why must the U.S. be strapped by some sense of "political morality" (truly a contradiction of terms) that no other nation has ever had? And what is worse is when the liberals, the radicals, the "progressives", and all those groups hanging onto the left are the ones who display political hypocrisy the most blatantly.

If the government of Nicaragua can oppress its Indian nationals without an outcry from the left, why then should South Africa's government be different? Is racism more important than any other "ism"? I think the left should take a close look at itself before protesting and boycotting and sitting in.

Year of the Dragon
Directed by Michael Cimino
Starring Mickey Rourke, John Lone and Ariane

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

I have a few suggestions that might improve the remake of Year of the Dragon.

First, sometime between the coming attractions and the opening credits, kill the unlikable who is supposed to be the hero and replace him with a human character.

Second, kill any model who applies for the job of leading lady and get someone who can act.

Third, kill the writer and get someone who knows what dialogue sounds like.

Fourth, you won't have to kill the director, he's already cut his own throat with this film.

Year of the Dragon features Mickey Rourke as a ruthlessly unsympathetic New York city cop who is assigned to clean up Chinatown when gang wars start up. Both Rourke and John Lone who plays the leader of the Chinese mafia give good performances, probably despite the director Michael Cimino.

Year of the Dragon, while visually interesting to watch, is very unfocused. It tries to be eight movies and ends up being no movie.

Michael Cimino became Hollywood's little darling when he got an Oscar for his first film, The Deerhunter. They loved him so much that he was allowed to go so far over budget with his next film Heaven's Gate, that he single handedly drove United Artists into bankruptcy with the biggest commercial flop of all time. Did Hollywood learn from its mistakes? Guess not, becuase they let Cimino make another movie. Maybe after Year of the Dragon , they'll know better.

The white hero of the film is cleverly named Stanley White. Get it? He is one of the string of obsessed Vietnam vets who has been infesting our movie houses this summer. White is everything one wouldn't want in a hero. He is abusive to friends and enemies alike. He manipulates everyone to give up their lives for his obsession. He is so uncaring that when his wife, girlfriend, co-workers and friends suffer death and violence for him, he pushes them back into the fray until he is satisfied. He is bigotted to the point of ridiculousness (he calmly uses every racial slur he can think of to refer to his girlfriend and all Asians in

A combination park and sculpture rises from a patch of ground in Southwest, viewed from the top of Coolidge Tower.

A sculpture grows in Southwest

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Students who have moved into Southwest Coolidge Tower this fall now have to walk "the long way 'round" to get to the student center in Hampden Commons.

The dusty chunk of land who submitted diagrams and sketches to a panel including representatives from the art and landscape between the two buildings is in the process of being transformed into a combination park and outdoor sculpture by the UMass Arts Council.

The council's Outdoor Sculpture/Landscape Architect Project began last fall. Two students, artist Caroline Gould and landscape architect Todd Richardson were selected from a field of 30 applicants architecture departments, Southwest Area Government, Housing Services, Auxilary Services, and the Physical Planning Committee, among others.

A curving, stone-edged walkway will wind through the small park, and several red, yellow and black arcs will rise 22 feet high. The sculpture is meant to be viewed from the towers as well as from the ground-- Gould's legacy to Coolidge, where she began her UMass career some 11 years ago.

"I did a lot of growing up here," Gould said. "This is my chance to leave something behind me, and that's kind of fun."

Auditions to be held

The UMass Department of Theater will be holding open auditions next week for Sophie Treadwell's Machinal and Beth Henley's Crimes of the Heart. Auditions will be held on Monday and Tuesday, Sept. 9 and 10, from 7-10 p.m. Auditions for Machinal will be in room 8 at the Fine Arts Center (FAC), and Crimes of the Heart auditions will be in room 204 in the FAC. Those wishing to audition must sign up for time slot. For further information, call the Department of Theater at 545-3490.

Teen Wolf, starring Fox, is a dog

At the beginning of this summer, Michael J. Fox (of NBC's Family Ties) blasted into the movie houses in the very entertaining science fiction comedy Back to the Future. However Fox leaves the movie houses this summer with a fizzle, or should I say a whimper)

In Teen Wolf, Fox plays another confused high school student who has his life changed by something very strange. No, it's not a time machine. This time Fox turns into a wolf. He becomes (are you ready for this?) a teenage werewolf.

Now this may sound familiar to people (like me) who watch a lot of a bad old movies on television. Teen Wolf is not a remake of I Was a Teen-age Werewolf which starred Michael (I-used-to-be-a-nice-guy-now-I'm-an-angel) Landon. When Fox turns into a wolf, he doesn't go around killing chickens and attacking fire hydrants. He does what any of us would do when faced with a similar situation. He plays basketball.

When Fox turns into a werewolf he becomes the school basketball star. Not only do his friends accept his as the werewolf, they think he is the greatest think since pockets. His best friend Stiles (Jerry Levine) makes a killing by selling T-Shirts with the werewolf's picture on them. Pamela (Lorie Griffin), the object of Fox's eternal lust takes a very physical interest in the werewolf. Oooh! The hussy!

Not everyone loves Fox as the wolf. The nasty principal (Jim McCrell) is out to get him. Fox's dear old dad (James Hampton) hopes these high school hijinks are just a phase in his son's adjustment to lycanthropy (assumption of the form or traits of a wolf) and Fox's female friend and true love Boof (Susan Ursitti) just loves Fox for himself (sob).

Teen Wolf tries to be a puberty parable but it doesn't really succeed. Fox is a little disturbed when his voice changes (to growls), when he gets hair on his chest (one general). And we're supposed to identify with this bozo? There is a sick trend in movies recently, which portrays the Vietnam vet as a walking timebomb who is still living the war. Stanley White would probably get along great with Chuck Norris and Rambo. He makes no distinction between Vietnamese and Chinese. He has transported his Vietnam paranoia to the streets of Chinatown, fighting and finally winning the war single handed.

The obligatory love interest in the film is impossible to because no one would like, much less fall in love with such a hemorrhoid as White. The leading lady is played by an Asian model named Ariane who looks good as long as she is just standing still but loses all credibility as a TV reporter the second she opens her mouth. Her voice is pretty wimpy for a reporter and her face pretty unexpressive for an actress. Also she lives in an incredible penthouse apartment that you could land a jet in.

Some people who have seen Year of the Dragon say the film isn't racist, but rather, about racism. If White were to be shown as the foolish bigot he is, then every characterization he makes about the Chinese in the film would be proven false. But this is not the case. The film shows all the Chinese as stupid, corrupt, violent, evil or at the very best, just amazingly incompetent. If a film does this, I call it racist.

The violence is unbelievable and at times just doesn't make sense. The entire film is a disappointing mess. But look at the bright side. If there is any justice in the world, there won't be another Michael Cimino film.

Before you make a long distance commitment, make sure you know what you're getting into.

If Fletcher Christian and Captain Bligh had known what being stuck in the same boat would mean, chances are neither would have set foot aboard.

And if you're stuck in the same boat with a long distance company that doesn't give you all the services you need, it's easy to harbor mutinous thoughts.

But when you pick AT&T as your long distance company, you know you're in for smooth sailing. You'll get trouble-free, reliable service. Immediate connections—even during the busiest hours. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate on state-to-state calls. And operators to assist you with immediate credit for wrong numbers and collect calling.

single strand seven inches long) and he has strange dreams about his friend Boof and some chickens. Fox stares into his bathroom mirror wondering what's going on when he suddenly starts to change. His face begins to pulsate and he groans rythmically. His father bangs on the bathroom door concerned about the groaning. When Fox opens the door he has hair not only on his palms but all over his body.

This may all seem pretty silly, but then again this is a silly movie. It is also a dull movie. It is not worth paying four dollars to see. It is entertaining but not that entertaining.

Try seeing it at a friend's house when it comes to HBO.

Minutemen look to open with a bang

UMass primes for opener against Morgan (0-for-13) State Saturday

"Every team needs a Morgan State on its schedule."

-Rick Taylor
-Former BU coach

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The standard of bad football in Division I-AA of the NCAA is Morgan State University.

The Bears have lost 13 straight games dating back to 1983. They were outscored 382-87 last season en route to an 0-11 season. They were shutout four times and never scored over 14 points. Three New England teams, Boston University, Yale and Connecticut, beat them by a combined 126-14. Delaware destroyed them 76-0. Their band, at least, is supposed to be good.

UMass, after two straight 3-8 seasons, is looking to take its frustrations out on somebody. The Minutemen haven't truly crushed a team since sacking New Hampshire 27-0 in 1982. Veteran players, tired of losing, want to start what has been labeled a promising season on a strong note. New players, eager to impress their coaches, want to make names for themselves. All signs point to a day in the Alumni Stadium (Saturday at 1:30) sun for UMass.

The voice of moderation however, is UM coach Bob Stull. The second-year head coach takes Morgan State seriously, overlooking their history of ineptness.

"As far as I'm concerned, they're Oklahoma," Stull said. "Hell, we were 3-8, so I can't say we're going to murder them just because they were 0-11. But we are a better team than we were last season."

Much better in fact. UMass will start 11 players who saw little or no action last year including two junior college transfers and five redshirts. Ten starters do return, including the entire defensive line and three defensive backs.

Freshman redshirt Dave Palazzi has beaten out senior Jim Simeone for the quarterback job and Stull said yesterday that he will give his new signal-caller a chance to show what he can do on Saturday.

"Dave is a big-play type of player, he might make some mistakes, but he may turn those mistakes into a long-gainer. He's a loose type of player who is very mobile and has a good arm. I'm confident having Jimmy back him up, but hopefully Dave will give us a great game."

Palazzi joins senior tailback George Barnwell in the backfield. The second leading rusher in the Yankee Conference last season with 931 yards, Barnwell is a big threat. Fullback Al Neri (6-2, 220) is a solid blocker and gives UMass a bigger third-and-short threat. Anthony Strickland, Ted Barrett and a group of freshmen give UMass great runningback depth.

On the flanks, UMass will go with junior college transfer Lonny Brock at split end and senior John Crowley at flanker. Both are quick and if given the ball, will make things happen.

On the line, Ted Toffey (TE), John Benzinger (T), Peter Montini (C), Sheldon Hardison (G), Stan Kaczorowski (G), and Mike Briggs (T) have great size, but need to play together to be effective.

Defensively, UMass will go with the tested trio of Ed Sullivan, Bruce Strange and Mike Dwyer up front. The linebackers will be Paul Manganaro (back from an injury), Todd Rundle, Steve Silva and John McKeown. The secondary will be Chris Wood, Carlos Silva, Bob Shelmire and co-captain (along with Barnwell) Paul Platek.

The special teams will see punter Jim Tandler return (with a 36 yard average) and kicker Silvio Bonvini, a freshman. Reserves who will figure into the game include Tom Cioppa (SE), Dan Sullivan (LB), Vito Perrone (LB), Andrew Thomas (CB), Duckworth Grange (CB), and Kirk Williams (S).

"I want to run our offense, play our regular defense and see what we can do," Stull said. "I'm confident we will do well."

Morgan State, as the above statistics indicate, is terrible, but they are dangerous. Losing streaks have to be broken sometime. The Bears average only 230 on the defensive line and 227 offensively. As a comparison, UMass is 250 and 248. State's only real threat is running back Alphonso Harris. He rambled for 737 yards last season and had a 100 yard run against UConn. Morgan State will start 13 sophomores or freshmen and has 13 freshmen on second teams.

"We have a lot of respect for the program at UMass. We are up against A-1 competition," said first-year head coach Jesse Thomas. "We're going to stick together."

The prediction: UMass 42 Morgan State 0. The Minutemen rule for the first time in a while. Palazzi throws well, Barnwell gets over 100 yards and Stull thinks back to when Washington (his old team) used to cripple teams.

UM vs. Morgan State

Records: UMass is 0-0, Morgan State is 0-1, losing 35-0 to Delaware State.

The Series: UMass leads 1-0 with a 38-7 victory in 1978.

Streaks: UMass won its last game, closing out 1984 with a 14-10 victory over New Hampshire. Morgan State has lost 13 straight dating back to 1983.

Injuries: UMass tight-end Mike Kelley will not start with a separated shoulder. UMass fullback Frank Fay is recovering from a knee operation and also will not play. Morgan State is injury free.

Keys for UMass: Offensively, UMass will look to freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi to run a more wide-open offense featuring increased use of the option. Lonny Brock (SE), Al Neri (FB), George Barnwell (TB) and John Crowley (FL) are talented offensive players who need to get the ball. Defensively, UM is much improved and injury free. The front line should be able to control the line of scrimmage while the linebackers and secondary need to contain Morgan State tailback Alphonso Harris.

Keys for Morgan State: The Bears are physically overmatched, and must play a mistake-free game to win. They are young and will have to play over their heads to have any chance.

Players to watch: UMass has several junior college transfers (Brock, Neri and FB Anthony Strickland) that should open up the offense. Safety Bob Shelmire, a former FB, is a good hitter. Linebackers Steve Silva and John McKeown are also hard tacklers. The defensive line of Ed Sullivan, Bruce Strange and big Mike Dwyer (6-2, 275) should rule the trenches. Morgan State's only player of note is RB Alphonso Harris.

Sophomore tailback Ted Barrett and the rest of the University of Massachusetts football team take on Morgan State on Saturday at 1:30.

Correction

In Wednesday's edition of the Collegian, the headline on the front page of the sports section was supposed to have read "UMass returns to athletic spotlight." In Thursday's Collegian, the headline on page 12 was to have read "Palazzi tabbed as QB Starter". These errors were due to problems on the production end.

Chris Kocot and the University of Massachusetts field hockey team face Virginia on Sunday in Springfield.

Field Hockey opens with Virginia

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The Marvelous Marvin Haglers of field hockey, the University of Massachusetts, will be looking to "dominate" the University of Virginia in its opener on Sunday at Springfield College.

UMass, ranked seventh in pre-season polls, will field a quicker team than last season, thanks to the addition of several talented freshmen and transfer Lisa Griswold.

"We're quicker than last season, and I think we'll score more goals," coach Pam Hixon said. "They're (Virginia) a good team, but I think we can dominate them. We don't have any problems. We're a physically better team than we have been in the past."

UMass beat Virginia 3-2 in regulation last season. The Cavs went to the NCAA tournament, losing to Old Dominion in the second round. ODU went on to the title.

Key players for UMass include Griswold, sophomore forward Tonia Kennedy, defender Megan Donnelly, midfielder Chris Kocot, and freshman Kathy DeAngelis. Other important returnees include Erin Caniff, Judy Morgan, Julie Stuart, Ruth Vasapolli, Pam Bustin, Lil Hultin and Amy Robertson.

The game will be at Springfield College at 11 a.m.

Minutemen rip Morgan State, 39-8

Freshman quarterback stars in UM opener

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It has been a long time coming for the University of Massachusetts.

Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi ran for three touchdowns and threw for one more to lead the Minutemen to a 38-9 pounding of Morgan State on Saturday before 11,918 at Alumni Stadium.

"I felt that last season we lost a lot of pride and confidence, this is an indication that we're on the road back," senior nose guard Mike Dwyer said. "It felt damn good to beat up on somebody."

Morgan State, losers of 14 straight, proved little challenge to the fired-up Minutemen as UMass rolled up 24 unanswered points to break open a tight 14-9 game late in the first quarter.

"We played a good solid game," said UMass coach Bob Stull. The defense dominated the game for us, we were all over the ball. Of course, Palazzi played well, too."

Palazzi, a 6-2, 198 pounder from Leominster, was red-shirted last season and beat out two-year starter JimSimeone for Saturday's start. He responded with two touchdown runs of 36 yards and one of seven yards. He also threw an eight-yard scoring pass to fullback Al Neri. Palazzi ended up 9-of-19 for 81 yards. He carried the ball nine times for 87 yards.

"I was exciteed to be out there contributing to the win," Palazzi said. "I tried my hardest, the coaches called it (the plays) and I just did my job. It felt great to score."

For UMass, it was the most points in a game since 1980, when they handed Delaware State a 39-0 defeat. The Minutemen have now won two straight, including the final game in 1984, when they beat New Hampshire, 14-10. Both Stull and his players were quick to draw parallels to the two games.

"We realized what kind of team we have when we beat UNH," co-captain Paul Platek said. "We came together in that game and played as a unit. With the quality of new players we have this season and a continuation of the way we play against UNH, I think this team can go places.

It's a good sign, to play well in the first game," Stull said. "But we have a lot to do, there are some great teams on our schedule, and I guarantee you they'll be much tougher than Morgan State."

Keverian supports hockey rink

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Making his first trip to the University since 1970, George Keverian, speaker of the state House of Representatives, Saturday said he would continue to support all aspects of higher education, including allocating money to build a hockey rink on campus.

"We'll do all we have to do to keep it going," Keverian said of the University. "UMass has a warm place in my heart."

Keverian's comments came during a guided bus tour of campus. He was accompanied by Rep. William D. Mullins, D-Ludlow, vice chairman of the Massachusetts House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, Rep. Carmen Buell, D-Greenfield, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, his wife Anne Wexler, his staff and 16 University students.

Keverian was visiting Amherst as the keynote speaker at a brunch sponsored by the Amherst Democratic Town Committee. After delivering his speech to more than 200 supporters, he was asked by Duffey and Collins, former chairman of the House Joint committee on Education, to tour the campus with the students.

"We have a great deal of pride in our state University," Keverian said during his speech, characterized mostly by his story telling humor. "Anything we have done on the part of education has been part of the Democratic tradition."

University students from Ludlow, Mullin's district, and Everett, Keverian's district, were invited by Duffey to a breakfast at his residence and then taken by bus to the brunch at St. Brigid's Church Parish Hall on Prospect Street.

Before boarding the bus, the students were told by Duffey his plan to take Keverian and other officials through campus.

"Mr. Keverian is a friend of this University," Duffey said. "And we wanted him to have an opportunity to see the campus and the best way for him to see it is with the students."

"Everybody's a lobbyist today," Wexler, a lobbyist herself, added.

During the tour, when asked about the fact that the campus lacks an ice rink facility and ice hockey team, Keverian said he only recently became aware there is no program and said he would support building a facility.

Duffey told Keverian that the ice hockey rink, which is currently under review, was not the University's top priority. He said an estimated $100 million worth of deferred maintenance must come first.

"I support a rink," Keverian said. "But apparently the chancellor is not as interested."

Town to redraw voting precincts

By JIM PATRIQUIN
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst Board of Selectmen is redrawing voting precinct lines in an effort to comply with a state order to include college students in the town's population.

This year's state census was the first since a 1978 state constitutional amendment was adopted requiring towns to count students as full-time residents, much like the federal census.

About 11,000 students on the University of Massachusetts and Amherst College campuses will be divided into precincts and combined with non-student residents because of concerns that students will not participate in Town Meetings and that not all-student precincts would be represented at meetings during school vacations, Selectman Richard Minear said.

The UMass campus will be divided into five voting precincts. One precinct will include Northeast and Sylvan dormitories. Central, Orchard Hill and Village Park Apartments and certain fraternities and sororities will be divided into two other precincts. The Southwest Residential Area will also be divided into two precincts.

Banned Books Week begins

By DAVID BRITAIN
Collegian Staff

This week is National Banned Books Week, a tribute to America's right to read sponsored by various library and publisher's associations.

The number of attempts to ban books has tripled every year for the last five years according to Rich Morrill, author of several articles on banned books. Attempts to remove books from library shelves and school classrooms have come mainly from right wing groups and new religious groups that have become popular in the last ten years, Morrill said.

According to a 1984 New Yorker magazine article, the four groups most involved in trying to ban certain books are: the John Birch Society, the Parent Teacher Association, the American Legion and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The move to ban certain books has reached the courts and in 1982 the Supreme Court delivered its first verdict on the subject. In Pico vs. The Island Tree School District, the court ruled the "School Board cannot remove books simply because they do not like the ideas contained in the books. The school board's discretion is not absolute."

Morrill said the court cases have only dealt with attempts to remove books already in use and the ordering of books has not been questioned yet.

The issue is a question of children's rights, "Who should decide what our children are taught? Parents, teachers or school boards," he said.

John Brigham Associate Professor of political science said professors, teachers and librarians control the libraries and classrooms. "The fight is not over censorship, but over what books we want to read," Brigham said.

According to the New Yorker magazine, the top ten books protested are:

- Go Ask Alice
- Catcher in the Rye
- Our Bodies, Ourselves
- Forever
- Of Mice and Men
- A Hero Ain't Nothin But a Sandwich
- My Darling, My Hamburger
- Slaughterhouse-Five
- Grapes of Wrath
- Huckleberry Finn

The Jones Library in Amherst will display the books and show Books Under Fire, a 60-minute film dealing with censorship in schools and featuring interviews with proponents of censorship and those fighting against book banning.

The issue is a question of children's rights. "Who should decide what our children are taught? Parents, teachers or school boards?"

Thai coup resisted; Bangkok stable

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Thai air force officers attempted to overthrow the governemnt in a coup this morning but ran into opposition from the powerful army, according to local journalists.

They said army tanks had moved into positions around Bangkok's Government House, the public information department and the grounds of the royal palace.

The reporters said they had received unconfirmed reports that the air force commander, Gen. Prapan Dhupatemiya, had been arrested.

Activity appeared normal in Bangkok's streets, with people going to their jobs or shopping, and there was no announcement on official Radio Thailand.

The reported coup attempt came with the country's two most powerful figures abroad. Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanonda is in Jakarta, Indonesia for bilateral talks while the armed forces supreme commander, Gen. Arthit Kamlang-Ek is touring Western Europe.

Reagan to propose trade sanctions against South African government

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan, faced with overwhelming pressure from Congress, intends to announce limited economic sanctions against South Africa today, including a desire to ban the sale of gold Krugerrands, congressional sources said yesterday.

These sources also said Reagan would announce a ban on most new bank loans to South Africa, order a halt tot the shipment of nuclear technology and stop large-scale sales of computer equipment used to enforce South Africa's racially discriminatory apartheid laws.

Speaking on conditions they no0t be identified, the sources also said REagan would announce requirements for most American firms in South Africa to follow fair employment practices and would make available expanded U.S. aid for South AFrican black students.

The expected announcement would mark a shift in Reagan's long-held policy of "constructive engagement" a low-key effort of negotiations that the president said on Friday offered the best hope of accomplishing political reform in South Africa.

Secretary of State George Shultz informed senior Republican congressional leades on Saturday of Reagan's intentions.

In response, Senate GOP leaders have decided to seek a delay in the expected passage of sanctions legislation.

Senate Republican leaders predicted last week that a vote to cut off fillibuster on the House-passed sanctions bill would have been successful today, followed by the measure's final passage later in the week.

Members of both parties in both houses of Congress said a threatened presidential veto would almost certainly be overridden.

President Botha rejects talks with S. African rebel group

JOHANNESBURG, South Afric (AP)—President P.W. Botha said yesterday it would be disloyal for a group of this country's leading business executives to meet with the African National Congress, and flatly rejected talks with the outlawed black guerrilla movement.

In new violence, police reported that they killed two blacks overnight during fierce anti-apartheid rioting near Cape Town.

Police said earlier they killed one black as youths ranpaged through Cape Town's Guguletu black township following a funeral LSaturday for 11 riot victims. Later they said police shot a second black man to death.

That brought to at least 31 the toll of people killed around Cape Town since the government banned an Aug. 28 march demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, former ANC president imprisoned 21 years ago for plotting sabotage.

Two police officers were injured in the Guguletu violence that killed the two blacks, aged 19 and 28, were killed, police said.

The townships were reported quiet Sunday, a police spokesman said.

Rapport, an Afrikaana Sunday newspaper which supports the white-minority government, reported that top South African business people will go to Lusaka, Zambia, for talks with ANC leaders. It said President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia helped organize the talks, and that Gavin Relly will lead the executives. Relly is head of Anglo American, South Africa's largest mining corporation.

English-language newspapers have carried similar reports. Relly's office has refused comment. Reports have also said the executives will go to Lusaka with Botha's blessing.

Botha acknowledged in a statement issued in the captial, Pretoria, that a "leading South African" suggested the plan to him a few weeks a go. He did not identify the person.

"I strongly advised against it," said Botha. "As long as the ANC is under communist leadership and supports violence in South Africa, there cna be no question of me approving discussions with them."

Budget climbing, lawmakers say

State Democrats Saturday expressed optimism about the current fiscal 1986 budget for the University of Massachusetts and said they expected an even better year for the University in 1987.

"UMass did very well this year," said Williams Mullins, D-Hampden, vice chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "The total budget saw an average rise of 13 to 14 percent."

Mullins said that increase amounts to close to $14 million more than last year.

"I happen to be a great believer in higher education," Mullins, a former Ludlow high school government teacher said. "I attribute the booming (Mass.) economy to the great higher education in the state, bothe public and private."

Mullins, visiting Amherst to speak at a Town Democratic Committee fundraiser, toured the UMass campus along with House Speaker George Keverian, Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, Rep. Carmen Buell, D-Greenfield, Chancellor Joseph Duffey, his wife Anne Wexler, Duffey's staff and 16 UMass students.

Speaking during one of the stops in the tour, Collins, former co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Education and a graduate of the University, said he is also pleased with the latest budget.

"What the University needs to do now is provided a five-year budget plan to move to first nationally," Collins said., "We tend to think year to year. WE've got to present to the legislature the big picture."

District Commission. Another redistricting plan must be sent to the commission by Sept. 16.

The board's dealings with the commission have been positive, according to Minear.

"The issue here is the logical lines we've used before that the state no longer finds acceptable," he said.

On the former precinct map there are "imaginary lines," such as property lines, and not the state requires well-defined limits such as streets or power lines, Minear said.

"Well-defined precinct limits are important in determining which residents live in which precinct," said David Sullivan, legal counsel to the State Elections Commission. This is part of an effort to get some congruency between the local and federal census bureaus."

Mullins, who as vice chairman of Ways and Means is responsible for much of the funds allocated to the state's 29 public colleges was referred to by Collins as the "unsung hero of education."

"The future of UMass will rely a great deal on the efforts of Bill Mullins," Collins said.

Mullins said Saturday he strongly favors building a rink.

Currently, an outside consultant has been hired by the University to investigate all possibilities of adding a sports facility to the campus.

"Forget the study," Mullins said. "The money to build is coming."

Collins, co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Education when Thomas McGee was speaker, was stripped of his position last year, when Keverian returned to the leadership position after a lengthy political battle.

Everywoman's Center to offer support groups

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Women seeking advice on problems they may be facing this fall will have their questions answered when the Everywoman's Center begins arranging support groups open to all community and University women, their partners and families.

"Our goal is to bring people together with the same type of problem to show them that these feelings and their specific problem is shared by others and that we can offer them help with what's troubling them," said Mary Aubrey, coordinator of Counseling Services for the center, who is facilitating the program.

The new program offers both short-term and long-term counseling on homesickness a problem Aubrey says almost every first-year student encounters and has a "difficult time dealing with." EWC also deals with the tolice of eating dieorders, counsels those confused about their sexuality, gives advice to both heterosexual and homosexual couples who are experiencing difficulties in their relationship and discusses sexual harassment issues.

"The issue of family separation is one where we let those dealing with the problem know that these feelings are normal. We encourage them to seek out as many resources as they can on campus; to find others in their position and talk with them," Aubrey said.

3She tells those planning to flee campus to stop and pick up the phone instead.

"It's better that they stay in contact with those at home, but to truly invest themselves here. It's important for them to realize that these feelings will pass; that in a month or so they will feel much better," she said.

So that the center may work with those suffering from anorexia nervosa, bulima and convulsive eating habits, EWC has a "link-up" with the University Health Center so they may confer with doctors and nutritionists there.

Aubrey said the incidences of eating disorders, which most commonly affect women, are escalating rapidly and current theories tend to focus on society pressuring women to "look and act a certain way."

"This is the age a woman most often worries about how they're going to look compared to others and if they will fit in," Aubrey said.

J. Robert Smyth, Jr., professor of veterinary and animal sciences, has received the Poultry Science Association Merck Research Award. Smyth received the $1500 award for distinctive research contributions to poultry science advancement. He has taught poultry science and animal genetics at UMass since 1949.

Neal R. Shipley has been named associate dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts. Shipley, an associate history professor, will replace Lee Edwards, who is returning to teach in the English department.

Officials of General Electric will present Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey with a check for $100,000 tomorrow morning as part of an ongoing microwave research project.

The check is the second installment in GE's $200,000 commitment to support microwave research. The University received the initial $100,000 in January.

Scientific community to greet discoverers of Titanic shipwreck

WOODS HOLE (AP)—An admiral, hundreds of oceanography workers, helium balloons and possibly a fife-and-drum band are expected on the docks of this tiny seaport today to greet the 25 scientists who found the remains of the might ocean liner Titanic.

"I would certainly like to be there wehn their ship pulls in and I can image so would everybody else," said Nancy Green, a spokeswoman for the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution whosee researchers led the expedition that found the 73-year-old shipwreck.

More than 1,500 passengers went down with the Titanic, beleived to be unsinkable until an iceberg slashed a 300-foot hole in its steel-armored hull on its maiden voyage. Other passengers were rescued from the liner's lifeboats, which could fit only 700.

The ship was found Sept.1 about 560 miles off Newfoundland in water about 2½ miles deep.

The discovery, made while researchers were testing a remote-control submersible or unmanned submarine being developed for the U.S. Navy, was "the biggest thing ever to hit this office," said Gordon Glass, executive assistant at the institute, the largest private center of its kind in the nation.

"It is excellent proof of the technology we developed," said John Steele, director of the 55-year-old insititute. "It demonstrates just what this country can do underwater."

Ms. Green said most of the institute's 900 employees would be at the dock this afternoon to meet the U.S. Navy research ship Knorr and its 25 researchers, including 15 from Woods Hole and three from the French Institute for Research and Exploitation.

Paul Dudley Hart, institute director of planning, had said Saturday that bad weather and a short swing off course could delay the ship. But it appeared to be on schedule late Saturday night and a delay was unlikely, Hart said.

The ship left the Titanic site Thursday morning.

Marjorie Ballard, wife of expediton leader Bob Ballard, said she would bring hundreds of helium balloons and confetti.

Ballard heads the lab that designed Argo, the little submersible that carried floodlights and sensitive television cameras to film gaping holes in the Titanci's hull and luggage strewn about the wreck.

Back to the UMass mess

Bob Kievra

It is early September in Amherst. This sleepy town has awoken from it's summer hibernation and is in the midst of surviving the onslaught of more than 25,000 students, practically doubling the size of this Pioneer Valley community. Dickinson has been tranformed into something resembling the Bay of Pigs fiasco. There are bodies strewn everywhere. The survivors are camped out in distant dorms flashing out SOS's and waiting for help from Whitmore.

To those students still without a room to call home, take heart. The University has flown in specialists to deal with this crisis. Housing Services has hired the same people who handled the Cuban boat people flotilla a few years ago. Be prepared for citizenship examinations, language tests, and innoculations.

Once you've found a home for yourself, the next step for many students is finding a place to park their cars. There are plenty of parking lots and spaces located around campus. Unfortunately you can't park in any of them. They are all advisers who never show up for their appointments. Do not be deceived. Although the parking areas may look empty, they are theoretically full. Before you take the chance and park in the lot, keep in mind the dreaded UMass security forces. Nothing will prompt a faster response than an illegally parked a car. More serious matter such as stolen stereos take time.

For those of you still in the process of adding a class, a few words of advice are in store. Read any good book on the invasion of Normandy. Storming Omaha Beach was easier then enrolling in a COINS course. Many local chapters of the NRA provide weekend training for overcoming armed hostility. Plan on taking one if you ever expect to get into a business course.

If you have yet to visit one of the University's fine dining establishments, consider yourself lucky. Plans are in the works to rename Franklin Dining Commons in memory of Karen Carpenter. Food services specializes in such anorexic dishes as roast top round of soybean and sweet'n and sour sandpaper. If classes prevent you from eating during dining hours, the University operates the ill-named Munchy's for your pleasure. There you can get the same left over past and quarantined chicken for three times the price.

Everyone likes to tell stories about catastrophes. Almost every family in the country had a relative aboard the Titanic, or a loved one killed on Mt. Saint Helens. No need for any UMass alumni to tell such tall tales. We're forced to survive three to four of these disasters every day.

So grit your teeth, and join the rest of the student body as we endeavor to survive these first few weeks at UMass. Keep in mind that it's not everyday that you have the opportunity to see 25,000 people behaving strangely for days on end. Unless, of course, you've been to a Springsteen concert lately.

While you were gone, local activities (gasp!) continued

Elizabeth Luciano

It has happened again, just as it does every year around Labor Day. After spending the summer in Amherst, I was illogically taken by surprise when the town suddenly filled up. So, for those of you who did not summer in the valley's proverbial verdant pastures, here's a synopsis of what you missed:

While you were gone, work actually progressed on the Library Tower. Now, the question is, when will they finish?

While you were gone, the funky mural behind Douglass Funeral Home was completed.

While you were gone, the Rusty Nail burned down.

While you were gone, I took the World's Most Boring D Core, a mid-level political science course. Boring, as in Yawn City. Recommended only for insomniacs and students who don't know better.

While you were gone, they plowed a new field at Amherst High School. It looks like a soccer field, but it's actually a drainage system, so the baseball field doesn't turn into a rice field.

While you were gone, there was room to move on the Pub's bathmat sized dance floor. (Okay, I crack on the place, but I always have fun when I go there.)

While you were gone, the campus went dry. Guess I'll be having fun at the Pub a little more often.

While you were gone, Barts began offering a frozen dessert made from soybean curd; iced tofu, if you will.

While you were gone, the monstrosity of an eyesore called the Tucker Taft Building opened, complete with Steve's and D'Angelo's.

While you were gone, the University Store put all of their merchandise in different aisles. Of course, they switch everything as often as the rest of us change our underwear.

While you were gone, my roomate and I tried to go to Tanglewood. We made a few stops on the way; the package store, the supermarket, a friend's house, and the gas station. We finally got to Tanglewood at 10:30 p.m. So we bought T-shirts and went home.

While you were gone, I worked out exactly four times.

While you were gone, laundry had to be done the expensive way, in the laundromat, because the dorms were closed.

While you were gone, the Drake closed and they auctioned off the furnishing. One of my friends was lucky enough to get a bar stool.

While you were gone, my ATM card got used a lot less often, because you weren't here to go out with.

Oh, yeah, while you were gone, I really missed you.

Apartheid is the real issue

John Hanlon

In a recent column, Stephen Erikson attempted to place the ills of South Africa in perspective by comparing them to the Soviet Union. I hardly feel blessed by this gift. He argued that liberals and progessives were soft on the Soviets while being overly sensitive to the political problems facing South Africa. However, Stephen Erikson, along with Jerry Falwell, Robert Novak, and others miss the point. The issue is not communism, but apartheid. Comparing South Africa to the Soviet Union simply clouds the issue, leads away from the essential problem, and creates an atmosphere that precludes reasoned and rational argument.

The Soviet Union is a world power equal in stature to the United States. Due to the cool relations between both countries, it is difficult for the United States to significantly influence the internal policies of the Soviet Union. Though the Soviet government employs certain policies of which the United States is critical, relations must be maintained between these two nations in order to reduce the threat of nuclear war. Finally, the Left need not expend its energies criticizing the Soviet Union; President Reagan is sufficently expert in that endeavor.

South Africa, however, presents different possibilities. As a less powerful nation that is within the sphere of the United States, South Africa is susceptible to pressures both political and economic. For some time, President Reagan has pursued policies of quiet diplomacy and constructive engagement without much success. At this point economic pressure against South Africa is not unjustified. If the United States is to assert its moral leadership in the world, it must act decisively against apartheid in South Africa. Failure to do so will send strong signals throughout the globe, both to emerging nations attempting to develop their own identity and to entrenched despots who will recognize that they need not fear the United States when it speaks of freedom and justice.

The United States must recognize the situation in South Africa for what it is, a struggle for power and justice. For once, we should hope that the United States will support the advocates of change and the forces of history. Finally, the Left need not apologize for its criticisms of South Africa and its calls for divestiture and economic sanctions. Rather, it is for the Right to recognize that constructive engagement leads nowhere and that their restraint in criticizing South Africa's policy of apartheid only strengthens the resolve of the Botha government to continue its present course which may result in a bloody civil war.

Roommate's dilemma: romance

I truly feel sorry for those who lack housing this semester. There is no getting around the fact that they have problems, but picture this if you can. You spend the money for housing, get a room, and then still find that you can't use it. Anybody who has been here for even a short amount of time know's what I'm talking about. All your room needs is a bed and a sexually active roommate. Not an overactive one mind you, just an active one.

It usually starts out innocently enough. First he or she will be merely talking to amember of the opposite sex. Suddenly you look up from tomorrow's calculus assignment, and see one of them straddling the other's back giving them a massage. At this point it is usually appropriate to leave the room.

Now starts the painful waiting period. In the beginning it's easy to find other things to do. You might travel from room to room playing a video game here, listening to a song there, but eventually these people will kick you out in favor of sleep.

When that last door closes you realize that you are truly alone. You might wonder if your roomate's nocturnal visitor has left yet, but in order to find out, the door must be opened. At this point in the night though it's just too early to risk it. Few things in life are more embarrassing than walking in on a budding romance.

The next stop is the television lounge for some Late Night viewing. Usually someone doing laundry has arrived there before you and is watching the CBS Late Movie, which,by the way isn't even a movie.

After suffering through two hours of Simon and Simon re-runs, its time to make a move. You walk briskly to the stairs or elevator and eventually make it back to the room. You try to open the door quietly, but it creeks a little. Its too dark to see anything, but you do hear some giggling which stops with the door's noise.

You pull your head out and close the door close knowing you're beaten. The lounge is the only place left to go. You make your way there slowly, head hung low in defeat. Choosing the most comfortable chairs available you place them together, lie down, and go to sleep dreaming about all those lucky people in the campus hotel who never got housing.

ARTS

Arts around UMass this week...

artslines...

First on the agenda for this week's Artslines is a warm "Welcome Back" to the Academy of Music, in Northampton. Said movie theater (which also offers live productions, on occasion), has been closed for several months while undergoing renovations, and re-opened last Friday night with 'Prizzi's Honor. Northampton arts enthusiasts organized and attended benefits throughout the summer. More on that later this week...

Also in the dramatic vein, the UMass Department of Theater will be holding auditions in rooms 8 and 204, respectively. Aspiring thespians should sign up for an audition time. Call 545-3490 for further information...

And that's not all that's going on at the FAC this week. The Center celebrates its tenth anniversary 10 a.m.-4 p.m. Thursday, Sept. 12, with everything from hot-air balloon rides to the UMass Minuteman Marching Band to a giant cake facsimile of the FAC. (The real FAC, in case you were wondering, was constructed with 300,000 square feet of concrete, among other things. (Note that for future trivia contests). That'll be taking place between the Concert Hall and the Rand Theater, so stroll by on your way to class...

And if you're in that neighborhood at around 3 p.m., check out the dedication of the University Gallery's outdoor sculpture, "Isle of View," (say it aloud), by George Trakas. Said sculpture is located at the south end of the Campus Pond, and is part of the gallery's "Ten" exhibit, marking their first decade. Happy birthday to you...

For those of you who like to travel, Mount Holyoke College's art museum is currently presenting "An Architect's Eye: Selections from the Collection of Graham Gund." Tuesday, Sept. 10, at 4 p.m., in Gamble Auditorium, there will be a lecture about the exhibit. A reception will follow. The show runs through November 10, so jump on a PVTA bus and check out the foliage on the other side of the Notch...

Folks who are happier close to home may want to sing, dance, or play the piano under the direction of the Performing Arts Division, in Old Chapel. Registration is today through Thursday, Sept. 19, 8:30 a.m.-6 p.m. in Old Chapel. Classes will begin the week of Sept. 30 and run for ten weeks...

Lone Justice is set to rock the Student Union Ballroom Saturday night, care of UPC. The dB's will also be appearing.

Those of yhou who'd rather watch the professionals rock and roll will be psyched to get tickets for the Lone Justice concert on Saturday, Sept. 14. Brought to the Student Union Ballroom by the Union Program Council (UPC), this rockabilly quintet will appear with the dB's. Tickets are $9 for the general public, $7 for UMass students, and are avialble at the FAC Box Office and Datatix locations in Northampton, Greenfield, Holyoke and Pittsfield.

And last but not least, animal lovers will want to stop by the Student Union Art Gallery (located in the Student Union Building, appropriately enough), to catch the opening of "Art for Animals," a multimedia exhibit that opens Sunday, Sept. 15, 4-7 p.m. with a vegetarian reception. This week, you can still stop by to see works by UMass art professor John Grillo.

New World Theater releases schedule

UMass' New World Theater has released it's schedule for the Fall 1985 season.

The company's season will open with David Henry Hwang's Dance and the Railroad, Sept. 19-21 and 26-28, in Hampden Theater at 8 p.m. The show is set in 1867, during the Chinese railroad workers' strike.

In Living Color, a group of one-act plays by modern third world playrights, will run Nov. 14-16 and 21-23, at 8 p.m. in Hampden Theater.

Jomandi, a professional black theater company, will present Voices in the Rain on Saturday, Dec. 14, in Bowker auditorium at 8 p.m. The performance includes works by Gwendolyn Brooks, Sterling Brown, Sonia Sanchez, and Ralph Ellison.

Tickets are $4 for the general public, $2 for students, and can be reserved at the Fine Arts Center Box Office. Call 545-2511 for further information.

Record round-up...

Picks and pans from here and there

By ELIZABETH LANGLOIS
Collegian Correspondent

Well, the summer season isn't quite over even if we all know fall semester is now a reality. What have you listened to music-wise in all your little towns across the heartland of Massachusetts and elsewhere? Here are a few of the releases that got noticed in this area over the summer, some of which continue to dominate alternative airwaves.

First off is Hoboken, NJ's Winter Hours with their self-titled Ep produced by Rob Norris of the Bongos. Featuring ex-Turbine guitarist Mike Carlucci on dual lead guitar and a vocalist who sounds not a little like Michael Stipe, this band enchants througout this four song release. Word has it that more is forthcoming with Hyacinth Girl included, perhaps this qunitet's best song. From Texas comes Zeitgeist with their debut, Translate Slowly, another success in the long line of jangly guitar bands. The heady Things Don't Change should be a single. We also have New Haven's Valley of Kings debut. A strong guitar-propelled sound with somewhat disembodied vocals and an aura of mystery. Compelling! There is also Boston's delightful lifeboat with an EP produced by none other than Don Dixon. Lifeboat doesn't dissapoint with Family Town. Definitely a band to watch. Finally is the fine third albumn from Translator which has gone unnoticed, compared to their first release. Too bad folks! It's their best. At times they sound like Television, and they are one of the best of the entire crop of California bands. From New Song to Inside Mind Translator delivers the goods.

Homestead Records has been raving about the Volcano Suns. The Volcano Suns are a powerful hard-edged band just teetering on the brink of pandemonium and jagged edges. However, there is melody throughout this albumn, and I would swear they owe a debt to the Amboy Dukes' Journey to the Center of the Mind on Descent into Hell. Interesting bunch of blokes. Finally on this shore are the Raveups with Positively Lost Me, a direct nod in the direction of XTC with its quirky music and singer's Andy Partridge vocal mannerisms. A neat winner!

Now for our British friends: 1985 brought about the break up of England's great Barracudas. But they left us two compilations. The World's a Burn and The Big Gap both bring collections of some previously hard-to-find singles. A hard band to classify, they have sounded like everyone from the Byrds on a dark day to the Ramones fronting the Beach Boys. I, for one, will miss them. Kate Bush, lauded songstress and performer extraordinaire, has a new single called Running up the Hill. Go for the B side, "Under the Ivy", and hope that her album is as pretty as that B side. If so, once again Ms. Bush will prove what a unique talent she has. The Damned released their first album since the great Captain Sensible's departure. It's called Phantasmagoria and is now out on import. It's full of fine melodies and gothic overtones. A bit lacking in some ways, but it's still pretty. Blue in Heaven has released All the God's Men, a fine effort which abounds with neat tunes and sounds like everyone from the Comsat Angels to the Sound at their heyday. Speaking of the Comsat (or C.S.) Angels, they released an album called 7 Day Weekend, their bid for commercial acceptance. It seems that once more they're being ignored. A shame, because although this album is a mixed bag, there are some stellar tunes here, from High Tide to You Move Me. Word has it that the Hoodoo Gurus have a new single out called Bittersweet backed with Guitars from Mars, a tentative title of their upcoming second album. Nick Mason of Pink Floyd, and Rick Fenn have a neat new album called Profiles. Largely comprised of jazzy instrumentals, it's pretty impressive. David Gilmour does guest vocals. Also of interest is Stewart Copeland's The Rhythmatist, which features exotic percussions and other world rhythms. Check htis stuff out. It's all worth your while.

Festival for the disabled stresses awareness, ability

By MARGIE KELLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Creative art is one aspect of a handicapped person's life in which one's disability is not always evident in one's work. The Amherst Arts Council and Stavros, Inc. displayed this last Saturday at the Bangs Community Center, Amherst, with a doy-long art festival for disabled artsist from surrounding communities.

"Access to the Arts" focused on offering opportunities for persons who are disabled to show their works and express themselves through the visual arts.

The exhibits included oil paintings, pottery, watercolors, handmade afghans, wall-hangings and ceramics. In all, there were approximately 25 exhibits by 17 individual artists, and a small group of artists from the Amherst Nursing Home.

In addition to the exhibits, there was a lecture entitled "on Being Your Best," which addressed the issues pertaining to the handicapped, and how art can create greater awareness and sensitivity among all people. Also there was a short video presentation on wheelchair square-dancing, followed by a demonstration.

"Access to the Arts" was the first festival of its kind in the Pioneer Valley. THe sponsors of the program welcome input from the community. For further information, contact the center.

El Salvadore photos displayed at Hampshire

"Inside El Salvadore," a photography exhibit exploring daily life in El Salvadore, will be on display in Hampshire College's Library Gallery through Friday, Sept. 27.

Thirty photo-journalists from periodicals including Time, Life, Newsweek and The New York Times contributed to the black-and-white exhibition documenting life in El Salvadore following the 1979 military coup.

The photos were originally collected for the book, El Salvadore; Work of 30 Photographers. The book is available at the Hampshire College Bookstore.

The exhibit is being sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies, the Five College Latin American Studies Program, and Hampshire College's Third World and Feminist Studies Program.

The exhibit is open to the public Monday-Friday, 10:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., and Sundays, 2-5 p.m.

Clarification

The photo of the park under construction in Southwest, which ran on page 13 of last Friday's paper, was taken by Collegian photo editor Derek Roberts.

The review of "Teen Wolf," also on page 13, was written by Collegian correspondent Don Lipper.

★Palazzi

"We knew Dave would make a few mistakes, but he also made a few great plays. He's very mobile and eventually his passing will improve. I liked what I saw."

For the game, Palazzi completed nine of 19 passes for 81 yards including an eight yard touchdown toss to junior fullback Al Neri. He also had an interception.

More important was his rushing, picking up 63 yards and three touchdowns, two fo 36 yards apiece and the other of seven yards. Palazzi wasn't perfect, however, fumbling pitches to running backs on several occasions.

"I don't think they were much of a problem," he said. "They just happen sometime."

"We can always get his passing to improve," Stull said. "The option is the type of offense where people are prone to making mistakes. Dave just has to stay consistent and do what he does best. Passing gets better in time. The offense always starts slower than the defense does early in the season."

His longest completion was for only 14 yards and though Stull is confident that the accuracy of Palazzi's arm will improve, Palazzi must prove himself a successful passer before UMass faces the iron in its schedule.

But if Saturday's game was a good indication of his composure, it could be a good season for the Minutemen. Palazzi is new, he's expected to make mistakes, but he knows better than anyone that he has plenty to learn.

"Last year I wasn't really prepared to play," Palazzi said. "It wasn't anything physical, it was mental. It was hard to adjust to learning all the different signals and plays you need to know in college football."

"I've still got to concentrate more and cut down on my mental mistakes," he said. "But it felt good to score and to contribute to the win as best as possible.

"He's good, not outstanding but good," Morgan State head coach Jesse Thomas said. "He played well, but like any freshman there's room for improvement."

If anyone appreciated Palazzi's heroics, it was the defense which, aside from shutting down the Golden Bears, had the burden of holding Morgan State to a low scoring game lifted from their shoulders.

"The defense tried to hold them to give Dave the chance to get his feet wet," senior nose guard Mike Dwyer said. "He did a good job out there and the team has confidence in him. He's going to be a good one."

"He didn't fall to pieces when something went wrong," junior outside linebacker Paul Manganaro said. "It was a gutsy knowledgeable performance.

UMass tailback George Barnwell ran for 80 yards as the Minutemen beat Morgan State 38-9.

Neri, who gave UMass a consistent three-to-four yard per carry at fullback, ran for 49 yards. Smellie added 68. Simeone ran the team for a series late in the game, completing one of four for five yards. Nine Minutemen caught passes with Barnwell the only players snaggintwo for 11 yards.

Sophomore punter Jim tandler had five kicks for a 38 yard average before leaving the game with a leg injury. It is not known how serious the injury is. For Morgan State, Harris had 63 yards on 19 punishing carries behind a porous line. Wilson was 13-of-27 for 142 yeards and one interception.

The UMass defense, led by a tough front line of Dwyer, Ed Sullivan and Bruce Strange, kept the pressure on the Bears.

The linebacker corps of Steve Silva, Paul Manganaro, John McKeown and Todd Rundle played very well, containing Harris and the Bears short passing game. Platek made eight tackles in the secondary. He also had a sack along with Mike Kowalski and Sullivan. The offensive line gave Palazzi great protection (he was sacked only once), while UM's increased depth at all positions seemed to make the difference.

Morgan State is not the biggest challenge, but for a UMass team coming off of back-to-back 3-8 seasons, the Bears provided great confidence boosters.

"This is the type of game to build on," McKeown said. "We know what we're capable of, now we just have to keep it up."

Morgan State ambushed by UMass

Palazzi's three touchdown lead UM over Bears, defense dominates

Lineman Bob Greaney typifies the feelings of the entire UMass football team as the Minutemen crushed Morgan State 38-9 on Saturday.

Morgan State scored first, capitalizing on a George Barnwell fumble at the UMass 43 to set up a 30-yard field goal by Jeff Green with 8:07 left in the first quarter.

UMass bounced back quickly as freshmen Andrew Thomas returned the Morgan STate kickoff 25 yards to the UMass 32. Palazzi then executed a 68-yard drive in 12 plays. Palazzi hit Neri, a transfer from Nassau Community College, with an eight yard scoring pass with 3:14 left in the quarter. Freshman Silvio Bonvini booted the point after and UMass took the lead for good, 7-3.

Sophomore kicker Rolf Wendt, a walk-on to the team just a few weeks ago, then placed a perfect onside kick that Kirk Williams recovered for UMass on the Morgan State 43.

Barnwell, who led UMass with 80 yards on the day, ran for seven yards before Palazzi sprinted in for the touchdown with 2:34 left in the period. Palazzi, running the option, rolled to his right and faked a pitch to Barnwell that fooled the Bears defense and gave him a path to the end zone. Bonvini booted the point after.

Morgan State dulled UMass' momentum as senior Alphonso Harris returned the kickoff 92 yards for a touchdown. The kick failed and UMass held a 14-9 lead after one quarter.

The teams traded possessions in the second quarter as the Minutemen's line overpowered the smaller Bears offense and the UMass offense sputtered.

Morgan State punted the ball after its second possession of the period and gave UMass great field position as Thomas was hit despite making a fair catch signal. The penalty gave UMass the ball at the Bears' 45.

Senior flanker John Crowley got UMass going again, taking a reverse 31 yards, thanks to a key block by senior Peter Borsari, to the Morgan State 14.

Neri got three yards on an inside run before Palazzi lost the snap and Morgan State recovered on its own six. Fortunately for UMass, a Bear offside penalty negated the play and UMass retained possession. Palazzi scooted in on the next jplay, going six yards to his right for the score with 2:34 left in the half. Bonvini's kick made it 21-9 and the rout was on.

The third quarter saw UMass score again going 43 yards in six plays, finishing the drive with a 36 yeard Palazzi TD run on a fourth-down-and-two-play. Key plays included a Palazzi-to-Tom Cioppa pass for 11 yards and a Dan Rubineeti reception for eight yeards, which came with 3:51 to go in the quarter.

Bonvini booted a 30-yard field goal with 10:48 left in the fourth quarter, capping a five play drive that covered 69 yeards, the biggest play coming when freshman tailback Kevin Smellie took a handoff 69 yards down the left side to the Morgan State 13.

Former running back Duckworth Grange, moved to safety in the spring, intercepted Leslie Wilson's pass and returned it 51 yards for the score to finish the onslaught.

UMass rolled up 395 yards of total offense, 342 on the ground. Morgan State managed 213 yards and nine first downs. The Bears were hurt by ten penalties for 107 yards. The Minutemen averaged 5.5 yards per play, running up 20 first downs.

Palazzi impressive in starting debut for rejuvenated UMass

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

All he was looking for was a chance.

After being named as starting quarterback by University of Massachusetts football coach Bob Stull, freshman Dave Palazzi knew that this was the opportunity he had been waiting for. The 6-1, 143 pound redshirt from Leominster sat out last year while senior Jim Simeone quarterbacked the squad.

After leading the Minutemen to a convinciing 38-9 pounding of Morgan State on Saturday Palazzi left little doubt that Stull's choice was the right one. Running for three touchdowns and throwing for another, he served notice to rival schools that he may be the hottest new prospect in division I-AA. But shrugging off his success, Palazzi said that he had a lot of help especially from Simeone, the man he beat out.

"I was really excited to be out there," Palazzi said. "I was a little nervous, but the whole team, the coaches and everybody kept telling me that they were behind me all the way. They all gave me confidence, especially Jimmy. He's told me what to look for. He backs me up and helps me out."

"There wasn't that much pressure, I just tried to do my best. Throw or run, it doesn't matter—it's a game of both. The coaches call the play and I just do it as best I can."

Stull was pleased with Palazzi's effort.

Field hockey opens with 2-1 win over Virginia

Minutewomen outlast heat and 11th ranked Cavs

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD—It was a brutally hot Sunday morning on the artificial turf at Springfield College's Benedum Field as the University of Massachusetts field hockey team overcame opening game jitters to knock off Virginia, 2-1.

The seventh ranked Minutewomen took a few minutes to get their speedy offense into gear but once they did, they dominate until near the end of the game as the heat and humidity took its toll.

"I thought we played very well in the first half. They did very well and I was very pleased," coach Pam Hizon said. "We did have a little lapse at the end. They sensed our fatigue and came on strong."

The Minutewomen gave up a goal with 7:55 to go in the game, but Virginia, the 11th ranked team in the nation, failed to get the equalizer.

Senior Megan Donnelly, who just returned from touring Europe with the United States National Field Hockey Team, stopped a Cavalier corner shot with 20 seconds to go in the game.

UMass outshot Virginia 15-4 in the first half, 25-11 for the game.

UMass' offense showed more speed than it had last year and tended to dominate play with the addition of some talented freshman and transfer Lisa Griswold.

Freshman forward Kathy DeAngelis showed her speed driving the length of the field to set up a penalty corner shot early in the first half. DeAngleis scored about ten minutes later at the 16:31 mark giving UMass the 1-0 lead. Senior Chris Kocot's shot rebounded off the pads of Virginia goalie Missy Farwell and DeAngleis flicked it in.

UMass took the 2-0 lead as another freshman, Sue Hogkins, took another rebound and scored awith 7:55 left in the first half. "Everyone did their jobs well," Hixon said. "We created a lot of good scoring opportunities."

Griswold, a high scoring forward who played at Northwestern for two years, showed some high speed, frequently outrunning the ball.

"She's going to be great," Hixon said. "When it gets this hot the ball tends to stick to the turf."

The defense, except for a few lapses near the end of the game, came together well. Donnelly, who hasn't yet practiced with the team, sat out the first 15 minutes. She returned from Europe on Thursday.

"We wanted to give the freshmen a chance to play together," Hixon said. Hixon also had praise for freshman midfielder Julie Stuart, whose job was to mark Virginia's high scorer Elaine Maddoy. Maddoy was held scoreless.

"She did a heck of a job," the coach said.

Senior Kathryn Rowe started in the nets and made three saves. In pre-season play she beat out sophomore Lynn Carlson, who started and played in most of the games towards the end of last season.

"We'll play who is playing the best. Kathryn has been most consistent," Hixon said. "We have quality people back there. It's a nice luxury for me."

"We made good use of our subsitutes but we didn't anticipate the heat taking as much out of us as it did," Hixon said. "Next week, we'll be looking to play 70 minutes rather than 55."

The Minutewomen, 1-0, have a week off before entertaining nationally ranked Pacific University at 1 p.m. on Saturday at Totman Field at NOPE.

Library tower improved on the inside and out

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

While work continues on the exterior of the library tower, the University's library staff is working to modernize the services on the inside, Gordon Fretwell, the library's associate director of public services, said.

A computerized listing of the five college area's card catalog has been in the works for five years but has not been fully implemented because of the lack of library staff members, Fretwell said.

"The computer can probably handle it but it's too complex, too large to implement it all at one time," said Fretwell. The computerized system has been installed at Hampshire College and in the University's science libraries but has yet to be installed in the main library system, he said.

An effort has also been made to increase the periodical collection with an increase in this year's acquisition budget, Fretwell said. He said the $5.3 million budgeted to the library includes $400,000 for the purchase of books and journals. He said the increase in money allocated also takes inflation into account.

"We are so far below average for public universities," Fretwell said. "We have 9-10,000 less (periodicals) than average. We can't anticipate recovery." The University library system is currently ranked 86th among the country's 100 largest universities, falling from a 44th rating several years ago.

The budget also includes a 6 percent increase for personnel, Fretwell said. When the University found physical flaws in the library tower in 1979, the library staff was forces to split their work between Goodell Library and the tower. Fretwell said there are four or five temporary positions which will be eliminated when the library tower is fully functioning. He said there will be no decrease in the library system's permanent staff.

"We are so far below average for public universities. We have 9-10,000 less (periodicals) than average. We can't anticipate recovery."

—Gordon Fretwell

Modernization of the library's services is contingent on the physical renovations which are expected to be completed next fall, Fretwell said.

The physical renovations to the library consist of two contracts. The first construction contract will reconstruct the first six floors of the library, an external lobby and add study space, carpeting, furniture and a paint job.

The second contract will improve the condition and efficiency of the elevators. The Physical Plant will working with landscape architecture students to improve the area surrounding the library. Richard Talbot, director of libraries, said, in a May address to the Faculty Senate.

Decline of women in SGA

Lack of recruitmentt, inaccurate views blamed

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The percentage of women in the University of Massachusetts undergraduate student senate has dropped from 50 percent last year to 25 percent this semester, Liisa Trocki, Coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project, said.

The number of women "who call themselves feminists and work to organize the women in the senate" has fallen to about thirty out of the SGA's 120 members, Trocki said.

Trocki attributes the decline to a lack of effective recruitment by the senate for women's caucus members. She said caucus members haven't had time to recruit new members and she also blamed membership declines on the inaccurate views of students about "what the caucus is and who it is for."

The women's caucus acts as a lobbying tool in the SGA, trying to influence decisions on issues such as pornography, violence against women and funding for women's group along with staff education and support work for caucus members.

In the past, Trocki said women "shyed away" from the caucus because they thought it was a place only for radical feminist women.

Trocki said in other years, when the caucus was stronger, women did enter from the radical student union and other politically active groups. Trocki hopes to phase that image out this semester and create a non-partisan image.

"Now," Trocki explains, "Women that enter the senate may be conservative, moderate or feminists. We want to make it a comfortable place for all women to come together as women and receive support for others."

Formerly the only senate group not eligible for funding, the women's caucus has become an official RSO group so it can apply for funding this fall.

According to Trocki, the official goal of the women's caucus is to represent women on campus by keeping the senate aware of women's issues, and to broaden the political strength of women in the senate by providing a resource which will help women senators develop leadership skills and therefore, move toward overcoming the tradtional effects of sexism and racism.

"We want the senate to become a place where the average female student can come into the office and receive help with a harrassment issue or something else they are concerned with," Trocki added.

Astronaut talks in Amherst

Made first unplanned spacewalk in history

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Astronaut Jeffrey A. Hoffman spoke at Amherst College last night.

Astronaut Jeffrey A. Hoffman, a 1966 graduate of Amherst College, said he never dreamed of going outside the space shuttle Discovery while in orbit during a mission, but a snag in the operation caused him to do so.

Hoffman, who majored in Astronomy, spoke to about 200 people last night at Amherst College on what it was like to make the first unplanned spacewalk in history.

Hoffman joined the Astronaut Corps in 1978 and made the spacewalk while serving as a mission specialist on the shuttle flight of April 12 to 19, 1985. The spacewalk was made after a released satellite malfunctioned, and an attempt to rescue it was ordered.

Using a space agency film and slides to illustrate the mission, Hoffman said the astronauts "received a whole lot of instruction on how to make a fly swatter" device to rescue the satellite by activating its switch.

"We could rendezvous the satellite to snag it," Hoffman said. He added that what would take about 15 minutes under normal circumstances would take one and one half hours, because of the atmospheric pressure.

Although the satellite's malfunction was not corrected during Hoffman's mission, he said the crew nonetheless "responded in a few days to an in-flight emergency," that was successfully corrected in a later mission completed last week.

The ability to salvage a $100 million satellite, Hoffman said, "shows people what the shuttle is capable of doing in the next 10 to 20 years."

Hoffman said that although he was sorry that the satellite malfunctioned during the mission, it did give him an opportunity to get a great view of the earth. He said he designed a body hood to keep all the light out while in the shuttle "to observe the stars and take pictures" of the view.

"It's not that you can see more stars but the sweep of the sky" was what impressed him, he said. Besides the stars, Hoffman said the shuttle crossed the international date line 110 times, experiencing 110 sunsets, while the missions lasted only one week in standard Earth time.

Hoffman said that people always ask him what type of person it takes to be an astronaut and he tells them it takes a patient one because his mission was cancelled four times over a two-year period. His next flight is scheduled for March 1986 when he'll observe Halley's Comet.

Reagan adopts sanctions against apartheid in South Africa

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan abandoned his opposition to sanctions against South Africa yesterday and ordered implementation of most of the anti-apartheid provisions in a bill that congressional leaders said would have passed even over his veto.

Attempting to avoid the embarrassment of a foreign policy defeat in Congress, Reagan issued an executive order that he said was "aimed against the machinery of apartheid without indiscriminately punishing the people who are victims of that system."

A year of racial violence in South Africa in which more than 650 people had been killed, most of them black, had brought sharp attack in the United States and in Congress against Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" with that country—quiet diplomacy to persuade the governing whites to share power with the voteless black majority.

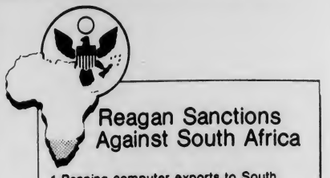
Until now, Reagan had justified his opposition to sanctions on the grounds that economic penalties would hurt black more than anyone else.

Reagan's order would prohibit U.S. banks from lending money to the South African government unless the funds are used to help the disenfranchised black majority as well as whites; ban computer exports to South African military and law enforcement agencies; and block the sale of nuclear technology to South Africa unless it is "necessary for humanitarian reasons to protect health and safety . . ."

In the order, signed in the Oval office during a nationally broadcast ceremony, Reagan also proposed to ban importation of the Krugerrand, South Africa's gold coin, subject to consultations with America's major trading partners.

Reagan sent U.S. Ambassador Herman Nickel back to Pretoria with a letter that the president said expressed his "grave view of the current crisis and our assessment of what is needed.

Botha says Reagan forced to take economic sanactions



JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha said Congress forced President Reagan to adopt sanctions yesterday against South Africa, but that Reagan's plan "is less harmful" than what U.S. legislators proposed.

Botha did not criticize Reagan, but said Congress coerced the president to move on economic sanctions "in disregard of the welfare and interests of our region."

"It is nonetheless to be regretted. Whatever the intention, the effect is punitive. It is a negative step," Botha said in a statement.

Botha said South Africa would not bow to foreign pressure, but vowed the country would push ahead with race reforms "despite outside pressures."

A year of violence over apartheid, South Africa's system of which 5 million whites rule 24 million blacks, has left more than 650 people dead and 2,500 injured, most of them black.

Discoverers of Titanic welcomed back home

WOODS HOLE (AP) — Scientists who found the Titanic returned to port yesterday to the cheers of a jubilant crowd and revealed that as soon as they made the emotional discovery they held a memorial service for the 1,513 people who died in the sinking.

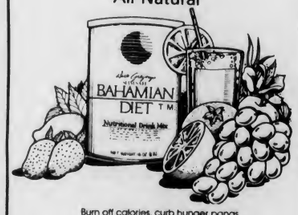
The Navy-owned research ship Knorr, whose crew found the Titanic about 560 miles off Newfoundland on Sept. 1, gave two horn blasts and did a 360-degree turn in the harbor as a salute to the 300 people who gathered to greet it.

About 20 small pleasure boats escorted the Knorr in the harbor as people waved from the docks and the rooftops of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution.

"I'm glad it's over," said Robert Ballard, chief scientist on the U.S.-French expedition that found the Titanic 2½ miles below the surface while testing a remote-controlled robot vessel for the Navy.

When the Titanic was spotted, Ballard said, he had just stepped out of the control room. The chief French scientist, Jean-Louis Michel, was the first to see the ship.

"They said you'd better go and get Bob and no one wanted to leave. So, finally, they got the cook to go and find me. I ran into the control center. It was clear. The boiler is so distinct and unique, and Jean-Louis and I had memorized, I think, every part of the ship. We were very excited.



"Then it hit us. Someone looked at the clock and said, 'You know, it's two o'clock and the Titanic sank at 2:40.' With that we quieted and went out on the fantail and had a private service," Ballard said.

Nixon visits Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon flew in from the southern Chinese city of Canton yesterday for a three-day private visit.

Airport officials said a U.S. consulate official met Nixon at the airport and Nixon then went on to a hotel.

Consulate spokesman David Miller declined to say if any functions are scheduled for Nixon, who just completed a six-day tour of China.

Nixon earlier visited Japan and South Korea and is to leave for Singapore tomorrow. His Asian tour will also take him to Malaysia, Thailand, Burma and Pakistan.

While in Peking, the 72-year-old former president, whose 1972 visit to China let to restoration of Chinese-U.S. relations, conferred with China's top leader, Deng Xiaoping; Prime Minister Zhao Zihang, and Communist Party Chairman Hu Yaobang.

Mountain Farms Mall purchased by New York developer

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to rejuvenate the Mountain Farms Mall in Hadley, a New York company recently purchased the strugg,ling enterprise for $325,000.

Mountain Farms Realty Corporation has been formed by Rosenberg Association of New York City. Walter Friedrichs, managing agent for Rosenberg Associates, said the sale will involve more transfers later, but would not disclose any details, according to a Daily Hampshire Gazette article.

Mountain Farms Mall Manager Charles Lang, said there are no interior renovations planned in the near future. "At this time our main objective is to get the stores rented since it is so close to the holiday season," he said.

The mall's parking lot and roof are under repair and the stores are generally in good shape, Lang said.

"We're trying to make our mall more rounded to attract the average person," he said.

Business in the mall has been going downhill since 1978 when the Hampshire Mall opened its doors. In 1982 Mountain Farms lost its anchor stores, Almys and Woolco. They were two of the mall's stores which occupied the largest spaces in the mall complex, and when they closed, it left the mall virtually empty.

The mall occupies 300,000 square feet and is presently 35 to 40 percent full. Lang said that by mid-October there should be more stores in the mall but he would not specify which stores will be coming in.

Co-op receives federal grant, plans on expanding program

A federal grant of $68,200, awarded to the University's Cooperative Education program as of Aug. 1, will be used to expand and increase general capabilities of the program, director Joan Stoia said.

A federal grant of $75,000 two years ago funded the entire program, whereas this grant is for expansion. "This is a proportionally better sum of money," Stoia said.

The Co-op program, which started in 1982, places students with companies such as IBM, United Technologies, and The Boston Globe. Students do not receive credit, but a cooperative education provides them with experience and pay, often a welcome alternative to the unpaid internship, Stoia said.

"In the upcoming year the grant money will be used for hiring three additional staff members and a part time graduate student. Prospective employees include a secretary and two job developers. Additional advertising to bring in a more diverse group of students is also planned.

"The grant will not allow us to be all things to all people," Stoia said, "but that's not our intent."

Co-ops were originally conceived for engineering, business, wildlife, and technical majors, but now plans are to expand to include students from nearly all majors. Although the theatre, publishing and television industries rarely pay for student employment, Stoia said she feels that students from these backgrounds will also be able to find satisfying employment.

Stoia refers to the co-op now as a "Million Dollar Program" based on last year's total student income of $940,000. Stoia said she hopes to this year double enrollment of 319 students.

Construction to begin on homes for mentally and physically disabled

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The construction of one of the two houses designed for students of the Belchertown State School will begin next month on land donated by the University of Massachusetts.

R.J. Harper, a State of human Services Coordinator, said construction of the house has been delayed because the State Division of Environmental Quality is investigting the parcel of land which is north of Wysocki House on North Pleasant Streets, to see if was previously declared a wetland.

Once completed, the buildings, known as Intermediate Care Facilities, will each house eight mentally-disabled residents of the Belchertown State School Informary, which was declared unfit by federal courts. The Department of Mental Health was given until June, 1986 to find alternative housing for the residents.

The quality of life for the residents will hopefully improve, Harper said. "Being in a community will benefit the mentally handicapped as well as it would anyone else," he said.

Each home will be one-story, designed for up to four residents in wheelchairs, Harper said. Residents of the house will require 24-hour supervision.

Departemnt of Mental Health officials first approached UMass officials about the leasing of University land in the summer of 1984, and were told the idea was not acceptable unless the Amherst community favored it.

The Amherst Board of Selectmen were split on the plan. Some selectmen opposed the plan because they said the sites would disturb the pastorial view along North Pleasant Street.

The Board agreed to the plan in last March. Harper said he thinks the delay caused by the board was unnecessary.

"The board did raise a lot of issues but most of them were unnecessary. They were important but not political issues," he said. "If you or I were going to build a house, we wouldn't need the Board of Selectman to tell us how."

Man punches police officer who was breaking up fight

By JEANETTE DEFORGE
Collegian Staff

A 19-year-old Springfield man was arrested by University of Massachusetts police after knocking a female officer to the ground Sunday morning. He was charged with assault and battery of a police officer and being a disorderly person.

Police said four officers were called in to break up a fight between two men. When police asked them to leave, one of the men refused. The man allegedly punched the woman officer in the face and neck and knocked her to the ground, police said.

The officer was treated and released at University Health Services. The man was released on $200 bail, police said.

In other UMass police action:

An 18-year-old woman was found unconscious near the Fine Arts Center Sunday morning, police said. They said the woman was having trouble breathing and was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Another student who was with her said she had been drinking large quantities of alcohol for three hours. The incident is under investigation.

A 19-year-old Lunenburg resident was arrested Saturday at the McGuirk Alumni Stadium for being a minor transporting alcohol. He had 150 twelve ounce cans of beer in his possession, police said.

University police arested sixteen people in separate incidents over the weekend and charged them with being minors in possessions of alcoholic beverages, police said.

A man allegedly fell of an 18-foot-wall at the McGuirk Alumni Stadium. He was treated at the infirmary for facial injuries and released, police said.

Police removed four students from the stands of the McGuirk Alumni Stadium during the football game Saturday. They were being rowdy and showering each other with beer, police said.

An attempted breaking and entering occurred in the basement of Melville dormitory Saturday night. A woman woke up to see a man crawling into her room through the window after removing the screen. The woman screamed and the suspect ran away. Nothing was taken and the screen was replaced. Police said the incident was believed to be a fraternity pledge prank. The incident is under investigation.

Sunday morning a woman was harrassed in the co-ed showers of Patterson dormitory. Police said she was taking a shower when she noticed someone looking into the curtain. Police are investigating the incident.

About $1000 in damages were done to a 1977 Dodge and a 1979 Oldsmobile in an accident in lot 64. No personal injuries were sustained, said police.

A 1980 Buick Regal was reported stolen from lot 49 Sunday, police said.

Former grad student editor of magazine

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

A former University of Massachusetts graduate student is playing a key role in the creation of an English newsmagazine in China.

Xiong Lei, a native of Nanjing, China, attended UMass in the 1983-84 school year through a non-degree exchange program. The 35-year-old woman has been selected as a sub-editor of Outlook Weekly. The magazine is being designed for world-wide readership by Xinhua, the government news agency of the People's Republic of China.

The exchange between UMass and the news agency was started in part by a visit to China in 1979 by journalism professor Larry Pinkham, according to Barbara Burn, international program director at the University.

The exchange is run through the Campus China Committee, which is funded through the Provost's office, Burn said.

"We try to pick people who mix around off campus and be an educational resource on campus," she said.

Lei was a resource not only to the campus, where she took courses in history and English, but to other areas as well. Lei participated in a Five-College sponsored survey of student attitudes at Amherst Regional High School, and traveled with friends to Atlantic City and to Disneyworld in Florida.

"She (Lei) was very energetic about getting around and meeting people and helping us all learn about China," Burn said.

Stephen Pelz, a history professor and Lei's part-time advisor while she attended UMass, said Lei's participation in his diplomatic history course was especially useful when discussing East Asian relations.

"I was surprised at the amount of similarities between her views and those of the other students," Pelz said. The only disagreements occurred when discussing the origins of the cold war and of problems between the United States and China, he said.

Two NBC newsmen are killed during coup attempt in Banghok

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Loyalist troops crushes a coup attempt yesterday by 400 to 500 soldiers led by former top military men. Prime Minister Prem Tinsulanaona, who had been out of the country, returned hours after the tank-led rebel insurrection and pleaded for unity.

Four people were reported killed and 59 wounded in nine hours of fighting. The acting army chief said three alleged coup leaders had been arrested.

Among the dead were NBC News Bangkok bureau chiev Neil Davis, and his soundman, Bill Latch. The two men were shot in front of the army compound as rebel-operate M-41 and M-48 tanks opened fire on the army radio station.

At 6 a.m. rebel soldiers seized the official Radio Thailand and government television Channel Nine. The rebels, calling themselves the "Revolutionary Party," announced they had seized power and dissolved the Parliament and Cabinet.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Fundamentally speaking

Tricia Iacovone

If you had been gone from the United States for a year and a half, what would be the first thing you would do upon reaching your native soil? Go to McDonald's? A shopping mall? Perhaps the "finer culinary delicacies" of this country are your style—maybe you'd drink a Tab or eat a pizza? Or even drink from a bubbler? Maybe you's watch TV?

I happened to choose the latter—what better way is there of getting over jetlag and regaining one's native tongue than by snoozing in front of the tube . . .? Well, at least I thought I'd be snoozing. Looking at that box was a sort of nightmare; it was scary, and very culture shocking.

You see, I turned on the TV and it seemed to me that on most of the channels I was faces with a special North American type of clone: the FUNDAMENTALIST, a phenomenon I hadn't witnessed for a long time. And one of the great forces behind this "rebirth" is the Reverend Jerry Falwell: Christian, public speaker, and the most recent addition to the experts on international politics and economics.

This, in itself, is nothing new or very unusual. There are many "self-made" experts around. You know, the ones who decide to go on a "fact-finding" trip to a country or area for a few days, without bothering to study the history of the place, and then return with such a massive amount of knowledge on the subject that all the television stations and newspapers want to publish what this person has to say. It doesn't seem to matter much if this person really, truly knows what he or she is saying. Nevertheless, these opinions or assertions reach the homes of millions, who, like the Reverend Falwell, do not possess the necessary inteilectual criteria to be making or critically absorbing them.

Do you remember the old cliche "People hear what they want to hear"? Maybe this surprises you, but people also tend to see what they want to see, especially when they go to a foreign place with stereotypes in mind already. In fact, it is very difficult and dangerous to make conclusions about a people if the observer never bothers to see the situation from the point of view of those people being observed. In such an instance, the observer actually hasn't observed anything at all, but has only seen the situation with the same perception that he/she had a home; and the "fact-finding" trip hasn't really made a difference in the person's knowledge at all.

The implications are all the more shocking. If the observer happens to be someone like Jerry Falwell, who has been accomodated by the major television stations and newspapers of this nation, this false information will be dispersed throughout the country and to people who do not know how to critique it intelligently. And, given his position as a member of the religious community, there are few people who would be willing to doubt his word.

Nevertheless, no one deserves to be lied to, even if it is unintentional, as I believe the case to be with the Reverend Falwell. Before we, as people with integrity, are willing to accept the statements of Jerry Falwell and people like him, we must "consider the source".

Add/Drop Nauseum

A thunder clap sat me upright in bed. Outside the winds whipped the trees into a frenzied dance to the beat of rain pounding against the window. I looked at the clock—4:30 a.m. I hadn't slept all night.

It's coming. Oh God, it's coming.

Sweat streamed off my body like the water down the window. A knock on the door, like bare bones on wood, broke my thoughts. I froze, hoping my roomate would answer, but he didn't. It came again. It opened with a creak. The power had gone out, but I could still make out the rough shape of a tall man in a dark cloak.

"Daniel White?" his voice croaked like decaying evil.

"Yes?"

He held out a piece of paper.

"I've brought your course schedule, Daniel White."

I took it from him and for a moment our hands touched. Cold terror ran up my arm and spread through my body. I began shaking uncontrollable.

"W-w-who are you?"

A dry cackle escaped his mouth. "Why, I'm the University computer."

A bolt of lightening lit the room and, just for a second, I saw his face.

I sereamed. He turned and disappeared, laughing down the hall. It couldn't have been skeleton, could it? That stuff only happens in Stephen King novels, doesn't it?

I looked down at the course schedule I clutched in my hand. After every course, scrawled in red ink (blood, I thought), was the word "overload". I screamed again, ripped huge chunks of hair from my head with my fists, and then blacked out.

"And when I woke up, I was here."

"Interesting."

"I just thought of all thoses lines during Add-Drop I would have to go through to get it all worked out. I guess I just couldn't handle it."

"Understandably."

"So what's the deal, doc? Are you going to keep me locked up here forever?"

"No, no, nothing like that. I'll just give you a prescription and you can be on your way."

"Great!"

"I thought you'd say that. Now as soon as you get home I want you to drink a large quantity of beer and then go out and vandalize something—your room, a car, some sculpture, anything will do. And I want you to repeat this every weekend until finals are over."

"Gee, thanks, doc. I think I feel better already."

Letters
Apartheid: Fascist Freedom?

Columns in the Collegian are excellent places for the discussions of controversial issues. But does this mean that some Collegian columnists are above the truth or that the paper should be used as a vehicle for spreading gross lies?

Stephen Erickson in his Sept. 5 piece stated that, "South Africa has opposition political parties and a free press which is highly critical of its own government." There is no freedom of the press in fascist South Africa, Mr. Erickson. Between 1975 and 1980, 330 periodicals were permanently banned, including prestigious black papers like the World and Weekend World (Source: Survey of Race relations in South Africa - published in Johannesburg, pp. 102 and 106 of Apartheid, the Facts, United Nations Centre on Apartheid, London, 1985.) Freedom of the press, and freedom of speech, is forbidden under the Internal Security Act which consolidates all the repressive measures of fascist South Africa. The Internal Security Act gives the white-controlled government the power to ban any publication it wishes at any time.

As far as having "opposition political parties", this statement is completely fallacious. Black people cannot vote for any member of any "opposition party" in the all-white government and the fact that different parties exist is pointless if one cannot vote in an election.

As far as the assertion that, "In South Africa people speak out freely against their government", this is also forbidden by the Internal Security Act which allows for preventive detention and the death penalty for anyone who "induces the government . . . to do or abstain from doing any act or to adopt or abandon a particular standpoint" or who tries to bring about any "constitutional, political, industrial, social or economic aim or change" (Internal Security Act of South Africa as amended in 1982, p. 58, Apartheid, the Facts).

On another point, Mr. Erickson states that South Africa "has a very high immigration level as many Africans migrate to South Africa to find a higher standard of living . . ." According to the fascist Bantustan system, native South Africans are defined as "migrants" in their own country and cannot migrate freely. They cannot live with their families in the urban areas where they work and they must always carry passbooks or they will be immediately arrested. This is the "free" system to which Mr. Erickson refers.

It is impossible to defend fascism and tell the truth at the same time. I hope that in the future the editors of the Collegian will seek to verify the statesments made by Mr. Erickson so that the 30,000 students and staff who read the paper will not be misinformed.

Dancers help in emergencies

Congratulations to all members of the Class of 1989 who went to the Frosh Video Dance. You have become part of a UMass tradition (yes we have some) of raising funds for our Student Emergency Loan Fund by taking part in this annual First Week event.

The proceeds of the dance, more than $1400, have already been transferred to the Dean of Students Office Emergency Loan Fund and are available for the unpredictable and unforeseen emergencies which can be resolved with a short term loan of $25 or $50 for a few days or a few weeks. If you lose a pair of glasses and can't study French, or if the check from home doesn't reach your mailbox and there is no money for food on the weekend, or if your battery dies in Lot 32 and your credit request at the gas station is respectfully declined, we'll be glad to see you.

Try to arrange your emergencies in the morning. The Bursar locks our cash drawer for the day at 3:30 p.m.

As new students you should be aware of the fact that someone had to make the plans and get the evening set for you to enjoy. Delphine Quarles and Michael Jones of the Student Activities Office deserve your thanks and mine for accomplishing this task so successfully and getting your ticket money into the loan fund so promptly.

Reagan's latest South African gesture is a pacifier

Little impact to be felt

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, President Reagan signed an executive order imposing economic sanctions against South Africa. I think this gesture comes too little, too late.

The sanctions call for a ban on computer exports, loans to the South Africa government "except those to help improve the economy", the kruggerand, and exports to corporations who support the apartheid government.

The American public and Congress have been calling for economic sanctions South Africa for some time. Yet, I feel these sanctions are too basic to make any real impact on the situation with the exception of the ban of the kruggerand.

I get the feeling that Reagan doesn't really care about the lives of the black South Africans. He seems to be more interested in how his actions will affect his image in the eyes of the South African government.

It's no big secret that he opposed economic sanctions against South Africa from the very beginning and that he is still opposes it. However, to save face in front of the press when he said that reforms were taking place in the country and to remove himself from an embarassing foreign policy defeat, he changed his mind and signed the order.

This doesn't sound like the actions of a person who is truly concerned with the lives and welfare of blacks who are literally fighting for their lives and in many cases, losing them, in order to have the few basic freedoms that we take for granted.

When all is said and done, these so-called sanctions will be nothing more than a pacifier to placate the American public and a "friendly but firm" letter meant to warn the South African government, but at the same time, not to offend them.

Minority freshmen get a taste of collegiate life in program

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Every summer the Collegiate Education for Blacks and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) has a six-week program to help incoming freshmen become acquainted with college life.

This year the program which began on July 7 and ended August 17 had 46 students.

"The students had to take either English 111 or 112 and Math 106 or 107," said Manuel Townes, director of Academic Services at CCEBMS.

In addition to the courses, students also had to attend mandatory workshops. "We had workshops given by Jim Shaw who is director of the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advision Center (CASIAC), Professor Chester Davis who is the director of the Afro-American Studies department, and a Third World leadership workshop given by John Ruddock and David Moore, members of the Third World Caucus (of the Undergraduate Student Senate)," said Townes.

The summer program helps new students in many ways. "First they are exposed to college level courses, second, they had 26-36 hours a week of mandatory study hall, and third, they had tutorials for both classes," he said.

Compared to last year's program, this summer's program was tougher. "The classes were demanding and twice as long. I was managing the students time for them. Their day began at 8:30 a.m. and ended at 11:05 p.m. The only free time they had was on weekends," he stated.

He summed up his feelings about the program this way. "Overall, the program went as well as I expected. If a student can graduate from this university and say that this program helped him or her in some way, when I will consider the program to be a success."

Griffith-Johnson remembered for her compassion and strong opinions

by KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Recently the faculty and students lost one of their most active and respected members. Thelma Griffifth-Johnson, director of affirmative action at the University of Massachusetts died on August 27, after a long illness.

She was a strong, compassionate woman who cared about the students, their rights, and who openly expressed her opinions no matter who didn't like them.

"She had the strongest backbone of anyone I've ever known," said Paul Barrows, director of the Committee for the Collegiate Educations of Black and other Minority Students. "She knew how to play the administrative game and gets results. She was proud to be a black woman. Her death is one of the greatest blows to the black community since I've been working here," he said.

Before her untimely death, Griffifth-Johnson was involved in many projects. An affirmative action director, she was very involved with the learning disability task force, sexual harassment cases, and getting new search procedures for the campus.

As a member of CCEBMS executive board, she was the link between the administration and the black community. She made sure that the minority students on campus didn't go unnoticed.

Ronald Sinacore, affirmative action coordinator, has been acting as temporary. "I've been the director since Mrs. Johnson became ill last October and I'll continue to be the director until a decision is made," Sinacore said.

According to Sinacore, the program will undergo no major change from the way Johnson ran it.

Love letters an interesting read

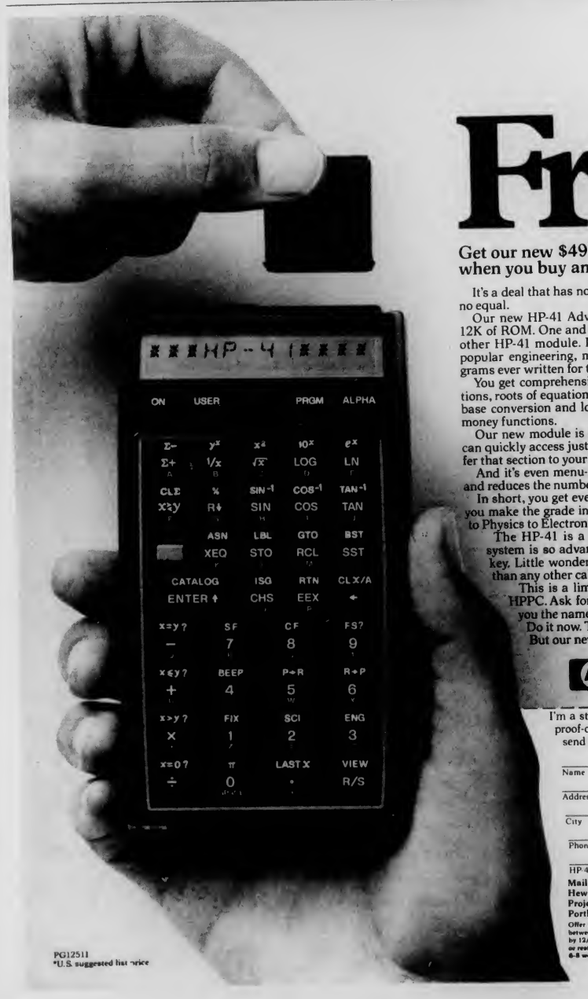
Austin and Mabel: The Amherst Affair and Love Letters of Austin Dickinson and Mabel Loomis Todd
By Polly Longsworth
Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 449 p., $10.95.

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Emily Dickinson fanatics will shortly be canvassing local bookstores for Mabel and Austin, the latest volume to shed light on Amherst's most mysterious poet and her family. And they won't be disappointed.

Longworth's meticulous research has resulted in a detailed portrait of a nineteenth-century affair; that of Emily Dickinson's unhappily-married brother and the attractive, vivacious wife of an Amherst College astronomy professor. The notion that the Victorians plodded from church to chores and disdained the delights of the boudoir is smashed in these lovers' letters.

The eloquent, often poetic letters range from discussion of everday matters to playful questioning ("Tell me dear, were you alone last Sunday, on your first spring drive? Of course you were, but I want to have you say so. Don't laugh . . ."), to reassurances ("I am thinking of you in the Greco-Japanese gown, while I write, and should like to take it off for you by and by . . .").



The letters also provide an intriguing view of Amherst a century ago; an orthodox, tightly-corseted community proud of its infant colleges and railroad service. Zealots of local history will especially appreciate the countless bits of town trivia, too, including the fact that the town common was a swamp until it was landscaped.

And, of course, Emily. What was Emily like?

Longsworth actually reveals little new information about the white-clad recluse. What was interesting, however, was that Emily, along with her sister, Lavinia, apparently approved of the affair, permitting the lovers to meet in the Dickinson Homestead, (which still stands on Main Street). The Dickinson sisters disliked their brother's intimidating wife, Susan, and were very fond of the musically talented Mabel. who would visit and play the piano. (Mrs. Todd later edited a collection of Emily's letter.).

A distracting and major flaw in the book, however, was Longworth's annoying insistence on second-guessing the characters' unconscious desires and thoughts. That was both presumptuous and inappropriate. Shame on Longworth's editor for not red-penciling those sections.

On the whole, though, the book is charming and enlightening in its historical and romantic aspects; perfect to read outside while taking in the New England foliage and reflecting on autumns past.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Boston after the tragedy: The aftermath of King's death

Common Ground; A Turbulent Decade in the Lives of Three American Families
By J. Anthony Lukas
Knopf $19.95

By BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts, the birthplace of the abolitionist movement, is not a place one would usually associate with racial prejudice. Nevertheless, Boston was the site of much turbulence following the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King on April 4, 1968. J. Anthony Lukas' splendid book, Common Ground, relates with exacting intricacy and astute insight Boston's reaction to the incident.

Lukas approaches his topic from several directions. Firstly, he follows step by step the politicians' attempts to prevent rioting and assuage the outrage of the inhabitants of Roxbury by instituting new reforms. Secondly, and more importantly, he relates the passage of three Bostonian families as they each deal with the tumult and the tensions. It is in this research that the significance of Lukas' achievement lies.

The three families Lukas focuses on reflect the "three nations" of Boston most touched by the events: Yankee, Black and Irish. Each is affected by the interracial hostility prevelant at the time, and each takes an active role in the issue of scholastic desegregation.

It is in concentrating on these representative families that Lukas glows. He writes vividly, and demonstrates in the domestic situations all the tension of a spy thriller, an impressive feat for a work of non-fiction. One wonders, however, whether the families he chooses are meant to be typical or stereotypical.

For the most part, the families act as we expect them to: the Yankee family is educated and liberal. The black family is schismed. The Irish, blue-collar family is violently opposed to desegregation. However flawed this may be in seeming so stereotyped, the reader must keep in mind that these are the reactions of individuals, not of classes. There are a number of Yankees, Irishmen and blacks in the book that follow radically different paths than those of the featured families.

Lukas' work is a superb piece of reportage. While the events clearly take place in Boston (the acknowledgements page reads like a Who's Who in Boston), Common Ground demonstrates a microcosm for all American cities. When Dr. King visited Boston on April 22, 1965 he said, "I would be dishonest to say Boston is Birmingham or that Massachusetts is Mississippi." Lukas shows there is a bit of Birmingham in every community.

Guitar seminar planned by Performing At Arts Division

The Performing Arts Division (PAD) will offer a free seminar for guitarists at 6:30 p.m., Wednesday, Sept. 18, in the Seminar Room in Old Chapel.

Musicians are encouraged to bring their guitars and ask questions at the informal session, which is being held in conjunction with PAD's current registration for performing arts workshops this fall.

Joe Belmont, of the PAD faculty, will demonstrate jazz, rock, and accompanying styles. A graduate of the City University of New York, Belmont has also studied with Stanley Dorn, Jonathan Keene, Barry Galbraith, Carmine D'Amico and Ted Dunbar. He has performed with "Fresh Squeezed," "Urban Renewal," Mitch Chakour and John Coster.

The PAD is co-sponsored by the Fine Arts Center and the Department of Music and Dance. For further information, call 545-0519.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.

Reach out and touch someone.®

ZooDisc takes 2nd in national championships

Last May, Zoo Disc, the University of Massachusetts men's ultimate frisbee team, travelled to the campus of the defending collegiate champs, Stanford University, at Palo Alto, California to compete in the second National Collegiate Championships. This was UMass' second trip to the Nationals which consists of the top twelve college teams in the country. UMass upheld it's reputation as one of the best teams in the country taking second by playing its famed tenacious defense, and running opponents into the ground with their relentless running and precision offense.

On the first day of competition, UMass was pitted against Central Florida, UPenn, and MIT. The Zoo started out slowly, holding only an 8-6 lead on Central Florida at the half. UMass put it in gear and won the game 18-8 aided by some aggressive defense. UMass then faced their toughest opponent in UPenn. UMass fell behind early and couldn't catch up, losing the game 18-14. The final game of the day was against MIT, which Zoo Disc handled easily, 18-6.

On day two, UMass faced a do or die situation. UPenn, having already defeated UMass and Stanford on day one, was a sure victor in the pool (the tourney was divided into two pools of six teams). It was now a dogfight between UMass, Kansas, and Stanford for second place in the pool and a berth in the semifinals. UMass opened against an overrated, but quick, team from Kansas. In this game, UMass began playing up to their potential and showing their talent by playing the most precise and unstoppable offense all year.

UMass startle Kansas with amazing offensive play by David "Buzz" Ellsworth, Michael Donohue, and Criag Homenko. The final score was 18-8, leading UMass into the game for the number two spot against Stanford. UMass continued its outstanding offensive play and took an early 4-1 lead before Stanford called a time out. Then the UMass defense kicked in with several outstanding plays by third year man Michael Nevins and first year man Amos Himmelstein. UMass was clearly in control at the half 9-5. In the second half, UMass continued it's relentless defense and seized every opportunity. UMass was the victor by the count of 19-8.

UMass was in the Eastern dominated Final Four and faced their fierce rival, the Cornell Buds. These two teams battled each other numberous times this season with UMass getting the best of the series 3-1.

These two teams were friendly off the field, but on the field, they were bitter rivals. Led by their almost perfect offensive attack, with help from good play by seniors Jeremy Seeger and Eric Kehoe, UMass had a demanding 10-4 halftime lead. In the second half, UMass began to lose a little steam, but held off Cornell, 20-18. In the other semifinal, UPenn easily handled SW Missouri, leading to a UMass-UPenn all East Coast final.

The final two teams were also very familiar to each other, having played five timed during the season, with UPenn having the better of UMass in the series 4-1. The combination of UPenn's short, run-and-gun style of play, and UMass' peak in the Stanford game lead to a UPenn victory by 21-13.

UPenn was clearly the class of the tournament, having played over 70 games together that spring. UMass' final record was 32-8, and the entire team was pleased with their performance this season.

Tandler may miss season with severe knee injury

Starting punter to be replaced by freshman

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Sophomore punter Jim Tankler, a second team all-Yankee Conference selection last year, may be lost for the season to the University of Massachusetts after suffering a knee injury in Saturday's 38-9 victory over Morgan State.

Tandler, a 6-2, 217 pounder from Randolph, averaged 36 yards a punt last season and on Saturday had five kicks for a 38.4 average, including a 50-yarder. A gifted athlete, Tandler came to UMass as a quarterback, was moved to the secondary before taking over as punter. He was a second string linebacker this season, making one tackle on Saturday.

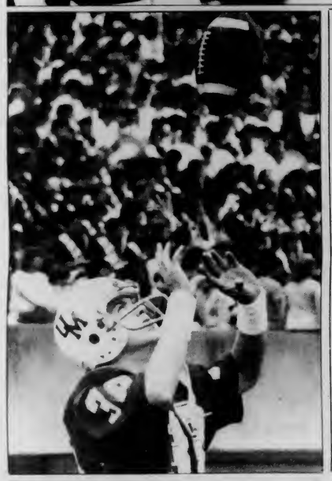
Minuteman doctors, on external examination, said that Tandler suffered a ligament tear. He will be operated on Monday and if the initial prognosis is correct, he may be lost for the rest of the season.

Defensive coordinator Jim Reid said that Tandler was hurt during a fourth quarter blitz when he was blocked by a Morgan State halfback. Freshman Dimitri Yavis replaced Tandler replaced Tandler and had one punt, a 33-yard effort. Yavis, a 6-6, 250 pound tight end from Albany, NY, averaged 38 yards a punt in high school.

"It's tough for Jimmy because he worked so hard during the summer," Reid said. "He increased his bench press 80 pounds and was working hard at linebacker. It's a big loss."

UMass suffered only minor bumps and bruises in the aftermath of Morgan State. Reserve nose guard Steve Robar missed Monday's practice with an injured knee. He is expected to play Saturday when the Minutemen face Richmond in Virginia in a 7:30 p.m. start.

The Spiders, 1-0, knocked off Division 1 Virginia Tech 24-14 on running up 555 yards of total offense as quarterback Bob Bleir threw for 268 yards. UMass trailed only 10-7 after three quarter.



The Spiders are ranked in the Top 20 in Division 1-AA and will be a tough test for the Minutemen. If the effort UMass put forth on Saturday is any indication, the Minutemen will be ready for the Spiders.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: There was a new scoreboard in the south endzone at Alumni Stadium. The north scoreboard was also changed, it had a large gap in the middle, the result of a campus workers not completing its tearing down. The new scoreboard took a beating during the game, having its lights popped on several times by placekicks. A protective grate was apparently left off the scoreboard. An electrician working in the pressbox prior to the game took a nasty fall after running down the steps and falling over the ledge separating the stands from the field. He was taken away in an ambulance. The Minutemen were wearing new uniforms and had new helments. The UMass police also were enforcing new tailgate procedures that called for all tailgaters to go into the game come the opening kickoff. Previously, many students remained in the parking lots. The north parking lots were also set aside for fans (alumni, parents and season ticket holders) holding special passes.

FUTURE WRESTLERS DEPARTMENT: Morgan State boasted three freshmen that each weighed in at over 285 pounds. Offensive lineman Charles McFadden tips the scales at 315, George Allen goes 290 and Tackle Calvin Montgomery stands 6-4 and weighs 285.

MORE MUTTERINGS: The Morgan State band, which played for the entire game oblivious of the savage beating its team was taking, played at halftime of Sunday's Patriots game in Foxboro. The UMass band and the State band provided an entertaining halftime show. UMass head coach Bob Stull, usually a stern presence before and after games, was visibly excited during post-game interviews, mentioning how fired up his veteran players seemed and how talented his newcomers seem. Not one to freely hand out the compliments, Stull dished out the accolades to almost his entire team.

The UMass defensive line of Mike Dwyer, Ed Sullivan and Bruce Starnge put great pressure on Morgan State. Dwyer, a 6-2, 275 pound nose guard, and Sullivan, a 6-4, 254 pound transfer from Iowa, were especially persistent, living in the Bear's backfield. Stull also signaled out the defensive play in of Duckworth Grange (who had a 51-yard interception return for a touchdown), John McKeown (a team-high 12 tackles) and Todd Rundle (six tackles). Grange has two touchdowns in his UMass career, the interception return and a return of a blocked punt for a score. Offensive lineman John Benzinger graded out the highest among the linemen. Quarterback Dave Palazzi was named to the weekly ECAC all-star team.

During Saturday's 38-9 rout of Morgan State, several of the Minutemen found time for a little fun and games along the sidelines, as captured here.

Above, freshman cornerback Garrick Amos gives a little help to his teammate, scratching co-captain George Barnwell's head during the fourth quarter when the Minutemen had the game well in hand.

Left, freshman flanker Bob Arsenault plays a little toss with himself, waiting his turn to go into the game. The Minutemen, 1-0, travel, to Richmond this Saturday for a game with the Spiders.

Men's soccer tackles rival Terriers tonight

Gettler looking for consistency from UMass

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team faces off at Boston University tonight in its first New England action of the young season.

The Minutemen are 1-1 after the Akron Invitational Tournament and Coach Jeff Gettler sees this game as being a crucial one for his team.

"This is a big game for us," said Gettler. "We are way ahead of where we could be. We have been able to score some goals this year."

UMass was able to pour in four goals against Bowling Green during its last outing (a 4-2 victory) and Gettler is looking for more of the same offensive output against the Terriers.

"We have to finish off our chances against them," said the coach. Gettler is looking for a big game from junior forward Anders Hedelin, a transfer from University of Stockholm, who helped to fill the void left by the injury to Kurt Manal, last seasons leading scorer who will miss the entire season with a leg injury.

Gettler also needs solid performances from midfielders Tom Uschok and John Shannon. "Shannon is what I call our workhorse at midfield," said Gettler, "and it is important for him to have a good game."

The UMass backfield will consist of senior co-captain Matt Dowd, senior Paul Ricard, and sophomore Matt Cushing. Senior Don Donahue has been given the nod by Gettler to start in goal.

The Terriers (1-1) and new head coach Neal Roberts come into this game with the reputation of being a tough opponent.

"They are very physical and they shoot the ball well," said Gettler. "I would rate them as one of the better teams in New England."

Two foreign imports are the key to this BU team. Forward Francis Okaroh from Nigeria and goalie John OleMoe from Norway are two of the top college players in the area according to Gettler.

"We like to play them early because of their lack of organization (due to the many foreign players)," said Gettler, "but they are a very good team with very good players.

Another disadvantage for the Minutemen is that this is one of only two games this season the team will be playing on artificial turf.

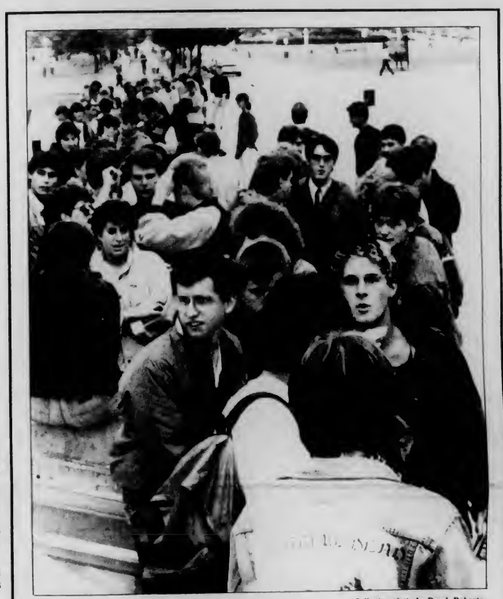
Conferences shuttled to local bars

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts conference and catering services are trying to accommodate hundred of University conference attendees who want to have alcohol served at banquets by bussing them to local restaurants with liquor licenses.

The University is currently not allowed to serve alcohol at conferences because there is no alcohol liability insurance on campus.

"It's a vital business," Ashoke Ganguli, director of auxillary services in the Campus Center, said "Conference and catering services earn approximately $700,000 a year." He said a small percentage of the gross earnings are attributed to alcohol-related events.



Conferees have been driven on school buses to the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst and Wiggins Tavern in Northampton, Ganguli said. Conference services pays at least $50 for each bus that services conference patrons, Al Byam, University of Massachusetts transit authority operations manager, said.

"It's not impacting us economically for the moment," said Campus Center Director William Harris. He said very few conferences have been cancelled after their organizers learned that the University cannot serve alcohol at scheduled banquets.

"Before the snow falls, hopefully we'll have our beverage license back," Harris said.

In the meantime, the 295 people attending the Massachusetts Tax Assessors conference here this week will continue to meet in the Campus Center but drink

Group looks to modify salary plan

Wage plan enacted

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

A committee created by the University of Massachusetts administration to modify a newly formed professional staff salary program, is working to adapt the program to better suit the University.

The salary program, designed through recommendations from a two-year study by Olney Associates of Boston, is a controversial job classification system which sets wage scales for non-academic professionals at rates comparable to positions at 15 other schools. The recommendations were implemented July 1.

Before its implementation, members of the Professional Association at the University of Massachusetts (PAUMA) expressed concern that the program would put a cap on wages.

"Olney's implementation received negative reactions from most of the professional staff," Association Senate Speaker Gerald Quarles said yesterday.

A seven-person panel was created to review the study and offer recommendations. A July 5 letter from Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey stated that "it is our (the University's) system, and we must work upon it until it is fully responsive to the campus' needs."

The panel includes three members of the professional staff, and several administrative officials. Quarles, a member of the panel, said, "it remains to be seen if the study can be adapted to the University. Each university has its own nuances. We were not encouraged by the implementation of the study July 1. We felt it was a bit precipitous."

Quarles said the concerns of the panel include the "maximum salary levels" which set the salaries for certain job positions. "This seems to imply that some people are being overpaid," he said. "However, all our salaries are in line with state limits.

"Olney has created an artificial cap on salaries, job by job," Quarles said. The panel will also question the criteria that was used to evaluate salaries, and the conclusions that were reached, he said.

Quarles said the panel was also concerned about the issue of "compression." "What happens to higher salaried employees when an employee under them is adjusted to a higher level?" he said. "This study opens a number of questions.

"The Olney study is demoralizing to staff who have performed well," Quarles said. "There is no incentive with a salary cap. We've been told the policy was not to punish, but if the result is the same, the purpose doesn't matter."

Quarles said the panel hoped to complete its recommedations by January, but said the panel was "more concerned with doing it right, not fast."

Dissatisfaction with the Olney study prompted a union drive by the Office and Professional Employees International Union (OPIEU). Quarles said that although several employees had signed union cards, asking for a union election, no decision had been reached. He said a forum between the union and opposition to the union, had been scheduled for Oct. 23. The association will serve as the moderator.

Each individual staffer will have to decide about unions for himself," Quarles said.

More students, more money being looked for Enrollment planning viewed by regents

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

In response to a statewide pattern of increasing college enrollment, a project to increase enrollment planning at public colleges and universities was highlighted yesterday at a meeting of the state Board of Regents of Higher Education in the Campus Center.

The proposed system would integrate enrollment planning factors into annual long range plans that are required of all the public colleges and universities. The goals of the program are to strengthen enrollment planning, to inform faculty and administrators about enrollment planning, and to develop the software to aid decision-makers and store data.

Regents' director of planning and resource development Laura B. Clausen displayed computer software and showed slides listing enrollment demographics of the University of Massachusetts.

UMass budget request up $ 18.3 million

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials yesterday unveiled the 1987 fiscal budget request, calling it the boldest proposal presented to the Commonwealth in 10 years.

The proposal, to be presented to the state Board of Regents of Higher Education, requests $285 million, an $18.3 million increase over last years's budget, for the coming fiscal year beginning July 1, 1986.

Speaking at a press conference yesterday in his office, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey noted that UMass in-state tuition has risen $834 since the 1980-81 academic year.

"The students and families are really making a heavy investment. And they are carrying a major share," Duffey said. "This is the fact that made us come back and set a bold plan for improving our University."

The proposal aims to improve the University in three major areas including academics, student support services and the physical condition of campus, Duffey said.

Two million dollars is requested for additional faculty and teaching assistants needed to meet the demands brought on by new more stringent General Education requirements, Duffey said. Also included in the proposal is a $5.1 million request for improving research, teaching equipment and three major areas of study—biotechnology, condensed matter physics and chemistry.

Improving campus physical facilities is also a top priority, Duffey said. The budget request includes $750,000 to be spent on restoring campus buildings, including labs, power utilities, roads and sidewalks.

"We have many severe problems with our facilities," Duffey said. "It's going to take a lot of money to get that back into shape."

"We'd like to be the best public institution in New England and we're not now," said Provost Richard O'Brien. "This is a budget that looks to the future and tries to get a sense of identification, of forward motion."

University trustees approved the budget last month, and Duffey said he expects the regents to approve the proposal sometime next summer.

New fighting erupts in Beirut refugee camp

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—New fighting broke out at Beirut's Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camp yesterday despite the efforts of Syrian-led teams to enforce a cease-fire at the shell-battered shantytown.

It was the sixth day of battles between the camp's Palestinian defenders and Shiite Moslem militiamen who say they are trying to gain control of the camp to drive the Palestinian Liberation Organization from Beirut.

Syria has been trying to end Lebanon's civil war but has been wary of direct involvement by Syrian troops in Beirut's street fighting. But it did send Syrian officers to head observer teams to monitor a cease-fire.

It was not clear what triggered yesterday's renewed shooting.

The fighting around the camp, which started a week ago was unfinished business for both aides. The Shiites and the Palestinians fought each other last May and June in five weeks of battles in which 500 people were killed and 2,500 wounded.

U.S. firms leaving

WASHINGTON (AP)—Many American businesses and banks are gradually but steadily pulling out of South Africa because, as one bank spokesman put it, they no longer find that country "an attractive place to do business."

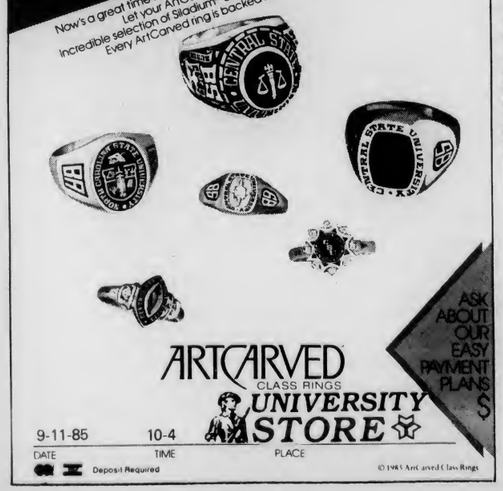
"The private market is sending a much stronger message than officials sanctions have to the South African government that their policies are creeating an economic climate that is unconducive for conducting business," says Jeffrey J. Schott, research associate at the Institute for International Economics.

"The compromise sanctions coming out of Congress pale by comparison to what the private sector is doing," Schott says, referring to the House-passed bill that is now beforee the Senate. On Monday, President Reagan on his own put into effect most of the provisions of that measure.

Hundreds of millions of dollars in U.S. investments remain in South Africa. But government figures show an annual decline, except in private loans, since 1961.

Some of the changes that are under way:

•Engelhard Corp., a big New Jersey manufacturer of chemical and metallurgical products, this year liquidated its wholly owned South African affiliate. The operation had $4.5 million in sales in 1983, two percent of the company's total.



•Coca-Cola Co. announced sale of majority interest in its group of South African bottling plants to a South African company, though it will continue to hold a minority stake. Soft drink sales in South Africa have been down, spokesman Randy Donaldson said.

Emerson seeks move

BEDFORD (AP)—Emerson College officials said yesterday that their plan to move the school from downtown Boston to this northern suburb is not final, and if a nine-month study shows Bedford can't handle more traffic and water use, Emerson will sell its 59-acre plot and look elsewhere for a new home.

"We've set aside the next nine months to complete a comprehensive engineering and environmental impact study. We don't have the answers yet," said college spokesman William Harrold.

"If we find out this is not a do-able campus site, based on what our engineers come up with, given the real estate market, it doesn't appear that we are going to take any financial losses if we sell it. That has been discussed."

Harrold's comments came the day after 200 residents met with Emerson officials at a town meeting, and

Official reaching out in new position

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

For five years, Norman Aitken worked as the director of undergraduate studies for the economics department at the University of Massachusetts.

However, Aitken's workload increased this past July 1 when he undertook his new job as the associate provost for undergraduate education.

Instead of just managing the undergraduate studies of one department, Aitken is now responsible for managing the undergraduate studies for the whole campus.

"You wonder sometimes," Aitken said yesterday, "how you are going to get back to everyone in an administrative and in a humane way."

Aitken arrives at his new post just as the provost's office is putting the finishing touches on the new General Education requirements. As of next September, all C, D, and E cores will no longer exist for all first-year students (Class of 1990) and the classes to follow. A new system of undergraduate requirements will be in place.

Although the General Education plans are first on Aitken's list of objectives, Aitken's mind is also occupied with other thoughts, including tyng up a few loose ends in the economics department.

"After five years (in the economics department), you cannot just walk away in good conscience," he said explaining how he juggles the responsibilities from his former and new job.

Aitken does want to, above all, he said, improve as many aspects of undergraduate education as possible. While the new General Education requirements effect students who haven't even applied to the University, Aitken wants to focus on both students future and present.

"The new administrator must reach out andmake sure he does not operate in a vacuum," he said. "The first year in any position is always one of learning. You must know what ideas are out there before you start reinventing the wheel."

Aitken spends a lot of his time meeting with staff looking for information and ideas. "There is just so much to respond to. I don't want to give up meeting people just to stay in and do paperwork."

After yesterday interview, Norman Aitken was on his way to Draper Hall to teil some students that their economics discussion classes had been rescheduled.

"My dream is to be more efficient," he said.

Money to promote East Asian study

SOM receives $ 35,000 grant

By FRAN PADO
Collegian Correspondent

A $35,000 grant awarded to the University of Massachusetts School of Management will promote graduate-level study of trade relations between the United States and Eastern Asia, with special emphasis on the People's Republic of China and Japan.

A three-part program has been constructed with the funding. Students are encouraged to study Asian-related courses, including the Chinese or Japanese languages. Seminars, focusing on the status of U.S.-Eastern Asian business relations, will be offered periodically during the 85-86 school year. Crucial to the program, however, is the summer study offering in which 10 graduate students will spend one month in East Asia.

"Basically, our aim is to internationalize the curriculum, involve students with the language and history of other countries and promotd trade," said School of Management Professor Bertil Liander. "From this experience, students gain dual perspective. Culturally, they will have seen two sides, which will help their reactions in the business world."

It is extremely rare for the Federal Department of Education to award this to an institution more than once, Liander said. This school year will be the University's third year receiving this grant. "Frankly, I consider it rather miraculous that we got the grant once again this year," Liander said.

"Each year the schools receiving the grant are ranked. For our first year UMass was on top. Last year, we were 16th out of a possible 35. We are not sure how effective this grant is. This year we will evaluate the worth of the experience throughout the department," Liander said.

"When the students come back after a month of touring throughout Eastern Asia, they will know these countries are not far away," he said. For a School of Management graduate student, "an advantage may be gained through this experience, a wider view of business relations as a whole," he said.

"From country to country, the basic business decisions are the same. What makes the difference is the environment in which these decisions are made," Liander said. Relations between countries will be helped through the program, he said. "If you look at China in the last 20 years, with their "open door" policy who knows? The possibilities for gain through U.S.—Chinese relations are tremendous."

Liander said an Eastern Asian Certificate Program for the School of Management has been initiated. It includes five-college study of various Asian-related courses in accord with business and trade studies.

"We are extremely hopeful for this program. It is the first of its kind at the University," he said. "Through use of this grant, management students will be exposed to international trade and relations, exposure which can only be beneficial.

University Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, right, accepts a check for $97,000 yesterday from Nicholas Boraski, a state General Electric official, for continued microwave research on campus.

G.E. boosts microwave research

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Officials of General Electric Co. presented the University of Massachusetts with a check for $97,000 yesterday as part of a continuing microwave research project.

The check is the second installment in GE's $200,000 committment to support microwave research at the University. The first installment was received in January.

Robert E. McIntosh, coordinator of the Microwave and Electronics Group on campus, said the money will be "very valuable to support graduate student salaries, travel and research expenses."

In addition, the money will be used towards research activity in microwave engineering, which includes studies of fundamental device physics and numberous system applications, McIntosh said.

The department's research is divided into three areas: microwave remote sensing, microwave solid-state devices and microwave radiation.

McIntosh coordinates the program with GE and other cooperative programs with industry. The total funding that the microwave group receives from cooperative programs will be approximately $610,000 during the 1985-86 academic year, he said.

COINS modifies its program

By JIM AVERILL
Collegian Staff

The Computer Information Science Department (COINS) at the University of Massachusetts has modified the core requirements for undergraduates by replacing the upper level math requirement with two electives beginning this semester.

Classes at the 500 level which have previously been taken by upperclassmen and graduate studetns together will be split into separate sections for each group.

In addition, two outdated courses will be replaced by three newer and more relevant courses.

These modifications are the result of a faculty decision to improve the department and were necessary because "the computer and information field is rapidly changing and it is extremely easy to become obsolete before your time," COINS Undergraduate Program Director, Jim Kurose, said.

The emphasis of the department is to provide students with the background and skills to keep pace with an expanding field and to help them be competitive in the market.

Kurose said the changes in the curriculum should help achieve this. He said the changes should result in smaller class sizes and increased unity of the students that take them.

Team continues asbestos removal

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Work on removing asbestos from key buildings is continuing at the University of Massachusetts with a four-man team trained in asbestos removal aiming to locate and neutralize the hazardous areas.

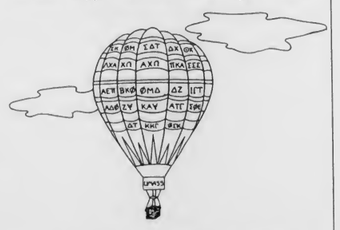
At a cost of $75,000 a year, the 18-month-old asbestos removal program concentrates on pipes and ceilings that have asbestos insulation. The Physical Plant, responsible for the program, has targeted many buildings including Hampden Dining Commons, Goodell Library, the Water Resource Center, Morrill Science Center, Goessmann Laboratory, Draper Annex and Draper Hall.

Peter Wozniak, Physical Plant operations director, said older buildings have a higher incidence of asbestos insulation because they were built before the world-wide ban on the use of asbestos in buildings became effective.

The asbestos team, three workers and a supervisor "have been certified as trained asbestos removal technicians," Wozniak said. The team will either remove or encapsulate the asbestos, he said, with removal viewed as the best solution.

The highest levels of the fire-retardant substances are found in mechanical rooms of University buildings, according to an asbestos commission study. Other campus buildings that have recieved attention are Worcester Dining Commons and Boyden Gym.

Materials other than asbestos could be used to fire-proof buildings but none are as effective. Although banned everywhere, some use of asbestos may still occur, said Wozniak. He also said that the work on University buildings is proceeding very well and may continue for another four to five years.



Asbestos has been found to cause cancer when people who are subjected to prolonged exposure breathe in airborne particles. The Environmental Protection Agency has .02 fibers per cubic centimeter as an acceptable limit of asbestos in the air.

Regents' Chairman David Beaubien called the project "a major milestone," and praised Clausen and her research assistant Professor Steven Coelen, "for developing the project and running all around the state to raise money." The initial costs of the program are being financed by private grants, but Clausen reminded the board yesterday that, "we have a commitment from A & F (the state's division of administration and finance) to provide funding for the annual update of the demographics." The cost of updating the statistics will be $30,000 a year, she said.

Some of the data Clausen presented showed the cities in Massachusetts that have the most students applying and enrolling at the Amherst campus are Boston, Newton, and Framingham, respectively. Also, statistics show that in the Amherst/Pelham area, 77.5 percent of the class of 1982 applied to the University, though they made up only 1.5 percentof that year's entering first year students.

elsewhere, Ganguli said conference services will still make money with the hotel and meeting room charges attached to conference fees.

Conference services schedules at least 200 conferences a year, 30 to 40 percent of those usually request alcoholic beverages, Ganguli said. In the past, the University has been able to provide conferences with full liquor bars upon request.

Roommates Anonymous

Mary Cresse

The people at the Collegian tell me there are about 500 of us looking for off-campus housing, and I will tell you right now there should be one less, because I am the near-perfect roommate (anyone who expects perfection in life is already dead by now, so forget it), yet I do not have a room. Why? Hell, if I knew that I'd be lounging on my (nonexistent) bed in my (Amherst, Northampton, Belchertown) apartment watching my (still at home) television or reading the books I have yet to crack because renters are acting too weird and I'm still looking for an apartment.

Among other inane reasons, I've been refused apartments because I'm not a lesbian, because I don't eat meat, and because I do not own a kitchen table.

The fact that I don't care about the sexual preferences or eating habits of others apparently isn't good enough. You'd think, too, that being the seventh of eight children—I can take abuse and give it—would attract potential housemates by the score.

But nooooo. I'm felled by my seemingly bizarre desire to live in a place with light, heat, and ventilation, all within 25 miles of campus.

Is that so bad? Tell me, is it? I'm writing this column for three reasons: one, I'll end up in a psychiatric ward real soon and am trying to forestall it by spewing my frustrations at people besides my friends, who've been avoiding me lately; two, my expense account ($0) doesn't allow for classified ads; three, I'm appalled by the (mostly older) students who've forgotten what it's like to sleep in the Campus Center or eat Mini-Store popcorn for breakfast. They need to know they are being sadistic and greedy.

A man from South Amherst told me he wanted to live with an older student who would be around for a year or more, but he didn't like undergraduates, even seniors. Who does that leave? First-year grad students? Chill out, pal.

Two recent college grads displayed their newfound professionalism (one is a waitress) by lying about the price of their NoHo loft and avoiding my phone calls. "We're, like, not into students," one whined disdainfully. "But, like, do you have a stereo?" (She is a UMass grad. Arent' you proud?)

And this word 'dynamics': what does it mean? "We're looking for a vegetarian, cooperative, radically-left individual who understands the need for salient political action and social change," one woman told me.

"I'm apolitical, never home, and desperate for a room," I said. "I'd even kick in a sawbuck for the coop food every week, I don't care."

"I'm sorry, but the dynamics wouldn't be there. We wouldn't want to exclude you from a potentially adversarial roommate relationship."

You got one already, you witch. I hope you burn in hell. I also have a better vocabulary than you do.

Let's talk about my father's favorite subject: money. Let's talk about my pastor's favorite subject: avarice. Can we combine them in the context of apartment-hunting? I think so. Just up from the stately spit-and-paper tissue Brittany Manor apartments (spelled 'Brittney' in a recent ad—why is the world illiterate?), someone in spit-and-plywood Northwood is asking $240 for a 9 x 11 room! My question: does the leaseholder freebase or just snort?

I think I've made my point. I have to because this is not funny anymore. My classes have started and I have yet to by my books because I might need the money for a security deposit. Look, I understand leaseholders face the risk of renting to psycho-killers, but there are plenty of normal, desperate people out there, and all we need is a chance. No one seems to be flexible. And I thought UMass was a campus of civility.

That's all I have to say. I'm going up to the Campus Center now to sleep on the couch. (Does anyone feel guilty yet?)

Oh, and Pat, Jill, Gail, Katherine, Adele, Dode, Peter, Greg, Itaru, Ene, and Beth: thanks for letting me crash.

I wish others shared your generosity.

Such Great Aspirations

Sue Eaton

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate has an obligation to prove something to all of us this year. This semester, it's up to students and administrators alike to determine if these sandbox politicians who have control over the $1.6 million Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) are really worthy of such power.

Last semester, we were subjected to 19-22-year-old adults behaving like spoiled children. If student government is a training ground for careers in governing, those involved certainly don't believe they have anything to learn. While student leaders are supposed to be responsible, effective people, they certainly didn't believe in things called accountability and compromise. The student senators either wasted time fighting amongst themselves to the point of ineffectiveness, or, when they had grown tired of bickering among their peers they turned their criticism to that evil, all powerful, everpresent and plotting...administration.

We can look to last semester's budget mess as an example of such ineptitude. What's been called a severe fiscal crisis surfaced in the SATF and amounted to a $250,000 loss. We soon discovered it was only a culmination of both continual and re[illegible] ar efforts.

Instead of listening to a member of the administration who was trained and experienced as a financial analyst, who knew the "ins and outs" of the SATF, the SGA treasurer and the Senate speaker refused his advice and chose to make decisions (which were to make no decisions) on their own. If they had asked advice for assistance, they told me, they may have lost control of the trust fund. The administration, they said, was trying to take such power away from them, and they had to show they could do it on their own. And so, the fiscal crisis.

Then there was a move, a rather idiotic one at that, to cut two professional positions from the payroll to reduce expenditures. A former Legal Services Office lawyer had to come in and slap the budget committee's wrists and inform them that such a practice is very much illegal.

Besides all of this, if any student has ever spent a Wednesday night at a Senate meeting, watching those representing us last year, he/she knows how slow the agenda moved, how petty the arguments were, and how we were all taken for a ride. Technically, the University administration shouldn't have control of student funds. But [illegible] this is a big, big but), if the senators can't first realize that administrators do have something to teach them at times, and second, that those at [illegible] and other [illegible] on campus [illegible] effectiveness, the animosity and paranoia will continue to cause poor communication and the embarassing messes can only get worse. Then who'll be sorry?

Evils of the Iron Curtain

Stephen Erickson

Totalitarianism. It is a political regime that consists of what the root word implies—total control. It is best exemplified in the rule of the Nazi Party in Germany and the Communist Party in the Soviet Union. The distinction between state and society removed and the existence of a private sphere denied, the totalitarian form of government seeks to control not only political and economic matters, but all aspects of life, including the values, attitudes, and beliefs of the populace. Control is achieved by allowing absolutely no dissent, no deviation from the Party line, and no individualism. Control is enforced through overwhelming police force, whether it be the Gestapo or the K.G.B. Everything either bends and gives way to the supreme will of the state, or is erased.

Today, the Soviet Union, along with its allies and Communist China, more closely resemble the Orwellian/totalitarian nightmare than any other system on earth. (Orwell's 1984 is banned in the Soviet Union.) The Communist Party is big brother, and, from children who are taught to inform on their parents, to the K.G.B, which has infiltrated every segment of Soviet society, big brother is truly watching.

In 1975, the Soviet Union signed the Helsinki Accords, which supposedly guaranteed freedom of thought, conscience, and religion for all; equality before the law for all; political, civil, economic, social, and cultural rights; and the right to know one's rights and act upon them. Following the signing of the accords, the Soviet Union proceeded to ignore them almost entirely. As thousands of political prisoners work and die in the slave labor camps of Siberia, as the religious are punished for their beliefs, and as Jews and other minorities are treated as second class citizens, those Westerners who place their faith in negotiated treaties with the Soviets out to consider the worthlessness of promises from the Politburo. As Ambassador Schifter, the U.S. representative to the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, has stated, "Our people have a right to wonder whether a country that fails to keep its word in matters unrelated to considerations of its security will do so when its security is at stake" (actually the Soviet record on military treaty compliance is not much better than that of its human rights).

To the Soviets, however, internal control is part of national security. Therefore, the fact that the Soviets have not complied with the Helsinki Accords ought not to surprise us, given the nature of the totalitarian state. Also, the Russians have traditionally been a paranoid lot, and today's Party elite are no exception. They have built themselves one of the world's most classist societies, where privileges are based on high Communist Party affiliations. Coveting their positions, they fear the masses and in their view, to allow the dam to crack a bit or to lose some ability to hold the population in check, is to let the flood rage. In the Soviet view, oppressive governments such as the Shah's Iran of contemporary South Africa are unstable in part, because those governments allow limited degrees of liberty.

Basic to totalitarian control is its psychological effects. Citizens of the Soviet Union must be aware of their complete vulnerability to the state. People must be made to feel that to accept the system is the only way to survive. Total control is to plant defeatism into all those who will not accept the system unconditionally.

No act is considered unconscionable by the Soviet Union as long as it promotes the interests of the state. With this as a guiding principle, Soviet authorities feel free to break treaties, torch the limbs of Afghan children, shoot down civilian airliners, and attempt to murder the Pope. Surely as college students who are supposedly interested in building a more moral world, we should spend more time studying and protesting the evil of Soviet totalitarianism. And if we do not find it to be evil, then what sort of demented moral yardstick are we using?

Applauding for jobs well done

I seek your advice and support relative to a practice which UMass students might inauguarate. The idea is not original: the author is Dr. Walter Hohenstein of the University of Maryland who is president of Phi Kappa Phi, a national honor society which recognizes and awards academic excellen[illegible]

Dr. Hohenstein proposed that members of Phi Kappa Phi initiate on campuses across America a tradition which involves students applauding when a faculty member or graduate student has delivered a well-organized, coherent, and enthusiastic lecture. Such a practice would provide immediate reinforcement for excellent teaching. The lack of applause would send a powerful message to the faculty member or graduate student. We already spontaneously applaud the artists at sport, music, fine arts, and the invited lecturer or speaker as well. Why not applaud our own faculty and graduate [illegible] bibliofile...

By BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Welcome to this semester's first installment of Bibliofile, a weekly column of brief book reviews. We'll start off this week with a reissued classic:

C.S. FORESTER—The Hornblower Saga (Little, Brown $7.95 paper)

Imagine James Bond serving in the British navy during the Napoleonic wars and you have Horatio Hornblower. Here of C.S. Forester's eleven-volume saga (each now re-released under separate cover), Hornblower progresses from midshipman to Admiral through a series of exciting adventures mastering motley crews, battling belligerent French & Spanish sailors, fighting frenzied landlubbers, and warding off the seductive advances of women who (yes) threaten his happy marriage. Written in the vibrant, swashbuckling style of Raphael (Captain Blood, Scaramouche) Sabatini, Forester's books are definitely a fun read.

ISAAC ASIMOV—Asimov's Guide to Halley's Comet (Dell $7.95 paper)

Never one to let something go unexplained, the prolific polymath Dr. Asimov has written a straightfoward, interesting book detailing the history of Halley's comet, and the nature of comets in general. Asimov is amusing and informative as ever, but the book has one major flaw. He neglects to tell us exactly where one can view it. Halley's comet, which will appear between Nov. 1985 -March 1986, only appears once every 75 years. Where can we go to see it? Asimov leaves us eclipsed.

THOMAS B. HOLMES—Electronic and Experimental Music (Scribner's $12.95 paper)

Well all I can say is, it's about time somebody wrote a good accessible guide to alternative music. This book covers the works, simplifying the recording process, detailing the fascinating history (interestingly enough, the first electronic instrument, the telharmonium, was invented in Holyoke), and describing the instruments and techniques. Holmes, the publisher of Recordings in Electronic Music, has even supplied a record guide, listing what he considers to be the best. This listing, ranging from Hendrix, Devo and Enote Cage, Maxfield and Zenakis, has some serious omissions both in individual discography and in neglecting groups. Fripp is mentioned only in connection with Eno and King Crimson, and how could he list New Orger (sp) and ignore Joy Division? Still, not to knock it; his guide does list many obscure and elusive records (ie: Luthar and the Hand People), and his book does make clear a field often poorly explained.

DAN NIMMO and JAMES E. COMBS—Nightly Horrors; Crisis Coverage in Television Network News (The University of Tennessee Press $25)

The study of televison news is a relatively recent one, and a study well justified, as this book proves. Nimmo & Combs examine the different approaches the three networks take in announcing major catastrophes, such as Three Mile Island or Jonestown or the hostage crisis. ABC, they claim, overemphasizes the unmanageability of a situation, suggesting a serious crisis in every event. CBS plays a more placating role, assuring the viewer that everything is under control. NBC takes a more realistic view. While their ideas are interesting and well supported, Nimmo & Combs' book is so scientific, so dryly written that it makes for dull reading. While this book is recommended for the ComStu scholar, the casual reader would be better off waiting for the TV adaptation.

John Grillos retrospective is exuberant

JOHN GRILLO 1985: A RETROSPECTIVE EXHIBITION
By John Grillo
Student Union Art Gallery

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

It was impossible to walk into the Student Union Art Gallery in the Student Union Building this week without smiling. The carnival-like joy of UMass art professor John Grillo's work was there, hung on the walls and dancing over unexpected objects.

The boldest series in this very forthright exhibition is a group of oversized paintings so bright, you'd swear they lit themselves. These works are dominated by strong rectangles in yellows and oranges that positively breathe sunlight. Smaller, lively strokes in cotton-candy pink, mint-green and pastel blue.

And, for the most part, Grillo's subjects were as joyous as his choices of color. For instance, four suns blaze brilliantly from the top of one painting.

In other works, the optimistic mood remains, tempered with a feeling of contentment and quietness. Two sensitively-rendered nude women relax in a golden but muted room. Another work features a pink-torsoed woman smiling quietly to herself, cigarette in hand.

A particularly haunting painting is one of six curvaceous women against a background of Grillo's trademark pastel blocks. They are wearing intriguing Mexican masks, and the viewer wonders just what they are hiding. Adding to the eloquence of the painting is the sorrowful face of a man, somewhat hidden behind a set of red bars.

This abstract woman is one of many entrancing works by John Grillo, on display at the Student Union Art Gallery. Show ends today.

Also somewhat gloomy are Grillo's sculptures. They are roughly-textured and frequently difficult to identify. Nevertheless, they do catch—and capture—the viewer, almost by surprise.

A circular, black-and-white portrait of a nude, kissing couple also works a "can't-walk-away" sort of magic. A voluptous woman curls almost fetally in the arms of a short-haired, dark-eyed lover whose gender is elusive. The atmosphere is somber and solemn, but gentle.

The mood rises to heady optimism again with Grillo's offering of fearlessly colorful painted items, including a gramophone case, a wooden vice, a drop-leaf table, and other less-identifiable—but playfully mischievious—objects. These are covered with confident, cheerful circles in various hues.

On the whole, Grillo's retrospective exhibit, which covers 40 years, is one of both exuberance and reflection. It is worth going far out of your way to see.

The Student Union Gallery, located in theSTudent Union Building, is open Monday-Friday, 11 a.m.-4 p.m. Call 545-0729 for further information.

Hampshire film prof receives award

Hampshire College film studies Professor Jerome Leibling has received a $29,000 grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the college has announced. The grant is in support of Leibling's photographic history of the people of Massachusetts.

Leibling, who works primarily in color, will be structuring his project around the themes of Puritanism, Transcendentalism, ethnicity, mercantilism, and industrialization.

Leibling's exhibit will be a multimedia one which will be able to be presented in theaters, on videotape, or as a slide show.

There's an impressive crop of fall concerts heading toward the valley this semester. Jazz, fusion and pop prformers set to appear in the not-so-distant future are as follows:

Oct. 10—SPYRO GYRA—The fusion group hailing from Buffalo, N.Y. (no pun intended) will play the Calvin Theatre, Northampton.

Oct. 25—MANHATTAN TRANSFER—This jazz/pop quartet, particularly noted for their diverse styles and outstanding vocals, will play Springfield Symphony Hall.

Nov. 1—CHAKA KAHN—The funky, velvet-voiced woman who astounded UMass in the recent past will appear at Springfield Symphony Hall.

Nov. 7—GATO BARBIERI—This Latin-style jazz artist will play the Calvin Theatre, Northampton.

Jazz musician Gato Barbieri is one of several musical artists headed toward the valley this fall.

Nicholas Boraski, vice president and general manager of GE Ordinance Systems Division in Pittsfield and a University of Massachusetts graduate, presented the check yesterday to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and School of Engineering Dean James John. Boraski, who said that one of his duties is to handle the liaision between the University and GE, added, "We're very pleased with this joint venture."

Duffey, accepting the check, said partnership between the University and private industry is important and the "kind of cooperation that is needed."

"The fact is that there is no such thing as a great University that is all private or all public," Duffey said. "You've (GE) made possible so many things. I hope you're seeing some return on your investment."

In January, the University and GE announced a seperate five-year $1 million commitment by GE to become involved with the graduate microwave engineering program in the department of electrical and computer engineering.

GE joins Raytheon, Sanders and Varian as participating companies in the University's microwave graduate program. The agreement between GE and UMass calls for the company to send between five and seven employees to the Amherst campus each year to obtain a Masters of Science degrees with a specialization in microwave engineering, McIntosh said.

GE participation in the masters program will raise the number of industry; participants to about 25 studentsjthis semester. In addition, 50 graduate students who have been sponsored by various research groups, will participate in the program. The total number of students in the microwave program makes UMass one of the major sources of graduates in this area of the country, McIntosh said.

MARK TWAIN NEVER KNEW PILOT PEN.
He wrote beautifully without our Razor Point marker pen and our "Better Ballpoint Pen"... but imagine what he might have written with them.
You may not be a Mark Twain but with a Pilot Razor Point there's no telling what you could do. The Razor Point's durable plastic point conveys every word in a smooth, thin unbroken flow. Express your individual personality with every stroke. Only 98¢
You'll want Pilot's "Better Ballpoint Pen" as well. Its tungsten carbide ball, held securely within a durable stainless steel tip, insures a non-skip ink delivery and smooth write-out. Carbons? They're a breeze because of its uniquely ribbed grip, and there's no writer's cramp. Only 79¢

On Thursday, the men's soccer team opens at home with Connecticut rival Fairfield University. The match against the Stags starts at 4 p.m. at Boyden Field.

The UMass Tourney gets under way for the volleyball team on Friday and finishes up on Saturday.

Saturday will be a busy day for UMass athletics with almost all fall teams in action. The football team is at Richmond, men's soccer hosts Dartmouth, women's soccer hosts New Hampshire College while the seventh-ranked field hockey team (1-0) takes on Pacific at NOPE Field.

The golf team is at the Yale Invitational, the men's tennis team is home against Rhode Island, the women's tennis squad, which as of last week was without a coach, is at URI. The women's golf team will face Mount Holyoke, Springfield and Dartmouth.

For schedule information, reports on games and any other sports news, turn to the sports section of the Daily Collegian.

Any athletic groups wishing to have sports notices run in the paper should contact Peter Abraham at 545-3500 or leave a typed note with the message at the sports desk, 113 Campus Center (in the basement). Notices should be on the desk 48 hours prior to the day of their publication. Thank you for your cooperation.

SPORTS

UMass begins road to Final Four vs. Keene St.

Women's soccer opens

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Coming off two consecutive third place finishes at the Final Four, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team begins the task to reach another as they open their 1985 season with a match against Keene State at 3 p.m. today at Boyden Field.

The Minutewomen, who posted a 15-3-2 slate en route to a New England championship, return ten lettermen including All-American Kristen Bowsher and Catherine Spence, the team's leading returning scorer.

"We want to play good team defense," head coach Kalenkeni Banda said. "We don't want to have any mental lapses. That was our weakness last year."

UMass, the fourth-ranked team in the nation, will be starting five freshmen as they face Keene State, a team that qualified for the 1983 NCAA tournament. "They are a team that could knock us off," Banda warned.

One of the freshmen will be starting in goal where three superb high school goalies have been vying for the starting nod.

Jan Holland, from Aurora, Colorado, will start in nets, but second string keeper Carla DeSantis, from Sudbury, is slated to start against New Hampshire College on Saturday.

"It makes us feel comfortable," Banda said of carrying three healthy goalies. "I won't hesitate to go to the bench. It's just like having quarterbacks. I want them to stop some shots and direct the defense."

Banda is confident in his defense that includes senior co-captain Sue Bird, sophomores Debbie Belkin and Chris Schmitt, and freshman sweeper Susan Montagne.

"I have tremendous confidence that this defense can do the job against anyone in the country. They have strength and speed back there," Banda said.

In the middle, Bowsher will control the middle along with freshman Susan Cooper, a surprise walk-on, and Sandra Stripp, a junior who saw limited action last year after transfering from Middlebury College.

"Bowsher has the option to play the whole field. She's the player of the team. She's a marked player," Banda said. "She has the freedom to go anywhere she wants to support play offensively and defensively."

Spence had 11 goals and eight assists for 30 points last season. Jolie DePauw, last year's leading scorer (14-6-34) and an All-American pick, didn't return to school this semester.

Spence and freshman foward Beth Roundtree will be first off the bench to spell relief for fowards Monica Seta, the leader of the front line, Cathy Cassidy and Michelle Powers. "We'll be doing a lot of switches up front," Banda said.

Senior co-captain Jamie Watson and sophomore middie Carolyn Michael will also provide experience off the bench.

The road to the Final Four is along one, and for the 1985 Minutewomen, it starts today at Boyden Field.

Volleyball starts year at American International

By ROGER CHAPMAN

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team will open the 1985 season tonight at American International College with an almost completely different look from last year's team that finished ranked among the top five teams in the Northeast.

Absent from last season's squad are Patti Grant, who graduated, Mickey Barys, who will sit out this season as a redshirt, and Susie Grant, who elected not to play this season. Also gone are middle hitter Sarah Ryan and outside hitter Leslie Smith.

With these vacancies, head coach Elaine Sortino has been forced to make a few changes in her game plan, as UMass prepared for a difficult 1985 season.

"The new players are coming along well," said Sortino. "We're still a little rough around the edges. We need to mold a unit that works well together on the floor."

Returning for Sortino this season will be outside hitters Sally Maher, who is in her senior year, and junior Annie Ringrose. Defensive specialist Debbie Cole also returns to give Sortino a solid defensive backcourt. Sophomore Marcy Guiliotis also returns to handle the chores at middle hitter.

The most important vacancy is at the setting position where Sortino will be dividing responsibilities between freshmen Julie Primer, who is also a good attacker, and Ann-Marie Larese. Sophomore Cheryl Alves will also see some time at setter. Sortino will be running a 5-1 offense, where one person is setting at all times, instead of a 6-2 offense that utilitzes a two-setter system. Sortino may switch back to the 6-2 offense during the course of the season.

"It's uncommon to see so many new kids being a part of what's going on out there," said Sortino. "It's going to be a little sticky having a new person running the show."

"We'll be up and down the first few weeks, but everything will be fine once they grow and adjust to each other.

UMass will be facing the exact opposite situation against AIC. American returns all six starters from last year's team. UMass lost to AIC in a scrimmage during the summer, but was victorious in two matches last season.

The fact that we lost in the scrimmage is pretty insignificant," Sortino said. "We played a lot of players that either will play different positions or not play at all in the real game. If they (AIC) come into the game being cocky because of the scrimmage, that's good. We'll be a better team than we showed them before."

"They are not a very strong team, but they are very experienced. That will be an advantage in their favor," said Sortino. "If we can pass well and run our offense we'll be okay. We should be able to take it to them on our serve."

"There really isn't anything extraordinary about them," said Sortino. "We have more power, but AIC is playing as a unit, especially with everyone back."

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team faced New England rival Boston University in Boston last night. Due to deadline restraints, the story on the game will appear in Thursday's Collegian.

In other UMass sports action, the volleyball and women's soccer teams are in action today (see above) in their opening games of the season. The spikers are at American International College while the booters face Keene State at Boyden Field. Both Minutewomen teams are embarking on seasons they hope will culminate in tournament appearances at the end of the year.

Speaker forecasts Argentine recovery

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

When Argentine inflation hit 1000 percent in May 1985, the government adopted a new economic policy which is leading the country toward "a much more stable economic and political environment," an Argentine economist said last night.

"Frankly, I don't know how the courts would take it, but I think in truth (the action) was technically correct," Albert Luis Grimoldi said of the economic measures that included freezing public and private salaries.

The Argentine economy, which during the 1930's was expected to become a world leader, had decayed to the point where "nobody wanted to carry a peso" partly because the central bank was printing money when it was needed to pay the debts of a national bank that folded or to pay for the high established interest rates, Grimoldi said.

"Karl Marx said assets had to be socialized," Grimoldi said, "in Argentina, we did just the opposite, we socialized liabilities."

On June 14, 1985, the Argentine president and economic ministers explained a new program. It devalued the national currency against the dollar, froze all prices, placed a higher tax on import and export goods, and raised the price of governmental services such as gas, telephone, and electrical service. The measure included establishing a new monetary unit, the "austral", which is equal to 1000 pesos.

"The next day, people felt that for the first time in years, something was being done," Grimoldi said, "the popularity of government rose strongly."

As a result, wholesale prices in Argentina, which had risen 41.5 percent during the first half of June, dropped two percent and government revenues rose sharply, Grimoldi said.

He added that during inflation, revenues from taxes were much lower because of the value lost during the time it took to collect taxes.

Some of the new policies such as the salary freeze and the tax rate are "transitory", Grimoldi said.

Albert Luis Grimoldi, Argentine economist.

"Argentina will not grow with that kind of taxation," he said, "the government has already cut down on taxes, and it will cut more."

In November 1985 the government faces elections which, Grimoldi believes, they will win.

"This economic plan has made the government so popular they will win the elections," he said, "I feel we are heading towards a much more stable economic and political environments."

If they succeed, I think it's going to be an economic case to be studied."

Grimoldi, who spoke to about 30 people in Herter Hall, graduated from the Catholic University of Argentino in 1965 with a degree of "Licenciado" in economics.

He has served in Argentina as undersecretary of economics and labor, undersecretary of foreign trade, and secretary of industrial development.

The lecture was sponsored by the University-Argentina Program, the Latin American Studies Program and the UMass departments of economics.

SGA debates commuter area appointments

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate, meeting last night for the first time this semester debated over appointments of vacant commuter area senate seats, for about two hours.

When the debate began, a motion to "kill" the appointments by postponing them was passed 27 to 13 with two senators abstaining.

Debate began when senator Kim Hackett, from the Greek area, questioned Senate Speaker John Ruddock as to why three people who had applied for commuter area seats were not appointed by the commuter's governing board.

David Martin, spokesman of the commuter area government, assumed that the governing board did everything legal and wished to interview the five or six people they did not choose further.

Debate continued when Paul Kasman, a commuter, moved to divide the question of resignations and appointments in the senate and debate of the commuter area government's decision separately. The move to divide the question was accepted with no objection.

During the near two hours of debate, Senate Speaker Ruddock said, "unless we have common respect in the senate this year, no action will go forth."

Following the candidate vacancy debate, senate officers presented their summer reports.

Speaker Ruddock stressed student unity on what he called this semester's biggest issue: the Olney report. The Olney report is a salary program. It is a controversial job classification system that sets wage scales for

Campus feels first effects of sexual harassment policy

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The first undergraduate students ever to use the university's formal sexual harassment grievance procedure, currently under the revision process, did so late last semester, resulting in one faculty suspension and one formal faculty reprimand.

Plaintiffs and defendants involved in the cases could not comment, but Myra Hindus, coordinator of the working women's Task Force at the Everywoman's Center who acted as an advocate advisor to the victims said the number of those who report or discuss instances of sexual harassment are still quite low, but awareness about the issue is on the rise.

Hindus cited statistics from a study conducted last semester by the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Project (SAREO) which revealed that 25 percent of UMass women, had been sexually harassed during their time at the university. She adds her office sees a significantly small number in proportion to actual cases because of fear of negative repurcusions and a degree of insecurity.

"We see alot of people who, number one may even be afraid to call and get help even if it's just talking about what happened because they're afraid of getting a bad grade, losing a job, or having someone turn on them and number two, who feel they won't be taken seriously," Hindus said.

She adds that many women remain unaware of their rights they have at the university, and explains that "sexual harassment is any unwanted sexual attention that interferes with someones job or academic performance." Hindus said she believes the university has done an adequate job concerning protection for sexual harassment victims, but there is still "a long way to go."

The current policy which contains both a formal and informal procedure is currently being revised because according to university Ombudsman and co-chair of the sexual harassment committee Howard Gadlin, "When the policy was first developed it was done so with the idea that it would be revised once we had used it for awhile." He said that until university officials had used the policy for a few years did they feel comfortable in making changes in the language and procedures so that it could be more effective.

Gadlin said "in my experience in dealing with this particular issue, we've produced reasonably satisfactory results," adding, that not all of those sexually harassed are women nor are they harassed in a heterosexual situation. "We've seen every possible combination here," he said.

Gadlin himself is the one to see if, in an instance of sexually harassment you desire not to file a complaint. The ombudsman's office acts as mediator in any type of

WORLD AND NATIONAL NEWS

Botha concedes on citizenship for some blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha abandoned a pillar of apartheid yesterday by declaring that blacks consigned to nominally independent tribal homelands can have their South African citizenship restored.

The announcement was coupled with a defiant statement by Botha that South Africa's white-minority government would chart its own course toward racial reform and would not be influenced by pressure from the United States.

In Cape Town, Nelson Mandela, head of the outlawed African National Congress who has been serving a life term in prison since 1964, faced prostate gland surgery, members of his family said.

Mandela, who is revered by millions by blacks, will decide on surgery after consultations with his doctors, they said. Doctors provided by the government said the 67-year-old black nationalist is suffering from an enlarged prostate gland and has cysts on his liver and right kidney.

Also in Cape Town, hundreds of enraged mourners at a riot victim's funeral kicked and stabbed to death a mixed-race policeman. Police said the plainclothes policeman fired into the mixed-race crowd, seriously injuring one mourner, as he struggled to save himself after being recognized as a policeman.

Police said they shot and killed a 4-year-old girl as she played in her home during rioting in a Pretoria black town-ship on Tuesday. Her death raised the toll in South Africa's 13 months of anti-apartheid turmoil to at least 709.

Botha told a party congress that 3 million blacks living in "white" South Africa but who are official citizens of four independent homelands will have their citizenships restored. He also was prepared to give 'dual citizenship' to an additional 5 million blacks living inside the four homelands.

"This is additional proof of this government's willingness to react to the agendas of those on the other side of the negotiating table," Botha declared at the Orange Free State province congress of his ruling National Party in Bloemfontein.

"This is the manner in which we will build a common future and not by throwing stones and carrying red flags."

The statement was a far cry from giving the vote to blacks. Under apartheid, South Africa's 5 million whites rule 24 million blacks who are denied most rights.

But the announcement marked Botha's first outright acknowledgement that a grand design of apartheid - that blacks are not South Africans but citizens of 10 small, fragmented homelands, is over. Six other homelands have refused independence.

The homeland policy "denationalizes" black people, who have been made citizens of tribal homelands with varying degrees of self rule. The system of homelands is scorned by many blacks in South Africa and the homelands are not recognized abroad.

The South African president said the four homelands will remain "sovereign states," rejecting anti-apartheid leaders' demands for scrapping the homelands policy.

"It is the first real step they've taken away from apartheid," said Sheena Duncan, head of the anti-apartheid Black Sash movement.

Police crack big burglar ring which affected much of state

BROOKFIELD (AP) — State Police said yesterday that they believe at least three groups of thieves are responsible for more than 100 burglaries in western and central Massachusetts during June and July.

At least three persons have been arrested in the housebreaks, warrants have been issued for 10 others and "more arrests may come after indictments," said Trooper Bruce Hopper of the Brookfield State Police Barracks.

"The breaks we are working on are as far apart as Reading and Amherst. In a good portion of them, we either have warrants on individuals or there have been arrests. We are now working on trying to get some of the property back," Hopler told the Daily News in Springfield.

The town of Charlton was hardest hit with 47 burglaries, he said. He had no estimates on the value of the stolen property, but said "it will run in the thousands of dollars."

In most cases, police believe the thieves "banded together to commit burglaries and suport a drug habit," Hopper said. "It has really been a coordinated effort on the part of the state police and other local police departments.

Professor talks about peace movement

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

In order to succeed in its goals, the peace movement must restructure its program, the Five College Professor of Peace and World Security Studies at Hampshire College said yesterday in a lecture in the Campus Center.

"The price (of the failure of the peace movement) is truly catastrophic, the risk of nuclear war will be infinitely greater," said Michael T. Klare, who recently published "Road Map for the Peace Movement." in The Nation.

The peace movement is not reducing militarism, troops in Central America, nor are they reversing the arms' race, said Klare. "Within fifteen or twenty years if the peace movement does not become effectual, the chances of nuclear war and increased militarism is almost certain," he said.

Copying the structure of the new right, which has been very successful recently, and which they "stole from the new left in the 1960's could be the solution to the problems of the peace movement," he said.

"We must reach the American public through more grassroots organization," he said, instead of concentrating on lobbying Congress and other non-community organizations.

The peace movement must try to get the most out of the limited amount of resources they have, political power, money and media access, he said.

"We have to work on accuracy in the press," and look towards getting more affirmative press coverage," Klare said.

"We have to concentrate on basic human values and moral emphasis," Klare said. The peace movement should try to use the right-to-life issue to its advantage by saying once the child is born, it should not be killed in a nuclear holocaust, Klare said.

Students can still find a place to live with local families

By KATHLEEN HART
Collegian Staff

With a housing shortage on-campus and apartments off-campus full to capacity, one alternative left for the homeless student is to rent a room in a family home.

"Rooms in family homes have always been available through this office," Director Joanne Levenson of the off-campus Housing Officer said. "But there seem to be more than usual this year due to three things."

According to Levenson those three things are • 1. The shortage of housing at the University of Massachusetts • 2. People have the room as their own children have moved out or are in college • 3. Someone else living there will offset the cost.

The off-campus Housing Office has a listing of all rooms available, and makes weekly callings to keep the listings up-to-date. There are over 4,200 listings every year, and it is higher this year, said Levenson. However, Levenson said the opportunity is "under-utilized by students."

The reason for this may be that many renters have conditions that the students must abide by. "The student must accept the rules of the house," said Levenson. "It can be a good situation for a lot of people," she added.

Levenson said some conditions may include limited kitchen use, or quiet hours. "And if the family has children, they may demand that you don't have any overnight guests," said Levenson.

One professional staff member, who did not want to be named, has been renting to students for the past six semesters. "Some have been great, but some have been disasterour," she said.

She lives with her husband in a raised ranch, and her children have all moved out. Her youngest is still in college, and she said the extra money that comes in from the tenants helps to pay for his education.

We rent out the bottom floor which includes two bedrooms, a private bath, and a family room with a fireplace," she said. "We look for non-smoking students who are quiet, serious and private because that's how we are."

Rent varies for rooms depending on where the home is located and how old the home is. Levenson said a room in a new home will be more expensive because of the mortgage. "People have their own formulas at arriving at a fair rent," Levenson said. Rooms generally go for between $150 - $400, she added.

"Rent is about the same as living in an apartment complex off-campus, but people feel that their home is better," said Levenson, "homes are not in a complex and are more private."

Interested students can go to off-campus housing, 423 Student Union, for more information or to look through the listings.

UMass professor honored

By SIOBHAN MASTERSTON
Collegian Staff

Among our ranks at the University of Massachusetts is a professor, who besides being involved in numerous pioneering studies, was just appointed as the new president of the American Psychologist Association (APA).

Psychology professor Bonnie Strickland, former associate to the chancellor, will begin her term as president in 1986. APA, founded in 1892, has 80,000 members, and has developed the code of ethics that is used by psychologists nationwide, Strickland said. "It publishes over 18 journals, and sponsors annual conventions," she added. APA has, since a recent purchase, become the owners of the widely read Psychology Today.

"Half of graduate students are women and the ratio is two to one with undergraduates in psychology."
—Bonnie Strickland

Psychology professor Bonnie Strickland

Strickland has been involved in many of the early studies surrounding a concept called the "locus of control." This states that people are affected differently by their surroundings, either influenced by external or internal forces.

During the 1960's, Strickland used this concept in her study of black civi-rights activists in the south, where she found "people who were willing to engage in these dramatic social actions were more likely to be internal in their beliefs."

Strickland is now working on how beliefs relate to health. "I am interested in behavioral influences on the immune system," she said. Strickland explained that the interaction of emotions and the body is evident in cases where depressed people are susceptible to colds or infections, and where an older person becomes ill soon after losing their mate.

According to Strickland, the number of women psychologists is dramatically increasing. "Half of graduate students are women and the ration is two to one with undergraduates in psychology."

The UMass phychology department, of which she's been a part of for 13 years, "has the largest number and proportion of women in a university department," she said, adding, "I'm very excited. The department and UMass has been unbelievably helpful."

Area bar business increases

By MICHAEL ALTER
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst bar owners have noticed an increase in business, which they say can be attributed to the closing of University of Massachusetts bars in late August.

UMass bars closed because of a lack of liability insurance for alcohol related accidents, and they will not be able to sell alcohol until at least November.

One bar which did report increase directly from the closings was The Spoke, co-owned by Miles Washburn and Doug LeBlanc.

"The students have no place to go on campus so they come into town. The first place they see is us. Business has picked up directly from the closing, and it's not just us. All bars in Ahmerst will benefit, said Washburn, who besides co-owning The Spoke is a student at UMass.

His partner, Dog LeBlanc isn't as sure. "It's hard to say. This is our first September so we have nothing to judge it against. With the Blue Wall and the Drake out, we have to be picking up business, anyway." said LeBlanc.

Steve Smith, manager of Charlie's, agreed with Washburn. "The food business is pretty much the same, but the bar is getting busier, especially since it should be less with the raising of the drinking age and laws being enforced more. We lost eight monts worth of drinking age people," Smith said.

Judy, owner of Judie's and Barsie's, who wouldn't give her last name said, "We haven't noticed any difference. We can only take so many people into the bar so our business doesn't change. However, one thing I have noticed is that people are waiting in line longer. They don't have a choice about where they go anymore, so they just go in line where their friends are, and it becomes a social thing. It has become more important than which bar they choose."

Maria Fowler, manager of Chequers Restaurant on University Drive said business has increased "slightly" during the lunch hours, "because the Campus Center has closed it's bar business."

Banned Books Display at the University Store

Of Mice and Men is "filthy." Judy Blume's Are You There GOD? It's Me Margaret is "sexually offensive and amoral," and the American Heritage Dictionary contains "objectionable language ."

Books such as these have been challenged or banned on similar grounds during the past year. They can be found on display at the University Store located in the campus center during national Banned Books Week, September 7-14, 1985 --Celebrating the Freedom to Read. Most of the books on display are well-known but are considered dangerous and offensive by individuals or groups who would deny others access to them.

In the past year, these books were challenged: Ruth Bell's Changing Bodies, Changing Lives, because of "foul language and disregard for a wholesome balance about human sexuality," Robert Cormier's The Chocolate War, because it is "blatantly graphic, pornographic and wholly unacceptable in a high school library," and Harper Lee's To Kill a Mockingbird, because it "represents institutionalized racism under the guise of good literature."

The University Store is participating in Banned Books Week, 1985 which is cosponsored by the American Library Association, the American Booksellers Association, the Association of American Publishers, the American Society of Journalists and Authors, and the National Association of College Stores. It is endorsed by the Center for the Book of the Library of Congress. The sponsors believe that book banners act with the intent of protecting their families and communities from perceived injustices and evils and preserving the values and ideals they would have the entire society embrace. The result of banning books however is always the denial of another's right to read.

The University Store encourages all to come in and view the display.

"Students who normally had supervisory rights over programmatic concerns have had this right taken away as a result of the Olney study," Ruddock said. "Olney is something everyone will be looking at in the coming year," he added.

In other business, the senate moved to transfer $10,000 from the Board of Governor's Program Reserve to Union Program Council (UPC), to cover costs of the Lone Justice and dB's concert on Sept. 14. Also, it moved to transfer $22,000 from the UPC and Student Activity Fee (SATF), to UPC to cover the initial costs for the Sept. 19 UB40 concert. And $5,390 from UPC/SATF was transferred to UPC administration to cover administrative costs.

The senate approved Mon. Sept. 30 and Tuesday Oct. 1 as senate election dates. In addition, nomination papers deadlines for prospective senators were voted to be filled out between Sept. 11 and Sept. 24.

Language labs get new machine

Duplicator speeds up taping

By BRIAN McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

Students enrolled in a foreign language course will no longer have to wait two to five days for cassette tapes because high-speed duplicating machines are going to be installed at the language labs in early October.

These machines will be located in the hallway outside the language labs in the basement of Herter Hall, and will be made available for students to use on their own.

"It runs 16 times faster than a cassette will be played," said Hans Fritsch, director of the language labs. "a 60-minute tape can be copied in two minutes," he said.

The duplicating machines will enhance the language lab take-out service, which Fritsch said is "more important since our staff has been cut by 50-percent and facilities at least as much." The staff now consists of two full-time workers and two students.

"The duplicating will now be turned over to the students. We don't have the time to do it," he said.

Fritsch emphasized that much of the duplicating was previously done by students in two rooms in Bartlett Hall while they listened to the tapes, but those facilities have since been replaced by computers.

The University ordered eight duplicating machines, six to be used, and two to be kept for replacemnt, said Fritsch.

The estimated cost of the machines, including carts to place them on, a de-magnitizer, and cassette decks to check the recordings, "is close to $4,200," said Fritsch. The machines are being purchased with capital outlay funds for renovation and equipment replacements.

The planned installation of the duplicating machines has prompted positive reactions from foreign language departments.

"The lab will be exactly like a library, take out a cassette instead of a book," said Daniel Martin, director of interpreter's studies. "The former system was very cumbersome . . . had to fill out a form and wait a day or two," Martin said.

"Once the machines are in operation, students won't have to wait," said Spanish professor Marie Sheppard, "We're really excited about it."

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated income and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus just over a quarter of a million dollars — $253,000, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $170,000, owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

A mild winter saved over $10,000 in plowing and overtime costs, and the Board of Education ($60,000), the Board of Selectmen ($160,000) and the disputes which may arise among those in the university community. "We'd sit down with the person who is being sexually harassed and figure out a way to get a very clear message across to the person doing the harassing that (his/her) behavior is upsetting and unacceptable," Gadlin said.

According to Hindus, the formal hearing process is used if parties involved do not agree to use the informal proceedings, or if it does not result in a settlement, or if the resolution agreed upon is not carried out. The person bringing the grievance must then come before a 13-member sexual harassment hearing panel, appointed by the chancellor who will hear and consider testimony and other relevant, reliable evidence, to make findings of fact, to determine whether the policy on sexual harassment has been violated and, if so, to recommend appropriate penalties and relief. The university administers this policy and procedures under the Office of Affirmative Action.

Bicycle collision injures two, Washington has small fire

Two University of Masschusetts students were injured when their bicycles collided near the Southwest tunnel Tuesday morning.

While trying to avoid pedestrians, the bikes collided. One of the men lost control of his bike and struck a light pole. He suffered to injuries to his neck and shoulders and was taken to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, University of Massachusetts police said. The other man was taken to the University Health Services where he was treated for shoulder and neck injuries and released, police said.

In other police reports:

• A fire was set to a corkboard on the 14th floor of Washington dormitory early yesterday morning. It was extinguished by a resident assistant. Minor damage was done to the bulletin board and the floor below was slightly charred, said police.

• A rug valued at $200 was taken from the Campus Center Concourse Monday or Tuesday, police said. There are no suspects.

• A 1985 Toyota recieved $200 in damages during a hit and run accident in parking lot 45. A note stating the license number of the offender was left on the windshield by a pedestrian who witnessed the accident, police said.

• An 18-year-old student was charged with being a minor transporting alcohol. He will be summoned to court, police said.

Get our new $49* software module when you buy an HP-41.

It's a deal that has no equal, for a calculator that has no equal.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Do it now. The phone call is free.

But our new module won't be for long.

Our students for students

Roth/Burgess

So - what does the SGA do? Who is the SGA? Who really cares? How can the SGA possibly affect me - the so-called "average" student?

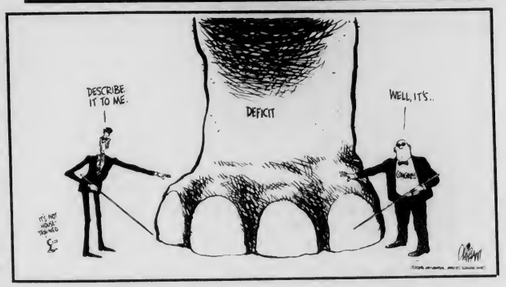
Good questions? As your elected "official" representatives to the University faculty, staff, administration, and board of trustees, we have a genuine interest and responsibilty to convey to you what is going on, and exactly why it matters. Last week, we introduced ourselves and our jobs, so this week we would like to introduce the SGA or the Student Government Association, especially to those of you who are new and/or unfamiliar with this apparently abstract entity.

The Student Government Association is a very complex structure designed to promote student empowerment and influence at the University. All fee-paying undergraduates are voluntary members of the SGA. Membership includes voting rights and the right to hold office and/or gain employment within the SGA. The SGA is certainly awesome in its size and function.

All registered student organizations (RSO's) are registered with the SGA. All funded RSO's receive funding via the SGA budgeted Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF). The SATF is funded by you - at $44 per semester per student. This roughly equals $1.6 million annually, not counting revenue generated by Student Controlled Businesses (SCB's). Areas of significant funding include the PVTA, the Legal Services Office (LSO), the Union Program Council (UPC), the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), the Student Activities Office (SAO), the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP), WMUA, area governments, Nummo News, Union Video Center (UVC), the Office Third World Affairs (OTWA) among many others - not the least of which is SGA administrative costs - but certainly one of the most efficient and cheapest administrations on this campus!

The SGA is governed by the Student Senate. The senate is composed of approximately 120 elected senators and meets every Wednesday night at 7 p.m. in room 163 or room 101 of the Campus Center. The senate determines policies and procedures for the SGA. The majority of Senate work is done in Committees. The Senate Committees include: Public Policy, Finance, Academic Affairs, Governmental Affairs, Budget, Rents and Fees, and Coordinating Committees. Senators participate in senate meetings and at least one committee.

There are four officers of the SGA. These are the Co-Presidents (us), Stacy as the campus president and Dani as the student trustee, the SGA Treasurer, Diane Rossi, and the Speaker of the senate, John Ruddock.



So, now you know a few of the common acronyms and have a basic idea of the overall structure. But the question still persists - what does the SGA do for me? Our SGA is one of the most powerful in the world, both in terms of influence and financial control. We are also somewhat unique with our own full time attorneys, paid for by students to work for students. Free legal advice and/or representation is available to those students (and occasionally the SGA as a whole) who so desire it. Granted, it is only free in the sense that the buses are free. Student pay for both services.

The size of the SGA and the scope of its activities make it difficult to conceptualize. WMUA is financed by the SGA; the Public Policy Committee lobbies for the SGA in Boston (on such issues as the drinking age and the Student Regent Bill); the SGA provides the administration with an essential check and balance; the Course and Teacher Evaluation (CATE) guide is produced and financed by the SGA; issues of human oppression are strongly addressed by the SGA; the Off Campus Houseing Office (OCHO) is significantly funded by the SGA; activities essential to students are supported and financed by the SGA; and SGA provides a critical mechanism to "get things done!"

The SGA struggles with City Hall - and often wins. Of course, some people call the SGA City Hall and, to a large extent, they are correct - yet the SGA is one of the most accessible and flexible City Halls in existence. If you like what your SGA is doing, great - if you don't . . . well, democracy is your responsibility too. Come to the SGA with problems, ideas, concerns, and, if you are a little persistent, you will find that you have the power to effect change. Become a senator, find a meaningful internship within the SGA, and help students work for students!

Think about it.

'Merciful' death penalty

Rusty Denton

Not to be morbid or vindictive, but I've been thinking about capital punishment lately. The functions of justice seem to have been mangled in the debate over it, and I think it's time to reconsider our national negligence toward reprisal.

Justice doesn't end with impartial trials. Sentencing should include restoring the victim's loss and more, or avenging it. Punishment should fit the crime. I suggest that death fits the crimes of murder, rape, armed robbery, kidnapping and treason. Although even deadly felons have some inalienable rights, their right to live was forfeited when they maliciously endangered another's. To treat them in certain ways though, would degrade our own humanity. Thus, execution, but not torture.

Execution itself challenges some beliefs about human dignity: that "people are basically good," and that "understanding will resolve all problems." It challenges situational ethics and fear of responsibility. Little wonder so many people oppose it.

Among arguments they make are:

We need to understand that felons are products of their environment; if we change their environment, they'll reform. The effect is to say that "nobody is responsible for anything." However, if some can take credit for their own successes, then others can take the blame for their own criminal choices. Rehabilitation for deadly criminals? Maybe. But let's not try it unless we first find someone of good reputation who is willing to stake his/her life on the villian's reformed nature. Whether friend, judge, jury or legislature, whoever secures a felon's right to live is ultimately responsible for that felon's future crimes, either in prison or later.

Making life-or-death decisions is arrogant, has a cheap view of life, and renders reversal impossible for a wrong conviction. Has a capital criminal done less than hold human lives in the balance, like God? We have the highest view of human life, protecting it with the most extreme retribution. As for executing innocents, heaven forbid! But will you allow 1000 vicious individuals terrorize prisons and cities because one might be innocent?

Capital punishment is unfairly applied and doesn't curb violent crime. It's not fair to pamper the rich, the white, and the connected! But it's not just to soften penalties against convicted criminals. And it's true, the penalty won't curb crime if it is not used. However, California's execution chamber has convinced more than one burglars not to kill a homeowner.

Capial punishment is "not Christian" because it's unforgiving and doesn't allow second chances. The motive is not vindictiveness, but the safety of others (that's called "love"). The forgiveness of God was purchased with blood in the Bible: that's the price of justice. To demand that deadly criminals receive mercy and life without the price of justice is to ask for ungrateful convicts who demand as their right what is only a gift, who have no agreement that what they did was wrong. Our prisons are full of people like that, people who would do it again. There should be no second chance given to kill, rape, and maim. The only second chance should be when a responsible citizen agrees to take the blame and the penalty along with the convict for any further felonies. This is consistent with Christ's redemptive death and with New Testaments commandments for evidence of contrition.

Some have charged that proponents of capital punishment are cold and merciless. Not at all. The cries of the victimized just speak more loudly to us than the cries of the criminal.

Attention, support needed to protect students.

Long before the wave of pyromania swept this campus, the Peoples' Gay Alliance had the forethought to buy a fireproof board to be used as a sign-board, to be hung in the Student Union. Our sign, along with those belonging to several other RSO groups was cut down, towards the end of last summer, without any forwarning, or even the courtesy of a phone call. After some investigation, we were told they were removed by order by the Fire Marshall, since they were a fire hazard. Only the valiant efforts of someone from the Students Activities Office managed to save them since the culprits of the sign caper were quite willing to dispose of our property.

We have in the past week, hacked off a part of the sign and submitted it to the fire test required by the powers-that-be. It passed. Now, with the confidence that we could put our free advertising back where it belongs, I went to building operations to inform them of this. I was told that I would have to wait until the following day so that it could be checked with the sign (board) committee. Severe static! Who is the sign committee, I asked. They didn't know, but told me to call the Board of Governors or the Student Activities Office.

The B.O.G. has nothing to do with the allocation of space on the Student Union balacony. S.A.O., on the other hand, has let student groups display their signs on a first-come, first-serve space-available basis at no charge. With this knowledge I returned to Building Operations, where the truth be known, the sign can't go back because of their aesthetic quality. In plain English, the Heads of Building Operations or their superiors think they're ugly.

How much is that little Campus Center fee that you get socked with every semester? What does it go to? Penny after penny it goes to pay off your Student Union. I tremble at the thought that it might go the pay the salaries of the producers of the tremendous mounds of red-tape that I have had to sift through to find out this much.

There is precious little free advertising available on campus. Perhaps Building Operations would like to foot the bill for people to take out an ad in the Collegian every time a group wants to hold a sale, show a movie, or have an outing or dance. While I agree that our signs should pose no fire threat and be safely secured, what right do they have to determine the aesthetic balance (ha!) of our building.

Administrative red tape rears its head

The Olney study, a controversial wage and classification study that was implemented for the professional staff of UMass, has given impetus to a union organizing drive across the campuses of UMass/Amherst, Boston, and Worcester. The students of UMass are being adversely affected by this study in that professional paid out of the SATF (Student Activities Trust Fund) have had their programmatic authority shifted from the students to the administration.

Within the new job descriptions created by the study, most references to student government and student board involvement in supervision of programs and professionals have been eliminated. Correspondingly, the role of the Director of the Student Activities Office has been greatly increased. To add insult to injury, students employed under professionals' supervision are only counted as one-half of an employee in these job evaluations! The Olney study is, therefore, a reorganization that systematically disempowers the students of the University of Massachusetts.

The Olney study is one important issue in this union organizing campaign, but it certainly is not the main issue. The main issue is democracy in the workplace. Professional are working with the Office and Professional Employees International Union (OPEIU) to form an organization in order to prevent further unilateral decisions that impact seriously upon their lives. In a collective bargaining setting, the administration would be required to bargain over the professionals' wages and conditions of employment. In the event of grievances, an unbiased arbitrator would make the final judgement on impasses that cannot be settled informally.

By the end of the Fall semester, OPEIU expects to have authorization cards asking for a union election signed by 50 percent of the professional staff. A union election can be held when 30 percent of the workers request one. It is my hope that students will support professionals in this effort in order to prevent further erosion of student power.

The dB's gear up for their Saturday night performance with Lone Justice. Concert is to be in the Student Union Ballroom.

live wire

by Peter Wissoker

This is the first, new, computer-generated Live Wire and boy is it going to be loaded with some exciting information. But first a moment of silence for the death of one of the finest and perhaps the most down to earth clubs in the area, the Rusty Nail. Burning to the ground last month the day before it was to be sold, the Nail held memories of all kinds of things from Billy Idol to the twelve-person James Brown Revue which barely fit on the stage.

This week brings those stars of the media, Lone Justice, to the SUB on Saturday night. It seems that we're looking at the possibility of one of the most exciting shows in a while. This is history as it happens. Not to say that they are Elvis Costello but remember he started out playing the Hatch. (Actually he got booed off stage without finishing his set, but that's another story).

As if this wasn't enough UPC is also kind enough to bring us British dub musicians UB40. They'll be playing the Fine Arts Center next Thursday. Now is the time to praise UPC because later in the semester they will be the source of much frustration. No offense intended, they do the best they can, which right now is actually quite good. Keep it up kids.

Ah yes, the dB's will be warming up for Lone Justice.

Believe it or not there is musical life past the boundaries of the campus, despite the missing Rusty Nail. There are two major clubs left in the area, plus a few other peripheral clubs. This week's big excitement is a performance tonight, by Face to Face at Pearl Street. The Iron Horse has the Paradise City Jazz Band on Friday night and Boston Singer Patty Larkin on Saturday. Among her better known songs is the ode to the Dodge Dart entitled "Dodge Dart" appropriately enough.

Sheenan's in Northampton as a rule has reasonable dance music almost every night. The Iron Horse has guitarist Preston Reed on Sunday.

That's about it for the big excitement this week. Coming into the area are John Fahey, Holly Near, The Stompers and others. We'll let you know. Otis Day and the Knights, star of Southwest week will be playing at Pearl Street next Thursday.

And finally because everyone else is talking about how dumb it is to rate records I might as well do the same. It's a stupid idea.

Nicaragua film to be shown

Living at Risk, a documentary film exploring the life of a middle-class family in Nicaragua, will be shown at Hampshire College.

The film is the work of Susan Meiselas, the author of Nicaragua, a photography book examining the Nicaraguan revolt against Somoza. These photos have also appeared on the cover of The New York Times Magazine, and in Geo. Meiselas is also co-editor of El Salvador, a book including the work of 30 photojournalists (See related story, page 15). The screening will be at 8 p.m., Friday, Sept. 27, in the main lecture hall of Franklin Patterson Hall, and is sponsored by the Five College Program on Peace and World Security Studies. Admission is free.

El Salvador photographs on display at Hampshire

INSIDE EL SALVADOR
Library Gallery, Hampshire College
Through Sept. 27

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

The current exhibit of photographs at the Library Gallery at Hampshire College is aptly titled "Inside EL SALVADOR." For the uncanny success of these frontline photos is that they do indeed take you inside the small, war-torn country which we, as Americans, are so inextricably involved with and yet so poorly informed about.

In conjunction with the exhibition, which has travelled for over a year through the states, one of its curators, Susan Meiselas, gave an informal gallery talk on Monday. Meiselas, a photographer herself who has worked extensively in Latin America and who is a member of Magnum, has several books to her credit, including a collaboration with 29 other photographers entitled El Salvador, from which the photos in the exhibit were drawn.

For all the press that the war in El Salvador has received over the past five years, one might think that the exhibit would be stale. And you will recognize some of the photos, such as the ravaged bodies of the four American churchwomen being dragged from an unmarked grave site.

Yet despite the fact that the 30 photographers featured are among "the world's most highly esteemed photojournalists," more than 75 percent of the photographs on display were never published by their regular publishers: Time, Newsweek, etc. Meiselas quoted one editor as saying that "America is not ready for the Third World."

Ready or not, Meiselas and her peers put the book together, painstakingly searching out the most poignant and pertinent works. The photographers decided collectively, "No, we are not going to make a book about ourselves, we are going to make a book about them (the people of El Salvador) . . . to give a sense of everyday life and how real people's lives are affected by the war." So all of the photographers whom they knew had worked in El Salvador were invited to participate.

The result is an historical document of El Salvador in the eighties which transcends the fascination of major media with violence and getting the most sensational shot. Not that the dismembered bodies of the victims of the Mozote massacre are seen against a backdrop of tropical tranquility. The artful juxtaposition of elements evoke in the viewer an undeniable sense of injustice, of something terribly wrong.

It is not the shock value of unadulterated violence—and many of the pictures are shocking—that moves us so much as it is the expressions of grief in the faces of women looking through photographs of unidentified corpses at the Human Rights Commission Office, mothers searching for their missing sons. There is an intimacy in these photos which allow us to really feel for these people.

When the book was published in 1983, (and it is now technically sold out even though there are still some copies available in area bookstores) someone at the New York Times told Meiselas, "You've put us to shame." It is not that the photos give an alternative view politically that places them on the outside of major American media; it seems rather that these photos represent a world, a real world, which is somehow outside the scope of even the Times magazine.

Apart from the book however, the photography exhibit has a life of its own. It goes beyond the usual limits of press photography and achieves unprecedented depths of beauty, impact, and insight. Meiselas concluded her talk by saying that at one time she had hoped that these photos would be the "images that would bridge the distance between America and Latin America." Now she simply wants as many poeple to see the photos as possible.

To my way of seeing, this is the first real view of the war in El Salvador that I have ever seen. It is also the best exhibit of contemporary photographs I have seen in the Valley or for that matter anywhere. The photojournalists who took the photos risked a great deal to bring them to us. Several of the photographers in the exhibit have since been killed while working in El Salvador (31 members of the press have thus far been killed in El Salvador).

In comparison, our risk in seeing these photographs is slight. The real risk is not seeing them. The exhibit closes Friday, Sept. 27.

Before you make a long distance commitment, make sure you know what you're getting into.

If Fletcher Christian and Captain Bligh had known what being stuck in the same boat would mean, chances are neither would have set foot aboard.

And if you're stuck in the same boat with a long distance company that doesn't give you all the services you need, it's easy to harbor mutinous thoughts.

But when you pick AT&T as your long distance company, you know you're in for smooth sailing.

You'll get trouble-free, reliable service. Immediate connections—even during the busiest hours. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate on state-to-state calls. And operators to assist you with immediate credit for wrong numbers and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, sign aboard with AT&T. With AT&T Long Distance Service, you'll never be left stranded. Reach out and touch someone.®

Micheel sent another shot under the crossbar after the Roundtree pass and made it 4-0 to complete the first half scoring.

"We just took every opportunity. When one team is a lot stronger, there's not much one team can do," Micheel said explaining UMass' offensive domination.

Banda instructed his players to "take no prisoners" as they went out in the second half and the Minutewomen left nothing untouched as they scored five more goals.

Senior Jamie Watson, sophomores Kristen Bowsher and Debbie Belkin scored along with Micheel and Cassady for the 9-0 margin, UMass' biggest win in over three years.

The schedule doesn't get easier for the third ranked Minutewomen at they take on New Hampshire College Saturday at Boyden. New Hampshire went 19-0 last year and won the ECAC title. UMass is ranked behind number one George Mason and California, who UM beat 4-1 in the first round of the Final Four last fall.

"The biggest problem is motivation," said Schmiechen. "The rest of the season is an uphill climb. We have dug ourselves a big hole."

Gettler and Schmiechen have no plans to make any changes after Tuesday's disappointing results.

"We will try to use F. J. (Zwicklbauer), Anders (Hedelin), Andy Bing, and Ferdie Adoboe to put the ball in the net," said Schmiechen. "We are going to have to count more on those four players."

Gettler is optimistic about his teams play in front of the home fans.

"We play better in front of a crowd," said Gettler. "We like the homefield advantage, it's worth 2-3 goals to us."

Despite letting up five goals Tuesday night, Gettler is staying with Donahue, a senior in net over freshman Sam Ginsburg, who has a hurt leg. "He (Donahue) is our keeper," said Gettler.

After today's game, the Minutemen's next contest is at home against Dartmouth on Saturday at 11 a.m.

UM dominates opener as Micheel gets eight points, defense shines

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Things happen fast with the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team.

It took the third ranked Minutewomen just 1:35 and one shot to take a 1-0 lead in their season opener with Keene State. After 2:42 had elapsed in the game, UMass was up 2-0.

"You have to give the girls credit," head coach Kalekeni Banda said. "They came to play."

Play is what UMass did as they simply destroyed a hopelessly overmatched Keene State squad by a 9-0 count yesterday at Boyden Field.

Sophomore Carolyn Micheel led the offensive charge for the Minutewomen with two goals and four assists. "I was just glad I was able to contribute," said a modest Micheel. Freshman Cathy Cassady also had two goals and added an assist.

"It was a good start," Banda said. "We did everything we wanted to." UMass dominated the game on the field and on paper. The UMass defense didn't give up a shot as the Minutewomen outshot the visitors, 31-0. UM goalie Jan Holland, a freshman, didn't have to make a save.

Massachusetts, 1-0, dominated every facet of the game and covered the field with speed and skill. Banda wants his team to play the whole field and yesterday they did it well.

"He wants a lot of overlapping," Micheel, a midfielder, said.

Banda had said in the pre-season that he wants the defense to be able to move the ball up and he wants the forwards to be able to play defense.

"He wants everyone to play offense and defense," senior co-captain Susan Bird said.

"We're going to have to play that way in this division," he said. "Everyone has to play total soccer. We want everyone to feel comfortable in every area of the field. No one is a position player."

Micheel started off the game by breaking through the Keene State defense and passing the ball to Cassady who went one on one with goalie Jen Conard and faked her out for 1-0 lead. That was soon followed by drives upfield by defenders Chris Schmitt and Bird.

It was 2-0 just 67 seconds after the first goal as sophomore Monica Seta headed in the first corner kick of the year. Micheel picked up the assist.

Forwards Michele Powers and Cassady showed excellent speed on the forward line just as did sophomore Cathy Spence and freshman Beth Roundtree. Roundtree has two assists.

Keene State's best chance at a goal came with 35:50 left in the first half when Katie McKay took a chip shot that glanced off a post. But it was as close as the New Hampshire team would come as UMass simply just controlled the ball at will.

Defender Schmitt gave UMass the 3-0 with 34:31 left in the first half as she took a Micheel pass, dribbled a second and fired a shot that just went under the crossbar. Conard had no chance at all.

"We had some nice goals today," Banda said. "They weren't any cheap ones."

Then the substitutes started to flow in but UMass didn't slow. Spence, who tallied most of her 30 points last year coming off the bench, Roundtree, Susan Cooper and Stripp all saw time.

Men's soccer shutout by BU

Minutemen face Fairfield at home today in key match

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The final score of many contests is often misleading as to how close a game really was, unfortunately for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, the last count was all that mattered.

Tuesday night, the Minutemen (1-2) dropped a 5-0 decision to Boston University in just such a game.

"It was an even game," said headcoach Jeff Gettler. "Their shots went into the goal and ours didn't."

"We were not pummelled," added assistant coach Tim Schmiechen. "We did not take advantage of our opportunities. We could not buy a goal."

The statistics back Schmiechen's claim. Both goalkeepers, Don Donahue for UMass and John OleMoe for BU, had seven saves and the number of shots by each team was about even.

The Terriers got the only goal they would need from Varcos Derosiers at 19:07 of the game. Two tallies a piece by Gary Swanson and Mike Emenalo completed the scoring for BU.

The big difference in the contest was the play OleMoe, a foreign import from Norway. The two time all-american constantly frustrated the UMass offense.

BU's defensive gameplan also slowed the Minutemen's attack. "They played a swarm defense and we were not ready for that," said Schmiechen. "We did not play well enough to combat that."

The loss is a big letdown for UMass coming into today's home opener against Fairfield University.

"It was a devastating loss for us," said Schmiechen. "We are going to have to look at this and then play each game as it it were against BU. We are going to have to go back and really get psyched."

Today's game, 4 p.m. at Boyden Field, figures to be a cakewalk for the Minutemen. UMass destroyed the Staggs last season 6-0.

New year celebrated by Jews

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

When the sun sets Sunday evening, millions of Jews around the world will gather to celebrate the high holiday of Rosh Hashana, the Jewish new year.

Because students may be celebrating the holiday without their families for the first time, the University of Massachusetts chapter of B'Nai B'Rith Hillel offers a special series of programs designed to meet the needs of a college community.

"It's not enough just to have service," Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said. "Especially for first year students, the holidays can be a lonely time."

Rosh Hashana, which marks the beginning of the year 5746 on the Jewish Calendar, is traditionally the birthday of the world.

"It's the beginning of the year, a time to look at the ways we have been living, to decide what things we need to continue and what things we need to change," Perlmutter said.

"Hopefully if our thought is sincere during this time, we can really help ourselves break old harmful patterns and start the new year as better people," he said. "Rosh Hashana helps us move beyond the things that otherwise keep us trapped."

Services begin at 7 p.m. Sunday, continue Monday at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m., and Tuesday at 10 a.m. All services will take place in the Student Union Ballroom.

Perlmutter said official University policy prohibits a professor from penalizing a student for missing class to observe the holiday.

"Quizzes and exams should not be scheduled, or makeups should be provided so that students are not penalized or disadvantaged as a result of religious observance," according to the policy.

Perlmutter said the policy is not always enforced. "Sometimes faculty are either not aware of the policy or ignore it," he said. Any student with a conflict should contact Perlmutter in the Hillel Office.

Hillel Co-President Howard Breslau, a senior from Newton, sees spending the holiday on campus as a chance for a new religious experience.

"I think religion is very mysterious to some students," Breslau said. "Because services are run by students, rabbis are not put on a pedastal. It becomes more personal, more comfortable."

FAC gala celebrates first decade

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO

The birthday cake measured 8 by 4 feet, weighed 400 pounds, resembled the guest of honor, and served approximately 1,000 people.

Yesterday was the Fine Arts Center's 10th anniversary, and the party was as large as the center itself.

And although no-gift wrapping was in evidence, there was plenty of ribbon. Two 5-foot wide paper ribbons emblazoned with the number 10 adorned the south side of the building.

And if, by some miracle, passersby didn't see the over-sized decorations, they couldn't have missed the rest of the fanfare.

Artist George Trakas was on hand to help dedicate the island-turned-outdoor-sculpture, the "Isle of View," located at the south end of the Campus Pond. The sculpture was erected in conjunction with the University Gallery's "Ten" exhibit, celebrating its first decade.

The crowd, milling between the FAC's Rand Theater and Concert Hall, was several hundred strong throughout the event, (although UMass police declined to give an official estimate). Vendors offered ice cream, hot dogs and fried dough to students, staff and faculty members who relaxed on steps and at picnic tables, listening to music throughout the afternoon.

Bands performing at the event included the UMass Marimba Ensemble, the UMass Latin Percussion Ensemble, J.B. Wyker and Trio, and Andy May and the Atlantic Express. UMass professors David Sporny and Jeff Holmes offered a

Increased real estate activity result of changes in Amherst

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

A lack of space in a downtown supermarket and two public buildings are among the reasons for recently increased real estate activity near downtown Amherst.

The town Public Facilities Planning Committee is considering two parcels on the corner of Main Street and Churchill Avenue as a possible site for a new police station because its present location in the basement of town hall does not provide enough space for "effective and efficient" operations, Police Chief Donald Maia said.

"Operating in the present facility is like operating in a barrel," Maia said. "Amherst deserves a better station."

The committee has been looking for a new station site since 1984, and last year rejected the site of Masonic Temple on Main Street because the owners of the building refused to sell it to the town.

Under similar space limitations, the Federal Real Estate Bureau is examining two sites on University Drive for relocations of Amherst's main post office on North Pleasant Street.

"This is an antiquated building," Superintendent of Postal Operations Jim Hickey said. "We have very definite space limitations," he said, citing a lack of parking space near the structure.

When a new site is selected the office on North Pleasant Street will remain open. The town rejected a similar relocation proposal in 1978 because of the lack of accessibility to an office that is not located downtown, Hickey said.

Construction began in August on a new Louis Foods building on University Drive because of need for a larger facility than the one which Louis Foods now operates on North Pleasant Street, store manager Scott Forbes said.

The D.H. Jones real estate agency, which last June purchased the Village Inn, a popular drinking spot known as The Drake, is converting the building into about 35 rental units, Don Machon, property manager of the Agency said.

Four units, two of which are already rented, may be opened by the end of September, Machon said.

JJ'prices for units in the Perry Apartments will begin at $300 a month and peak at $450 for a two-story, one bedroom unit, he said.

Superstitious or not, you best beware today

As you walk around campus today, you may want to avoid mirrors, black cats and ladders; it's Friday the 13th.

Whether you're superstitious or not, tradition has it that this day carries with it bad luck and unwanted surprises.

"People act really wierd," said University of Massachusetts student Theresa Mitchell. "I worked here (Campus Center) one Friday the 13th and it's crazy. I don't know, it's something about people on the 13th," said Mitchell, a senior.

A first-year studetn who did not want to be identified who had worked at a nursing home, said the home's residents "bugged out" on Friday the 13th. "One lady accused me of killing Jesus," she said. "We got six times more calls from the patients. Even the ones who were not senile acted up." Brian Moran, a senior natural resources major, said, "Synchroncity and deja vu interests me but superstitions and black cats are for Halloween. I like April Fool's Day better."

Dean of Students William Field said, "About every third or fourth year there's a great run of incredible and outlandish reports" circulating on campus. "It's a great long tradition," he said.

Rachael airstow, a senior economics major said, "I wouldn't go out at night (on the 13th) because I think people would just be a little strange." Bairstow described herself as "mildly superstitious." She added, "I broke a mirror the other day and believe me I thought twice about it."

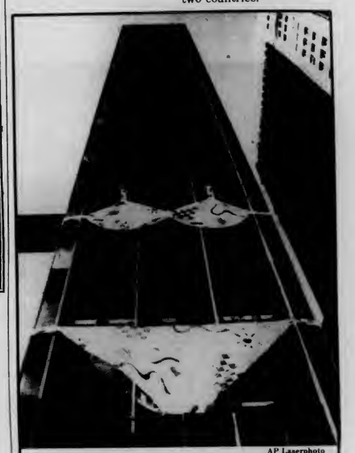
Drugs tied to fetus problems

BOSTON (AP)—The discovery that cocaine is linked with spontaneous abortions and behavioral problems in newborns strengthens the case against needless drug use by expectant women, a researcher says.

Earlier studies have found that the abuse of other drugs, such as heroin and alcohol, can harm babies in the womb. But the latest research is the first to associate newborn abnormalities with cocaine.

The study, conducted at Northwester Memorial Hospital in Chicago, found that heavy users of cocaine appear to be at high risk of spontaneous abortions and that their babies may be passive and emotionally erratic during their first days of life.



Vietnam, Chinese border attacks continue

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Vietnam said yesterday its armed forces killed or wounded 50 Chinese soldiers in repulsing attacks along its northern border this week.

A Voice of Vietnam radio broadcast, monitored in Bangkok, said Chinese troops fired nearly 20,000 artillery rounds into Vi Xuyen district of Ha Tuyen province Monday and Tuesday, but that Vietnam's military and local people resisted.

China fired more than 50,000 shells into the province between Sept. 5-10, the radio said.

The claims are impossible to confirm. Since fighting a bloody border war in early 1979, Vietnam and China have traded accusations of border provocations. Western diplomats in Bangkok generally believe that while some fighting is taking place, it is less serious than claimed by the two countries.

Diversity week brings 9 days of events to UMass

By PAMELA BURRELL
Collegian Correspondent

Tomorrow marks the beginning of Diversity Week, a nine-day series of events created to enhance social and cultural diversity at the University of Massachusetts.

The week of dances, films, workshops and concerts is returning after a one year lapse, as a result of the efforts by the Student Government Association and various Registered Student Organizations.

Almost 100 hours of events have been scheduled by approximately three dozen student groups which represent student government, professional, academic, social and athletic groups, said Alex Guest, a member of the Undergraduate Studet Senate's Coordinating Committee.

SGA co-president Stacy Roth said Diversity Week is an attempt to direct attention to the student groups which are lost in the crowd because of a lack of members or funds.

"Diversity Week also gives students on campus, who might not immediately be able to find a group with which they can identify, a chance to find one," Roth said. She said the week will particularly give members of the UMass community who are women, from a third world country, or from the gay community an opportunity to identify with an organization on campus to serve their needs.

"An average student at the University, new or old, does not usually know where to go to find a group to serve their interest. Diversity Week gives them a chance to find these groups," Roth said.

Funding for the majority of the events is provided by the student organizations. An open house referral fair will be funded by the SGA and the senate's coordinating committee. An additional $1,000 was allocated by the senate for publicity. The event will cost several thousand dollars, according to Guest.

Diversity Week began in 1983 but was cancelled last year because of the administration's First Week Program which introduced new students to the University.

"This year the administration decided that to have such vast programming the first week would be overwhelming," Roth said. "First Week did not cover enough and there was again a need to hold Diversity Week," she said.

"We're expecting a very successful week and we encourage everyone from the University to take part," Roth said.

Indians to exhibit and sell goods at this weekends Indian powwow

By STACEY KIVEL
Collegian Correspondent

More than 5,000 people are expected to attend this weekend's Indian powwow at the Campus Pond, sponsored by the American Indian Student Association.

American Indians travelling from many parts of the country will set up concession stands to exhibit and sell their goods. Food concessions will include native foods like Indian fried bread, Indian tacos, corn chowder and clam chowder. There will also be craft concessions with Indian moccasins, drums and clothing.

"It's a social event for natives in which they share customs, speak to elders, unite with relatives, and dance in a spiritual fashion," said Donna Goodleaf, a North American Indian from the Mohawk Nation.

The 3rd annual powwow, which will begin at noon on Saturday and Sunday, is not only for American Indians but also for the entire University of Massachusetts community, Goodleaf said.

"The purpose of this event is to bring people together as a whole and let other people and students become aware that there are American Indian students that reside in this part of the country," said Chris Pegram, a member of the association.

"American Indian students feel this will be a positive year," said the association's adviser Dierdre Almeida. "They are aware of their culture and want to share it with other students,"she said.

The powwow will feature entertainment, including singing, drumming and social dancing from several Indian groups from New York and Canada. Delegations from all over New England will also participate in the festivities.

ASIA was founded three years ago at UMass by American Indians and advisers, their goal being to, "unite the Indian student on campus and give them a home base in which to relate to other studetns and seek help with problems," Pegram said. He said there are currently 36 studetns involved with the organization.

Lockwood appointed as honors director

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Correspondent

Linda G. Lockwood has been officially appointed full-time director of the University of Massachusetts Honors Program.

Lockwood's involvement with the Honors Program began with a part-time directorship in 1982. Aside from her responsibility to the program, she also served as departmental honors coordinator and undergraduate advisor for the Department of Environmental Science.

"The most important thing for me is to make sure that the Honors Program has a human face," Lockwood said. "I don't want our students to feel as though they are clacked out of a computer, or part of a bureaucracy...that is a primary goal of our program."

Already Lockwood has guided an increase in honors courses, diversity of course, and visibility of the overall program on campus and nationwide.

In addition to personalized academic counseling, the Honors Program also offers students honors housing in Grayson at Orchard Hill. The development of a residential program helps to build a community among honors students. This year 77 out of 185 incoming honors students opted to utilize this program.

Linda G. Lockwood

Another benefit of the Honors Program is the Peer Advising Program; trained honors students who know the ins and outs of the program represent a resource for new students.

"People tend to think of honors as only academic, but it's social too," Lockwood said.

Lockwood has been involved with honors education since the 1960s. During her graduate studies at Columbia University she was in charge of a prgram sponsored by The National Science Foundation for gifted and talented students.

Boiler needs maintenance; hopes for new power plant

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

A new power plant may be in the works for the University of Massachusetts, but until a new facility is built, the aging boiler system requires periodic maintenane, according to the physcial plant operations director.

"The chances are good (for a new facility), but the timing is bad. The earliest it could be completed would be after four years. Until then we will have to keep things running as well as we can," said Peter A. Wozniak. Wozniak said he hopes a new power house facility will be built soon, at a cost of over $50 million.

"During the summer, we did preventative maintenance on the boilers in the power house," said Wozniak. "This was the second year that we have done this. It gives us the opportunity to make safety inspections and to do routine repairs.

The power house, located next to the Textbook Annex, has eight boilers which generate heat and electricity for all the buildings on campus. Seven of the boilers run on coal, while the eighth burns oil.

The reason for the summer maintenance, according to Wozniak, is that all of the boilers are reaching a period maturity, usually unreached by most boilers.

"Boilers one through four were installed in 1942, five through seven were installed in 1960," Wozniak said. "The youngest one was installed in 1970. At the time of its installation, it had an expected life of 12 to 15 years."

Wozniak also has to deal with the ineffectiveness of the bag house, the filtering system which is supposed to catch pollutants before they escape into the atmosphere.

The baghouse went into operation in March andpassed an Environmental Protection Agency inspection in June, Wozniak said. Since then there have been problems with the clutches on the induced-draft fans, which draw air into filters.

The fans are still under warranty and will not cost the University anything to be repaired, but if the bag house is not in operation soon, the University will face EPA fines, Wozniak said.

trombone and piano set, and the UMass Minuteman Marching Band, some 235 members strong, put in a late-afternoon appearance.

And then there were the balloons. Thousands of multi-colored balloons, emblazoned with the 10th anniversary logo, followed students to classes, tied to knapsacks or clutched in fists. An orange and white hot-air balloon rested on the Haigus Mall for most of the afternoon, but its operators were unable to offer the planned $3 rides due to yesterday's windy weather.

Nevertheless, the wind didn't keep three skydivers from literally dropping into the party at around 12:45 p.m.

Health services still offering confidential test for AIDS

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Health Services is continuing to offer a confidential test for an antibody associated with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) while medical experts still probe for the cure to the fatal disease.

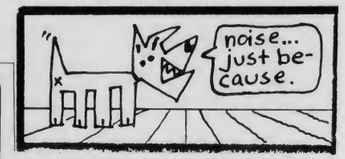
Health Services was designated in April by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health as one of nine state testing sites for the antibody ATLV III.

"We've been asked to continue to serve as a testing site," said Dr. David Kraft, executive director of Health Services. "The state has been happy with the feedback we've given them," he said.

The controversial blood test does not confirm whether or not a person has AIDS, even if the test results are positive. People who are found to have the antibody in their blood will be prohibited from giving blood.

Health Services has set aside one morning every other week for the testing which can only be administered after calling a Boston hotline number to ensure a confidential appointment, Kraft said.

Despite the growing publicity of the controversial disease, Health Services has not seen a need to provide additional special service for people who are worried about the personal effects of AIDS.



"There's been a lot of misinformation in the public, but it still concerns us as a problem from the health point of view," Kraft said.

People who contract symptoms related to AIDS can be informed at Health Services of the different risks and test associated with the disease. "If someone shows up with a disorder, we check to see if the disorder is related to AIDS," Kraft said. Some symptoms may turn out to be unconnected to the disease after testing, he said.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Responsibility is shared

Oversubscribed courses are a continuing problem at the University, and this year is certainly no exception. However, before anyone here points a finger at others, they must consider their own responsibilities.

Administrators, faculty, and students alike must share responsibility for this problem and address it, to the best of their own ability, in order to fulfill their ultimate contribution. Administrators who have not yet committed extra resources to needy departments, faculty who do not desire to instruct a reasonable number of low level or undergraduate courses, and students who are unwilling to enroll in early morning or late afternoon sections or who enroll in the same course at different times to safeguard an 'acceptable' overall schedule must realize their lack of responsibility.

While it is difficult for the administration to precisely predict enrollment trends in major courses of study and commit extra faculty and financing to those areas, the primary responsibility to do so is, nonetheless, in its hands. If enrollment in certain schools will be, or already is, set at a precise limit, then the administration must ensure that students who express interest in these schools are adequately informed that attempting to gain entrance or take courses there may be difficult.

Obviously, the administration is somewhat constrained in its commitment by state funding, availability of human resources, and the fickle nature of student choice. However, there are administrators whose job is to work within these constraints and produce results within a reasonable amount of time. It would seem that now is the time to consider and further implement long term solutions such as providing more stipend increases for graduate students to instruct undergraduate courses, requiring faculty to teach undergraduates more often and work on their research less, and considering the possibility of constructing more classroom facilities in the future.

At the same time, faculty members must accept that undergraduate education and attention to students is of great, if not primary, importance on this campus and that they, too, are employed to contribute to this end. Increasing the number of students they will instruct in their own courses, ensuring to a greater degree that these students are adequately instructed so they won't falter in their continued studies, and allowing for sufficient office hours for extra attention are all possible contributions that faculty members can make.

And, we cannot omit the contributions which students can make. We, as students, must be more willing to take early morning and late afternoon classes, to fill out the necessary pre-registration sheets accurately, on time, and without duplication of courses, and to accept that there may not be enough enrollment spaces for us in our intended major even though we have been able to enroll in the lower level prerequisites. Successful completion of prerequisites does not guarantee space in any major course of study.

In closing, the problem of oversubscription is one that affects us all. Likewise, while progress has been made (Provost O'Brien last year commited an additional $1 million for graduate teaching stipends), the problem will never be adequately addressed if we only place the blame on others.

Letters

Anorexia nervosa is not a joke

In response to Bob Kievra's column on Sept. 9, "Back to the UMass mess", we have some questions to ask him. Bob, why? What was the purpose of your column? Was it to bring humor? Was it to stir controversy? Was it to inform everyone that you're doing a co-op with the Boston Globe?

We find it extremely offensive that, in order to show your sarcastic humor, you lowered yourself to play upon the tragedy of Karen Carpenter and the countless others who suffer from the eating disorder anorexia nervosa. To those of us who are constantly working to improve student life, we find your analogies unfounded and exaggerated.

The oppressive journalism that you displayed in your column should not be tolerated on this campus.

In closing, we hope that in the future yu use your immense journalistic talents to educate rather than insult, and to inform rather than hurt.

P.W.'s BIG ADVENTURE

Story mislabled SGA women

I would like to make a few comments on the article in the Sept. 10 Collegian, which was headlined "Decline of Women in SGA", and subtitled "Lack of recruitment (SIC), inaccurate views blamed".

The article demonstrates clearly that the reporter desperately needs a course in basic journalism. The headline conflicts with the content of the article, the first paragraph contradicts the second paragraph, and the entire piece is intrnally inconsistent.

When I read the headline, my first thought was, "'inaccurate views' blamed for the decline of women in the SGA?" Who, pray tell, determines what is an 'accurate' view, and what is an 'inaccurate' view?" Armed with this thought, I proceeded to begin reading the article itself.

The first paragraph states, "The percentage of women in the UMass undergraduate student senate has dropped from 50 percent last year to 25 percent this semester, Liisa Trocki, Coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project said." OK, so far, so good. Then I hit the second paragraph. "The number of women 'who call themselves feminists and work to organize the women in the senate' has fallen to about 30 out of the SGA's 120 members, Trocki said."

Now, what are we to make of this? The first paragraph states flatly that 25 percent of the senate is composed of women. The second paragraph states that 25 percent of the senate is composed of women "who call themselves feminists." Does this mean that only feminists qualify as women? Does Ms. Trocki regard conservative women as non-persons?

If we assume that Ms. Trocki was quoted accurately, that is about the only possible conclusion, and as I am fairly well aquainted with her, it struck me as being very uncharacteristic. I have found Ms. Trocki's openness to other points of view to be quite a refreshing change from the dogmatic attitude of many radical feminists.

So, wondering whether Liisa had undergone some kind of radical (no pun intended) transformation over the summer, I continued to read. And lo and behold! A few paragraphs, later, she is quoted as saying, "Now, women that enter the senate may be conservative, moderate, or feminists." Aha, now that sounds like the person I knew last semester.

So, what can we make of this article? By the time I got to the end, I was totally lost in the contradictions. Didn't anyone notice that the 'inaccurate views blamed' headline, which is explained in the article as actually referring to inaccurate views of the purpose of the Woman's Caucus, could very easily be misinterpreted by someone reading the headline as referring to inaccurate political views?

It is basic journalism to never use anything in a headline that could be interpreted in an incorrect way. Didn't anyone read the article before printing it, and notice the blatant contradiciton between the first and second paragraphs? If this is a sample of what we can expect from the Collegian this semester, I am very disappointed.

Further explanation necessary

In Sue Eaton's column criticizing the Student Senate, she failed to call attention to some important facts. The more conservative (i.e., non-leftist) elements in the Senate believe in both accountability and compromise. Who discovered the financial mess? Only after people like Joe Sparks (then Chairman of the Budgets Committee) and Jordan Rosner (the present chairman) repeatedly demanded that people come to grips with our problem did the "progressives" even accept that it existed.

When the fault was accurately placed on the Speaker and Treasurer, the conservatives were told that it wasn't important who was at fault. Is that accountability? Conservatives have been constantly asserting the need to work with the administration. Has anything changed since then?

As for the measures suggested by the Budgets Committee to curb spending on professional salaries, they were not illegal. We were threatened with legal action by those professionals whose jobs were in question. The Budgets Committee compromised their position, not because we were wrong, but because our credibility would be shattered if people employed by us decided to sue us.

It has been a standing tradition in conservative student politics to approach the administration in a sensible, efficient manner. Financial spending has been kept at an all time low, credibility with the SAO and other administrative offices is building, and, hopefully, we will see a rise in the number of conservatives in the SGA. It's the SGA's only real hope.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Freedom rally to be held

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

"Freedom Friday," a rally to support the struggle for the liberation for millions of black South Africans, opposing apartheid, and urging full divestiture from the Pretoria regime, will be held on Friday, Sept. 20.

The rally will begin with a march at 10 a.m. from Amherst Common and conclude with an organizing rally at 12 noon at Metawampe Pond at the University of Massachusetts.

A group of students and professors from the five-college area have organized the event. At the rally, the students will ask for the support of these four demands:

•That colleges and universities in the Western Massachusetts area support congressional sanctions against South Africa.

•Full divestiture by colleges and universities in Western Mass. from firms and banks that do business in South Africa.

•Dismissal of charges against UMass students who were arrested last spring protesting UMass investments in South Africa stock.

•The establishment of a regional monitoring committee to ensure that future investments in apartheid do not occur.

"The purpose of the rally is to increase awareness in the Pioneer Valley about the situation in South Africa," said John Ruddock III, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate. "The rally will also publicize the past, present, and future leaders of the fight against apartheid and show the cultural, political, and educational awareness in that country."

Two students from Mount Holyoke College, Susan Walsh, and Nino Levine, came up with the idea for the rally. They set up a plan to determine the financial and political situation in South Africa, received support from various professors, and scheduled a press conference earlier this week with Shirley Chisholm, a member of the House of Representatives in 1972 who is on staff this semester at Mount Holyoke College. However, due to personal problems, the press conference had to be postponed until early next week.

There will be several featured speakers at the rally including: Mel King, former Boston mayoral candidate from the Rainbow Coalition, Francis Crowe from the American Friends Service Committee, a representative from the African National Congress, and Simone Wilkinson, a representative of the Greenham Common Peace Encampment.

The organizers of the rally hope that thousands of people will come out and participate in "Freedom Day".

Movie's a stroke of genius

Real Genius
Starring Gabe Jarret, Val Kilmer and William Atherton
Directed by Martha Coolidge

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

I liked the title of this movie; I think I sort of identify with it. What surprised me was, I also liked the movie itself. The advertisments may make you think that Real Genius is just another one of those stupid, boring, teenage sex and science movies. It is not, it's a funny and entertaining teen-age science movie. Martha Coolidge, who directed the surprisingly good Valley Girl, has a way of making films about teen-agers believable and enjoyable.

Real Genius is about a 15-year-old wonderkid (Gabe Jarret) who is enrolled in a high-tech college by an evil professor (William Atherton) so that he can work on a superlaser. Jarret's roommate is another genius (Val Kilmer) who has the brains of Einstein and the manner of Michael Keaton. Kilmer goes to a job interview wearing plastic antennae and a T-shirt saying "I (heart) toxic waste". The movie has a quirky yet lovable cast of secondary characters: Laslo, (John Gries) the number one genius who cracked at 12 and is now living in the steam tunnels under the dorm; Jordan (Michelle Meyrink), a hyperkinetic engineering major who never sleeps, Ick (Mark Kamiyama) who turns the dorm into an ice-skating rink.

If you're looking for a fun movie this weekend, check out Real Genius.

"Shooting Party" shines

The Shooting Party
Starring James Mason, John Gielgud, and Edward Fox
Screenplay by Julian Bond
Directed by Alan Bridges

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

If you are an anglophile, if you love Masterpiece Theatre, you'll like The Shooting Party. It is an Edwardian Big Chill, emphasizing character rather than plot. Although the weekend guests of this film come together for a pheasant hunt and not a funeral, this is a much more gloomy and somber film.

This drawing room drama stars James Mason (in his final film role) as an aging aristocrat living out his twilight years at the end of the Edwardian era. People should see this film not only because this was Mason's last role but because Mason gives his best performance in years, perhaps ever.

The Shooting Party has an enormous cast (about 10 main characters and 20 secondary characters) and multiple story lines which all take place within a forty-eight hour period. What is surprising is that with all these things going on, one rarely gets confused. Mason provides the emotional center of the film. He personifies the Edwardian era. Frayed and weary, he senses the end of his time is near.

Mason wishes his weekend guests would enjoy the shooting party without competing for the title of "best shot." But his wishes go unheeded and a clash of egos leads to a tragic accident. The final moments of the film are the best, Mason shines.

Friday Film Follies

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

Fellow prisoners, today is Friday! Friday, the second most beautiful word a student can hear. Friday equals weekend. Weekend equals free time. Free time equals fun. Ergo, Friday equals fun.

If you and your date are looking for something different to do one of these nights, here's what's going on movie-wide in the valley this weekend.

The Amherst Cinema has a dynamite double feature through Saturday. Diva is new wave French thriller. I have seen it three times over the last year. I don't know anyone who hasn't loved it. Blood Simple has received many great reviews from the likes of the The New York Times' Vincent Canby. It is supposed to be a violent, bloody yet very stylish Western murder mystery. A good night out for only $3.

The Pleasant Street Theatre is showing The Shooting Party (see review) and A Man Like Eva, a film profiling the unorthodox German director Rainer Werner Fassbinder. It is evidently a fascinating psychological profile of a monsterous man.

If you want to see a monster of another kind (Vampire) check out Fright Night at the Dead Mall, (Mt. Farms Mall). Also showing at Mt. Farms, Real Genius (see review), Volunteers, starring Tom Hanks and John Candy as Peace Corps. workers in Thailand. Funny. See it. Festering in one of the Mt. Farms theatres is Pee Wee's Big Adventure. It is the negative reciprocal of funny. Very unfunny. Staring at lawn ornaments is more fun than Pee Wee. Stay away.

The Hampshire mall is showing the major money-makers of the summer. For Stallone junkies who can't wait until Nov. 27 for Rocky IV, Rambo returns to the mall, slaughtering his way through Vietnam. Back to the Future is a tight enjoyable science fiction comedy. Mel Gibson reprises his role as the post-apocolyptic Road Warrior in Mad Max beyond Thunderdome, co-starring Tina Turner. Not as good as Road Warrior but still good. Director Lawrence Kasdan (Big Chill) goes out West in what is supposed to be the best Western of the summer, Silverado, starring Kevin Cline.

That's all folks.

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated income and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus just over a quarter of a million dollars — $255,000, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $179,000 owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

A mild winter saved over $10,000 in plowing and overtime costs, and the Board of Education ($80,000), the Board of Selectmen ($168,000) and the

UMass trailed only 10-7 going into the fourth quarter last year against Richmond. They surrendered two fourth quarter touchdowns to lose the game.

This season, UMass is helped by increased depth at all-positions and an influx of freshman and junior college transfers that have helped. Come the fourth quarter of a close game, the Minutemen have a much better chance of winning this year.

The Minutemen, who are already without the services of starting tight end Mike Kelley (shoulder injury) and punter Jim Tandler (knee), will have an injured George Barnwell on their hands.

Barnwell badly bruised his shoulder after running for 80 yards in the first half against Morgan State. Sophomore Ted Barrett will get the start backed up by freshman Kevin Smellie. Barnwell will dress and may see action.

UMass quarterback Dave Palazzi will be looking to keep up his performance up to the standard he set last week. The freshman ran for three touchdowns and threw for another, running the option for UMass.

The UMass defense will try to pressure the Richmond backfield, stunting and blitzing from the line and bringing in a fifth defensive back (either Duckworth Grange or Chris McCray) to guard against the Bleier-to-Melvin threat.

Freshman Dimitri Yavis will punt for UMass in place of Tandler. Bruce Lemieux, another freshman, fills Tandler's spot at reserve inside linebacker.

We have to maintain our intensity and continue to execute to the fullest of our abilities," said Richmond coach Dal Shealy. "They have talented players on both offense or defense."

UMass at Richmond

When: Saturday at 7:30 p.m.
Where: Richmond's UR Stadium (22,611, Super Turf)
Records: UMass 1-0, beating Morgan State 38-9. Richmond is 1-0, beating Virginia Tech 24-14.
Injuries: (UM) TE Mike Kelley (shoulder) is out, P Jim Tandler (knee) is out, TB George Barnwell (shoulder) will play. (R) No injuries.
Keys for UMass: The Minutemen will have the huge task of playing defense against a Spider team that has a lot of offensive weapons. Offensively, UMass will need to run a mistake-free option and be able to pass effectively.
Keys for Richmond: The Spiders cannot look past UMass after beating Division 1 VPI. Richmond will look to balance its offense and contain UM quarterback Dave Palazzi out of the option.
The latest line: Richmond by 17.
Radio: The game can be heard on WSPR-AM (1270) and WMUA-FM (91.1).

"There's a lot more pressure in setting than there is in hitting," said Primer. "But I'm adjusting to the change."

"I am very pleased with the way Julie played tonight," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "She's very intelligent, a great jumper.

"I asked her if she wanted to set her freshman year," said Sortino. "She said yes and I told her she had the set. I think she did a remarkable job.

UMass cruised through game one 15-3 behind an overpowering service attack and solid defense anchored by juniors Debbie Cole and Ann Ringrose. Ringrose also contributed to the offense nailing several hits to keep the spiker rally alive in game one.

Game two proved to be a bit more of a difficult undertaking for UMass. A Violetta Gladkowska block put UMass ahead 4-1 early in the game and it looked like another spiker rout was emminent. But AIC chipped away at the UMass advantage and eventually went on to knot the score at 8-8.

But a Gladkowska kill quickly put an end to the AIC rally and sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis served the spikers to a 14-8 lead.

Again, AIC climbed back into the match by capitalizing on UMass miscues, taking a 15-14 lead and serving for the game. But Maher, taking a beautiful set from Primer, nailed a kill for an important side out. UMass went on to win game two 17-15 as Maher appropriately ended the game with a kill.

AIC would gain the first lead of the match in game three at 3-2. But UMass, thanks to the hitting of Maher and the serving of Guiliotis and Gladkowska, overwhelmed AIC 15-7 despite blowing six match points.

UMass will now focus their sights on this weekend's sixteen team UMass Invitational Volleyball Tournament being held at Boyden Gymnasium. UMass opens on Friday night against local rival Smith College at 6 p.m. The spikers then face off against the University of Vermont at 8:30 p.m. UMass will end pool play against Keene State University at 9:00 Saturday morning.

UMass to face powerful Richmond

Minutemen ready prior to trip into Spiders' web

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts assistant football coaches in charge of defense sat in their office on Friday afternoon trying to decide how to defend against the Unversity of Richmond on Saturday night in Virginia.

You really can't key on the tailback, 'cause the fullback will kill you," defensive coordinator Jim Reid said. "Then you have to watch out for the quarterback and that split end because they're so tough. It's going to be a tough game."

The Spiders have totaled over 400 yards of offense for nine straight games. Richmond is 1-0, beating Division 1 Virginia Tech 24-14 last week. Last season, Richmond ran up 555 yards of total offense, beating UMass 24-7. Against Virginia Tech, the Spiders passed for 237 yards and ran for 228, that is the kind of power and balance the Minutemen will contend with Saturday (7:30 p.m.)

"I think they're the best 1-AA team in the country," said UMass coach Bob Stull. "They have a lot of offensive weapons, they are physical on the lines and they're flying high after beating a Division 1 team. I'm very impressed by their offense and their team in general.

The Spiders, who went into the 1-AA playoffs last year and are currently in the Top 10, can successfully throw or pass the ball. Quarterback Bob Bleier (cousin of Steeler great Rocky Bleier) threw for 237 yards, going 20-of-27. Split end Leland Melvin, an all-America candidate, caught nine passes for 110 yards with tailback Danny Holly adding 66. Holly's backup is all-American Greg Grooms. Grooms ran for over 1,000 yards last year, burning UMass for 202 yards. The junior had academic troubles earlier this year and is being "punished" by the Spider staff by not starting. He is a dangerous runner who is capable of hurting UMass.

All isn't dark for the Minutemen however. Coming off of a 38-9 victory over Morgan State last Saturday, UMass realizes the true tests are upcoming.

"Sure, we looked good against Morgan State, but it's comparing two different things when talking about Richmond," said Stull. "We have to play a mistake-free game to beat them. We can beat them, it'll just take a great effort.

UMass seems ready to make the effort. After two straight 3-8 seasons, the Minutemen banded together to beat New Hampshire 14-10 in the final game of 1984 before slamming Morgan State this season. UNH was ranked highly in Division I-AA before losing to UMass.

"I feel much better about this team," said Stull. "It's tough to gauge after beating a team like Morgan State, but I'm confident going into this game."

Minutemen down Stags, cruising to 4-0 decision

By BRIAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team dominated an overmatched Fairfield squad on its way to a 4-0 victory yesterday at Boyden Field.

Sophomore Andrew Bing led the way with a goal and three assists as the UMass offense came alive with 39 shots. Stag goalkeeper Paul Carrol was under constatn fire and played well to keep the game as close as it was.

Freshman Sam Ginsburg was in net for the UMass shutout.

The Minutemen had numerous scoring opportunities, but had a hard time finishing them off.

"We did not have the killer instinct," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "They (UMass) were relaxing out there, not doing the little things."

This was understandable as the Minutemen obviously outclassed their opponent.

"When they dominate like that, they tend to relax," siad Gettler. "In a tough game they concentrate more."

UMass opened the scoring at 7:44 of the first half. Frerdie Adoboe took a pass as he came acroos the front of the net from the left. He went around Carrol as the goalkeeper fell and put the ball into the open net. Bing and Tom Uschok was credited with assists.

With 5:45 to go in the half, there was a scramble infront of the Fairfield net and Bing put the ball past Carrol amid the falling bodies.

Fairfield came out in the second half attempting to put more pressure on the ballwhen it was in the UMass end. THe Minutemen ajusteed and then proceded to put the game away with two quick goals just 12 seconds apart.

The first came with 19:17 to go in the game. Junior John Shannon broke away on a beautiful pass from Bing and beat Carrol to his right.

F.J. Zwicklbauer scored the fourth UMass goal as he broke in from the right side and put the shot into the right side of the net. Bing and freshman Michael Mugavero assisted on the play.

The Minutemen are at home again tommorrow at 11 a.m. against Dartmouth. Gettler expects a close game.

"It's their first game, so we have a little more under our belts," said the coach. "We tied last year (1-1), but this year we have them at home."

UM spikers sweep AIC, host tourney

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team opened their 1985 campaign on a positive note by defeating American International College in a three game sweep 15-3, 17-15, 15-7 on Wednesday.

UMass utilized a deadly combination of accurate passing, potent blocking and tough serving to keep AIC off balance and unable to establish an offense. Leading the offensive charge for the Minutewomen were senior hitter Sally Maher and freshman setter Julie Primer. Maher squelched several AIC rallies with booming hits, while Primer, setting for the first time in collegiate competition, kept the AIC defense off guard with a well-balanced mixture of sets.

Soccer and field hockey are at home

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

No matter who the opponents are, University of Massachusetts women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda doesn't want his team to underestimate anyone.

That includes tomorrow's opponents, New Hampshire College who Massachusetts takes on at 11 a.m. at Boyden Field.

The Minutewomen, who are ranked third in the nation, face a New Hampshire team that went 19-0 last year and won the ECAC championship.

"It's not easy to go 19-0, no matter what schedule you play," Banda said. "We're not taking anyone lightly this year. We'll need to play mad all game."

Freshman goalie Carla DeSantis of Sudbury will be starting in goal as Banda continues the process to find a starting goalie. Freshman Jan Halland didn't make a save in UMass' 9-0 rout of Keene State on Wednesday.

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team will face Pacific University on Saturday at home (1 p.m. at NOPE Field).

The Minutewomen, 1-0, boast a quick offense and solid defense. Senior Megen Donnelly bolsters the defense with sophomore Tonia Kennedy, last season's leading scorer, a big offensive threat. A group of freshmen and transfer Lisa Griswold have added great depth to UMass. Pacific is an up-and-coming team from the West that will give UMass a good challenge.

In other UMass action, the water polo team will be in a tournament at MIT. They will face Brown, Amherst, Iona and MIT. The men's and women's golf teams and the men's and women's tennis teams will also be in action.

The men golfers are at the Yale Invitationals, the womenface Mount Holyoke, Springfield and Dartmouth. The men's tennis team faces URI at home with the women playing at URI.

Democrats launch drive for campus involvement

By JEFFREY MATHIEU
Collegian Staff

Facing a rise of conservative student groups on college campuses, the Massachusetts Democratic Party is testing the waters at the Unviersity of Massachusetts for its plan to organize students across the state.

Jim Spencer, Democratic State Committee field director, said the proposal to organize on campus arose from a task force assembled by the committee at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University.

"We need to go back down to our higher education institutes and start developing our public leaders," Spencer said. "The University is the first place we're testing the waters."

Spencer said college democrats will go to progressive groups such as feminist groups and provide them with information about items on the agenda at the state level which would affect them. People will be trained in lobbying and in campaign skills, he said.

A drive to register students to vote is being conducted by a coalition of student organizations including the University Democrats and Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, Spencer said.

He said that mail-in-registration is being pushed for, with hopes of getting it on the ballot as a referendum question next year. This would make registering studetns much easier, he said.

"Whether people choose to be democrat or republican the battle on this campus is to get people involved. The largest student movement in the country is called apathy." Spencer said.

Spencer said the drive will eventually be a national project. The Democratic National Committee has promised grant money and Fundraising will be done. One form of fundraising will be to seek donations from faculty who have commented unhappily about the proliferation of conservataive student groups, Spencer said.

"College students play a major role in electing the next president, which we would like to be a democrat," Spencer said.

Lethal weapons under attack

By SANDY BAILEY
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts journalism student and karate expert Larry Kelley has scored some big points in his mis-matched bout with the martial arts weapons industry.

After urging from Kelley, Senators Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., are co-sponsoring a bill designed to stop the flow of the illegal weapons through the mail. And ABC's weekly series "20/20" will air a segment this fall in which Kelley demonstrates the lethal capabilities of nunchaku (two clubs connected by a chain).

His campaign against the weapons began last year when he noticed ads in the karate magazines for lethal weapons. He wants the mail order business in weapons regulated, and he wants to stop weapon sales to children who may not realize their deadly capabilities.

Kelley has flooded the mails with letters to most of the nation's major newspapers, every U.S. Senator and even Ann Landers. He said, "I had no credibility until I got the newspapers and Kennedy and Thurmond behind me. Now I have credibility."

Kelley, owner of the Karate Health and Fitness Center, said he has spent $4,000 of his $10,000 annual profit waging his campaign against the weapons. He is motivated because he doesn't want the weapons to give the martial arts a bad name, but also because he said he has seen a lot of young people carrying them and, "Someone is going to get hurt."

Despite being illegal in Massachusetts, the weapons are pouring into the state, Kelley said. Anyone can send for items like crossbows, ninja (steel spikes worn on the hand), and a knife that advertisers say can pierce a bullet-proof vest. They can be ordered through ads in martial arts magazines, and some of the weapons cost as little as $1.

In March, Kelley mailed each U.S. Senator a throwing star (a pointed metal disc). On each package he wrote, "Illegal weapon legally enclosed." because many states prohibit manufacture or possessin of the weapons, Kelley said, "They're saying we should have the right to use the U.S. Post Office to break the law."

UMass student Jennifer Brauer, a 1983 junior Olympics contender in Tae Kwon do, said students in her high school used throwing starts. She said people are influenced by the image of martial arts on television, but "They don't realize that it's deadly. Getting that stuff by mail-order is ridiculous."

Ninja throwing star

Fellow student Erik O'Brien is about to become a blackbelt in Wah Lum Kung Fu. He said he sent for throwing stars when he was 10 and got them. "They ask for your parent's name, but you can write anything," he said.

O'Brien said he believes the weapons should be available to martial arts experts for practice, but he adds, "The throwing stars can be so easily abused. They're so small you can carry them anywhere."

Recently the weapons turned up on the UMass campus. A student was arrested two weeks ago after a search of his room in Hamlin dormitory produced at least 50 of the illegal martial arts weapons, according to Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil.

Kelley said he doesn't want the weapons banned. He said he does want the Kennedy/Thurmond bill passed, which will ban mailing any contraband into a state where the items are illegal. Kelley said he plans to be in Washington October 16 to testify at the Senate Judiciary committee hearings on the bill.

The Senate bill must pass the judiciary committee to get on the Senate floor for a vote. Kelley said he will keep up the pressure until it passes.

"I don't just want that bill to pass," he said, "I want it to pass unanimously.

Pre-school learning center opens today for 18 children

By TINA PICARD
Collegian Correspondent

A pre-school program designed to socially integrate hyperactive, autistic and normal children in a play environment has been created by the University of Massachusetts and will be staffed by several of the psychology department's doctoral candidates.

The Walden Learning Center will open in Bartlett Hall today to eligible children, including those who have learning and behavioral problems. The Developmental Disabilities Doctoral Training Program will train children to be aware of the needs of handicapped and disadvantaged peers.

"The children will be in a rich environment, having fun. This will allow us to use the objects they are interested in, to help them learn," Gail McGee, center research director said.

Approximately 18 children, divided into smaller groups of six will begin learning in the half-day program located in Bartlett Hall.

A three-year, $100,000 grant has been awarded to the center by the National Institute of Handicapped Research, Sponsor Project Director Robert Feldman said.

Before the grant ends, we hope to find additional funding to keep the center open," Beth Sulzer-Azaroff, sponsor project director said.

Participating families will be able to take part in the program's services and help in their child's development. Siblings will also be able to participate in support groups.

The program is run by doctoral students and will give them an opportunity to do research while providing a service to the community. A community advisory board will help the directors disseminate the program's development and coordinate the community's needs.

3 wounded in S. Africa; mild reforms criticized

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—Police in an armored vehicle besieged by a crowd of blacks opened fire and wounded three of the blacks, officials said yesterday in reporting renewed anti-apartheid violence in seven districts.

On the political front, the white-minority government shrugged off criticism from white opposition newspapers that modest reforms of apartheid announced last week had come too late to head off limited U.S. sanctions.

And South African business executives, under fire from President P.W. Botha for meeting exiled black guerrilla chiefs, were lauded by English-language newspapers for what one called "doing this country a service."

Botha said last week the government would restore South African citizenship to blacks considered citizens of independent tribal homelands, and a presidential commission recommended scrapping "influx control" laws aimed at keeping blacks out of white areas.

Chris Heunis, who as minister of constitutional development is responsible for drawing up constitutional changes, said yesterday the moves were not an attempt to ease international pressure for reform.

"It was not directed at reaction internationally," he said, underlining the official stance that South Africa willnot bow to dictates from a hostile world.

The changes make no dent in domination of 24 million voteless blacks by 5 million whites, or in an array of discriminatory laws covering housing, education and msot public transport.

In new anti-apartheid unrest, a crowd of blacks besieged a police armored personnel vehicle Saturday night in East London's black Duncan Village township, bringing it to a standstill as they tried to steal gasoline, a police communique said.

Seven blacks were arrested in outbreaks of stoning or arson overnight in black districts in the Eastern Cape, and around Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Durban and the capital, Pretoria, police said yesterday.

Mary Maples Dunn

New Smith president is sizing up her job

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The first thing Mary Maples Dunn says she has to do as the new president of Smith College is learn how to do her job, at an institution which she boasts "takes women more seriously" than do co-ed colleges.

Formerly Dean of the undergraduat college and academic deputy to the president at Bryn Mawr, an all-women university in Pennsylvania, Dunn asserts, "A women's college takes women more seriously, which in turn helps women take themselves more seriously."

Women educated in such an environment, Dunn said, "leave this women's college and enter a society which is not one which takes women as seriously. This gives them a special yardstick by which they can tell how far they have to go to be where they should be.

"The first thing I'm going to do here is learn how to be a college president. After that there are a lot of challenges we're facing" which will keep her busy for a long time to come, said Dunn, who began her term this summer.

In the future, Dunn said, she will begin a capital improvement program where she hopes to enlarge the institution's science facilities. "One-third of our students here are science students. There is a great pressure on our facilities," she said.

Dunn said the presence of feminism on her campus is very strong. "There is a great number of women on campus who are engaged in serious research involving women's studies," she said, but she explained that Smith has no formal women's studies program within its curriculum.

"We made a conscious decision not to have one a year or so ago. Instead, we were anxious to integrate the study of women across the entire curriculum," Dunn said.

If there were one thing Dunn could say to her students, she said, she would tell them "the possibility is that you will change careers a great deal in life and you should strive to receive an education that will last you the rest of your life."

4 UMass students set for trial

Twelve people, including four University of Massachusetts students, were arrested at about noon Saturday and charged with disorderly conduct when they "died-in" during the launching ceremony of the nuclear submarine U.S.S. Nevada in Groton, Connecticut.

Nathaniel Rastallis, one of the students arrested, said he was protesting because he is "opposed to anyone, nation or people, preparing mass genocide."

Rastallis, a member of the University of Massachusetts Peacemakers, said the group of protesters "laid down with flowers on chest and died-in." The group was then dragged off after beeing warned of arrest and taken by van to the police station.

Restallis said he is glad that he participated in the proteste because now his name is put down as opposed to the submarine and what it stands for.

The arrests, confirmed by Grotton police, took place at the General Dynamics Shipyard in Groton and the students arrested will return to court in Groton Setp. 24.

UMass student Mary Sullivan said, "We wanted to support othr activists. This is our way of communicating" our opposition to the military build-up.

South African forum begins this week

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

A State Department official and anti-apartheid activists will be featured in a large panel discussion during a three-day program focusing on "The U.S. and the Crises in South Africa" this week.

The program, featuring two films and small discussions, is sponsored by the Five College Program in Peace and World Security Studies.

A panel discussion on "The U.S. and the crises in South Africa" will be held at 8 p.m. Wednesday in the Student Union Ballroom. Panelists will include Ashley Wills, U.S. State Department country officer for South Africa Affairs; Jean Sindab, executive director of the Washington Office on South Africa; Roger Wilkins, a former editor of The New York Times and is presently a Fellow at the Institution for Policy Studies; and E. Jefferson Murphy, coordinator of Five Colleges, Inc.

The purpose of the program is to "foster inter-faculty communication among the five colleges" on peace issues, said John Sanbon mastu, assistant director of the program.

Through the program, Sanbonmastu said, five college faculty can learn about peace and then incorporate what they have learned into the courses they teach.

Sanbonmastu said students are the ultimate beneficiaries of the peace program because it aims to "enrich the academic experience of students."

Other events in the program will include a discussion with Wilkins and Thomas Riddell, professor of economics at Smith College. They will discuss "Militarism and the Poor: The Social Cost of Defense Spending" at 4 p.m. Wednesday in Seele Hall at Smith College.

"Woza Albert!," a British Broadcasting Corporation film, and "Generations of Resistance," a documentary of resistance to apartheid in the 20th century, will be shown simultaneously free of charge at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Wright Hall at Smill College and Morrill Science Building at the University of Massachusetts.

The discussions and films are part of a continuing series on "Third World Conflict and Global Security" sponsored by the five college program and is funded in part by a Ford Foundation grant.

University organization spotlighting humanities

By JEFFREY MATHIEU
Collegian Correspondent

Hunger, racism, allocation of resources, what can be done about war? There are just some of the issues dealt with by The Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities, directed by Professor Jules Chametzky of the University of Massachusetts.

Chametzky said that one basic and major goal of the institute is to dramatize and make visible the importance of the humanities. The other major goal is to bring together people of different disciplines and address issues of importance to our times.

The Institute is supported by a combination of University, foundation, private, and alumni contributions, which according to Chamentzky, amounts to a budget of about $45,000.

Since its founding in 1981 the Institute has been host to about 30 seminars on topics such as "Women, War and Feminism," "Racial and Ethnic Pluralism In America," and "Corporation in American Life". Lectures have been given by such notables as Susan Sontag, writer and critic, and R.C. Lewontin, Professor of Biology and Alexander Agassiz, Professor of Zoology at Harvard University.

Chamensky said that the institute helped Professor Jerome Leibling of Hampshire College get a grant to do a photographic history of the people of Massachusetts.

Chamensky said that the institute is "organized by faculty for faculty." It's a place where professors "can let their hair down and talk," he said. "We believe in not being hermetically sealed to the public," Chamensky said.

When talking about the future of the Institute, Chamensky said, "If I had my choice, I would like to get enough money to underwrite a program to bring emminent people to come and do research here and to give them a stipend." With the present funding, "People who come here have to have their own money, maybe we can get some angels to underwrite a program," he said.

FYI

Blood drive begins tomorrow

The annual Red Cross Blood Drive opens tomorrow from 10:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. in room 165-69 of the Campus Center.

Red Cross officials report that community blood supplies have dropped below critical levels in Massachusetts. An unusually high number of accidents and emergency operations requiring large amounts of blood have cause the shortage. Blood inventory for group O blood, the most commonly transfused blood group, is currently at 40 percent of optimal supply levels.

"This is a particularly serious situation because there has been an excessive blood usage related to accident and trauma patients recently in Massachusets," Peter L. Page, director of the American Red Cross Blood Services said.

"To help make up this deficit we are appealing to people who have never doanted before, as well as our regular blood donors, to replenish the community blood supply," Page said.

Student donors in Western Massachusetts provide 47 percent of blood collected in the Northeast Region.

Anyone ingood health, 18 years of age or older (17 years old with a signed American Red Cross parental/guardian consent form), who weighs at least 110 pounds and has never had hepatitis is eligible to donate blood.

Summit offers opportunity for our voice to be heard

R. Jay Allain

The foreign policies of a nation—and this includes the military and nuclear forces—are, with few exceptions, responsive to the focused will of the people of that nation. Recently, a leading spokesperson for a peace group in Japan amplified this view to include all humanity. Speaking in Massachusetts, he offered this simple insight for confronting what has become the paramount issue of the twentieth century: "No one wants nuclear war. Therefore if we can get all these people to stand up—express their will—there will be no war."

This view, alas, slights the impact of propaganda and those few individuals with access to the tools of mass communication, who through fear, cynicisim, greed or some combination of these traits, subvert what should be the wholehearted insistence of the American people for radical reductions in the nuclear arsenals of both our country and the USSR. Thus we, the American people, are facing a rare opportunity to impact the course of the nuclear arms race in the weeks before the Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Geneva in November. Yet a few key attitudes—inherent drawbacks in our popular thinking and the degree of involvement of citizens in national decision-making—must be faced. The alternative is a sterile summit where snapshots and suave rhetoric replace vital movement away from Armageddon.

The poet Rilke once wrote to one of his followers "We know little, but that we must hold to what is difficult is a certainty that will not foresake us." On the domestic scene, beseiged as it is by the juggernaut of mass media and the frequently myopic pronouncements of power politicians, who, disguising their cynicism as effective treatment of "Realpolitik," perhaps what is most difficult is believing in peace; and not as a mere abstraction but as a living force that can be acualized.

Let us refrain from the knee-jerk ideas that the Soviet leadership is comprised of ruthless men who only understand brute force. Although an assumption evident among the Reagan hardliners, could this belief also serve as an easy substitute for re-thinking the Cold War and acting however humbly to help forge improved superpower relations? In the nuclear age, citizenship is a burden one should not discard unthinkingly. For the harvest which beckons shall be either bountiful or tragically destroyed. It is our move.

Letters

Comparison was unreasonable

After reading Stephen Erickson's and Michael Cerrato's political defecation in the Collegian, I sat back and gleefully awaited the reader response I knew was forthcoming. First came John Hanlon's mild rebuke on Monday, followed by Gerry Scoppettuolo's factual rebuttal on Tuesday. Now to put the final nail in the coffin.

Erickson and Cerrato viciously laid into all idealistic liberals, labeling all those who advocate sanctions against South Africa as Commie-lovers. "Why," they asked, "should we negotiate with the USSR but not with South Africa?" What a moronic premise! Did these two just fly in on a spaceship? The USSr has thousands of war heads pointed at us, of course we negotiate with them, and often we have to put up with their policies that we find so revolting. The same cannot be said of South Africa. A second-rate power at best, why should we accord them the same respect we do the USSR?

Erickson and Cerrato incorrectly consider themselves Political Realists. They espouse the unrealistic policy of "constructive engagement" which is based on a pipe dream of white supremacy. Its time for even the racists among us to accept the fact that very soon the blacks will be in power in South Africa. Are they going to appreciate our present hands-off policy? Rather than establish a future South African ally, the policy of "constructive engagement" sends the blacks one message: the US is in bed with the Botha racists.

Bill Cole
Amherst

Who is misinforming whom?

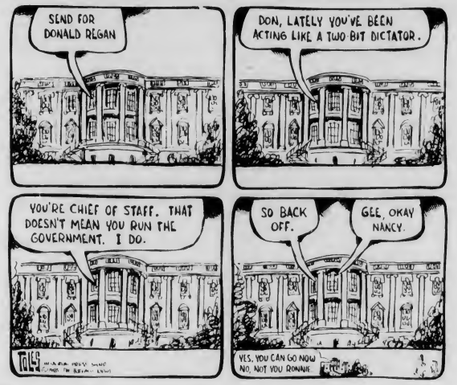
Having read Gerry Scoppettuolo's letter in reference to Stephen Erickson's column comparing South Africa to the Soviet Union, I have become quite disturbed. Scoppettuolo's accusations that Erickson is telling "gross lies" are serious charges, and in light of what he offers as evidence, the informed reader must wonder who is really engaging in misinformation.

To begin with, Scoppettuolo fails to note the context in which Erickson is writing, which is that of a comparison between the Soviet Union and South Africa. Scoppettuolo says there is no free press in South Africa. Although he is right in pointing out cases of censorship, there is a free press relative to that of the Soviet Union, Nicaragua, or Viet Nam. In the ABC News Nightline series, commentator Ted Koppel noted his surprise at finding "a lively opposition print media" in South Africa.

Scoppettuolo disregards the opposition parties in South Africa. Blacks cannot participate in the political system, but there are whites who work within the system, speaking out against apartheid. To deny their existence is to do them a great injustice.

Scoppettuolo cites the Internal Security Act of South Africa as "evidence" that South Africans are unable to speak out against the government. All one need do is watch the evening news and listen to the many dissidents speaking out from within South Africa to know this law is not strictly enforced. On the other hand, one doesn't see Dan Rather interviewing Soviet dissidents from within that country.

Although he tries to discredit Erickson's point on migration by listing other injustices of the apartheid system, Scoppettuolo cannot refute Erickson's statement that South Africa has a high level of immigration from the rest of Black Africa.



To call South Africa a fascist state, as Scoppettuolo does, is curious, for the Soviet Union far mor ressembles fascist Germany and Italy than does South Africa.

The hypocrisy Scoppettuolo engages in by calling Erickson a liar is amazing. He seems to be hinting that Erickson ought to be censored. Thank goodness such decisions are not in the hands of the likes of him.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Sanctions show hypocrisy

David Valade

The sanctions announced by President Reagan recently show the hypocricy of the right in dealing with the racist South African government. When carefully analyzed, they prove to be no more than worthless rhetoric, insignificant words without substance. Once again, Reagan is using words as a facade to protect facism.

Analyzed individually, the sanctions prove to be meaningless. Perhaps the most significant sanction, if it were real, would be the banning of importation of the Krugerrand. This was only proposed by Reagan. It has not been enacted. Before any ban is implemented Reagan will consult with our major trading partners. This consultation could take years. Reagan's standard procedure is to find an ally that agrees with him and then state, "We will change our policy when they change theirs." Margaret Thatcher has often proved useful in this capacity. In the meantime more people will be killed. People will continue to be denied the right to self-governance. This was a right that we fought a revolution for, a right we hold in high value. The hypocrisy of the right in this regard begins to become clear.

Perhaps the second most important sanction is the halting of loans to South Africa except those which go towards programs that help blacks. This could prove effective. But one must consider how "helping blacks" is defined. Jerry Falwell seems to thing that the South African government helps blacks. So does Ronald Reagan. The right thinks "constructive engagement" and further investment helps blacks. So what loans will be stopped? None, apparently, according to Reagan's definition of "helping" blacks.

Another sanction is banning the sale of computers to South African law enforcement agencies. A total ban of computer sales to anyone in South Africa would be effective. Reagan's ban is useless. Anyone with a good attorney can set up a dummy corporation to buy computers for these agencies. I know this, Reagan knows this, and so does the South African Government. If this were a real sanction would Reagan have proposed it? Not against a government that is sympathetic to the fight against the "evil empire".

So where do these sanctions lead us? Nowhere. There are no more than words. Worthless words at that. Even if the sanctions were real, one only need look at the Reagan administration's enforcement of civil rights and environmental legislation. Their record is atrocious at best, and one could expect no more of these sanctions.

A last point may need addressing. The right claims "constructive engagement" is the only way to solve South Africa's problems without hurting blacks. When one only considers short-run economic issues, this argument has some merit. When looking at the broader view, however, this assertion is pointless. The hurt inflicted by the South African government through their war on the blacks of South Africa far outweighs any short term hurt through divestment. The only true means we have for influencing the government of South Africa, short of military might is through economic policies such as divestment. The short-run harm is real, but the potential gains for people allowed to govern themselves is immeasurable.

The arguments used by the right to justify their position on South Africa are much like those used to justify slavery. The right claims blacks are better off now when they are oppressed. One can only wonder about Reagan. If slavery were a contemporary issue he probably would justify its existence by a concern about the unemployment problem that would be created if it were ended.

Sign problem not selective

In response to the LBGA letter concerning the removal of signs from the Student Union balcony, I would like to point out several omitted facts.

Primarily, the sign removal was a result of a determination by the campus Environmental Health and Safety staff that the profusion of hung signs were a safety hazard, due to their accumulated weight, and all existing signs were fire hazards. Subsequently, before classes started, these signs were removed and SAO staffer Ms. Katja Hahn-d'Errico was notified.

Since then, I have talked with Bob Jenel, of the SAO staff, and have been trying to arrange a meeting with students interested in hanging signs, in order to determine if smaller, lighter, and more uniform signs can be placed in a more appropriate area within the Student Union. Previously, the heavier signs were pulling out, and wearing away, parts of that railing.

In regard to the sign policy, a copy has since been picked up by a student group which wished to hang a sign. Until this situation is resolved, no signs will be hung.

Hopefully, an amicable agreement may soon be reached, and the lines of communication between us and other affected parties can be improved.

Concert revue:

Lone Justice should relax and have fun

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Staff

Saturday's Rolling Stone Showcase was crowded. It opened with a rather amusing fashion show; a different twist than most events around here.

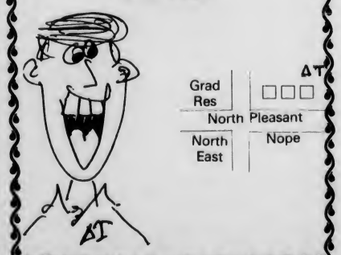
Lone Justice, the headlining band, is from Los Angeles, Cal. They play a countrified rock epitomized by bands like Jason and the Scorchers and the Bear Rodeo, but with none of those bands' charm. Led by 19-year-old Maria McKee, they charged through a set comprised of songs from their debut album, and a few new ones. They are certainly much better live than on vinyl, and an added guitarist rounded out their sound.

McKee's problem is not in her songwriting, which is fine and contains a lot of spiritual references. She is supposedly a Christian, and she showered the audience with "God bless you" more than once at the show's conclusion. The problems lie with her stage presence and her voice. There was no attempt on her part to communicate with the audience, except to mutter thanks a few times and shake hands at the end.

One of the things I enjoy most about true rock and roll is that it's supposed to be fun. I didn't get those vibes from this woman.

McKee has a big strong voice, and one time she sent shivers down my spine. This occured during the slower country number, Sweet, Sweet Baby (I'm Falling). It didn't seem like she was pretending then, and her heart really seeemed to be in it. She wasn't forcing her voice into vocal gymnastics it was never meant to attempt.

Her band was a lot more fun to watch than she was. At least their smiles seemd genuine. A very competent bunch. McKee is still a youngster. There are glimmers of potential in her performance.



The celebrated dB's opened the show, and proved once again why they are loved so dearly. A good percentage of the crowd was there to see them. Opening with Amplifier and seguing right into Neverland got things off to a good start. Leader Peter Holsapple seemed unsure as to the reaction of the crowd, and didn't crack a smile until midway through their set. The band played four new songs which ranged from good to great. Among them were Molly, and the pretty Ruins. Although the band is label-less at the moment, perhaps these songs will show up on an upcoming vinyl venture. They also did Judy, one of their B sides.

By the time they did Big Black Truck, things were really cooking. Everyone in front was dancing. The dB's loosened up and started to get into things. They did a number of songs from last year's Like This. Especially surprising was their inclusion of Lonely Is as Lonely Does, which they wouldn't play on their last two appearances in the area. The crowd really appreciated their last single, Love is For Lovers, and the classic Black and White, one of their finest moments.

The band worked well together. There was some fine fretwork from the rather reticent and handsome Gene Holder. They have a new guy on bass called Jeff, who replaced Rick Wagner a while back. And the always amusing Will Rigby provided some excellent percussion. Capping off a great performance was their encore, Spy in the House of Love.

All in all, an enjoyable night, due in no small part to the dB's, and the potentially good Lone Justice.

Getting music to go mainstream

By ROBERT GIPE
Collegian Correspondent

How come the dB's opened for Lone Justice in the Student Union ballroom Saturday night when fair play might indicate that the bill should have read the other way around? And how come the dB's can't get a hit record after seven years of making great pop music when the equally talented Lone Justice's first album just sold 100,000 copies?

"Money," says Gene Holder of the dB's. "Our last album (1984's Like This) was loaded with potential hits, but we couldn't get the label backing we needed because our label, Bearsville Records, folded a week after the album came out, so the promotion of Like This was nonexistent."

A sad story, but it is just a part of the hard luck rock odyssey of the dB's, one of the great unrecognized bands on the scene today. These yeomen of the good groove have endured contract and distribution problems and personnel shake-ups to deliver consistently lean and spirited performances of should-be-classics like Amplifier, Black and White, and Love is for Lovers as opening acts for better-known groups or as headliners in the smaller rock venues.

Lone Justice, on the other hand, seems to have had all the good fortune that has dodged the dB's. After only a handful of club dates around the LA rockabilly scene, Lone Justice was signed by Geffen Records. Geffen gave them the treatment that in an ideal world all cool young bands would receive. LJ's debut album was promoted well and sold well. They have two videos on MTV, and opened for U2 on their last American tour. Now they are on their first tour as headliners, playing in Amherst as the showcase act of the Rolling Stone Music Showcase.

What conclusion should one draw from the case of the dB's, a band of equal talent and a considerably longer and rougher history than Lone Justice, opening for Lone Justice, a good but much younger group? One might conclude that there is no justice in the case of Lone Justice, and get real bitter over it, but one thing rock and roll teaches (i.e. Amplifier or LJ's After the Flood) is that it is best not to be bitter over life's injustices.

No, it is better to remind oneself that both these bands are worthy bands, that both deserve the attention that Lone Justice is receiving (as do a host of other bands Rolling Stone is featuring in this showcase, such as Love Tractor and Green on Red). Finally one should congratulate the Rolling Stone Showcase for recognizing unrecognized bands like the dB's and slightly recognized bands like Lone Justice and hope that the showcase is an indication that hardworking roots rockers like these two bands will be able to get their music into the mainstream where it belongs.

The UMass defense got tough, stuffing all-American tailback Greg Grooms and throwing Bleier for a loss, forcing Toibin to punt it away to the UMass 27.

Palazzi took charge, picking up big third down at his own 36 before his pass to John Crowley fell incomplete at the Richmond 45. The Spiders were called for interference, giving UMass a first down in Richmond territory.

Palazzi wasted little time, throwing a perfect pass over the middle to Tom Cioppa for a 45-yard touchdown. It was the first TD pass for Palazzi and the first TD catch for Cioppa, a sophomore split end. Bonvini's kick made it 14-13 for the visitors.

It would be the last points UMass would score as a fired-up Richmond defense shut down the UMass attack in the second half.

The Minutemen had several chances deep in Richmond territory (at the 38 twice and once at the 34). They punted, fumbled and were intercepted on those possessions and were victimized by Richmond trickery.

After Barrett fumbled at the Richmond 38 with 9:07 to go in the third period, Bleier pitched to Grooms who lofted a 62-yard pass to an uncovered Brian Shilds for the touchdown. Richmond elected to go for two, but the Minuteman defense stopped them as Bleier was dropped.

UMass had several great opportunities in the final period, but the Spider defense held and the Minutemen took a tough loss.

"We may have lost, but they know we should've beaten them," freshman linebacker John McKeown said. "We played them tough, they're supposed to be the best team on our schedule, if that's the case we're going to win a lot of game."

McKeown, a 215 pound redshirt from Maine, was named Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week for a 16 tackle effort. He had seven solo hits, broke up a pass and had three tackles for a loss. Also playing well defensively were Mike Dwyer, Wood, Ed Sullivan, Bruce Strange and Paul Platek.

But the Big Green came right back 56 seconds later with their first legitimate goal with 7:28 left as Donahue was drawn out of the net and Dartmouth's and Julian Okwu had a wide-open shot.

In the second half, the Minuteman defense rose up to stop the Green as UMass made Giordano's second goal of the day with 26:36 to go in the game stand up.

The junior foward took a pass from Mike Bellino and easily slipped it past the Green goalie, who had come out of the net, for the 3-2 difference. "I think it should have been 3-0," Gettler said. "If we get three goals on any day we should win it.

"The defense played well," he said. "They got it together in the second half." Andy Bing also played well at midfield standing out with Dowd and Giorando.

on a cross from junior defenseman Lil Hultin. The shot was fired low into the net.

"Griswold is going to be a great one because not only does she draw a lot of defenders with her speed, she takes the opportunity to pass," Hixon said.

UMass increased to 2-0 five minutes later as junior attackman Erin Canniff picked up a pass at midfield, split a pair of Pacific defenders and rifled a shot past the goal keeper.

Withstanding constant pressure, Pacific managed a corner with ten minutes to play in the half. Disaster struck as Pacific midfielder and sparkplug Kerry McCrachen tore ligaments in her ankle on the play and was lost for the game. Lacking depth, Pacific was forced to juggle its lineup, placing inexperienced freshman on the offensive line.

"We would have given them a good game if we hadn't lost our key player," Conet said.

Sophomore Tonia Kennedy capped the first half scoring, taking a pass from senior forward Judith Morgan and pushing it in from in front of the net.

Late in the second half, Griswold added her second goal dribbling in from the right side and slipping the ball past the goal keeper, senior defensman Megan Donnelly then tallied on a drive with a minute remaining.

"They really lost a spark when McCrachen went out. They lacked depth so that took the wind out of their sails," Hixon said.

For the game, the Minutewomen outshot Pacifice by a 29-6 count. UMass also had 16 corners while Pacific managed only three.

Senior goalkeeper Kathryn Rowe started and made two saves before giving way to sophomore Lynn Carlson late in the game. Carlson made one save.

Minutemen edged by Richmond, 19-14

Powerful Spiders pushed to edge by UM, defense continues tough play

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

RICHMOND—If the University of Massachusetts football team can maintain the level of intensity it showed against the University of Richmond on Saturday night, 1985 will be a season to remember.

The Minutemen gave the powerful Spiders a scare, losing 19-14 in a hard-fought game that was decided by the trick play in the third period. Richmond, entering the game ranked seventh in Division 1-AA and winners over 1-A Virginia Tech a week prior, found a different UMass team than the one it beat 24-7 last year in Amherst.

A loss is never a thing to build on, but we did show a lot in this game," UMass coach Bob Stull said. "We hung with a very good football team and could have beaten them. If we can eliminate the mistakes that still remain and keep the level of play up, we're going to do very well the rest of the way."

UMass entered the game as a 17-point underdog. The Spiders were riding a nine game string of home games during which they ran up over 400 yards of offense. The Minutemen, despite a 38-9 victory over Morgan State, were supposed to be a minor annoyance for the Spider's home opener, a game that featured sky divers, fireworks and a hot air balloon to entertain a crowd of 14,068.

Richmond found itself in a game quickly however, as UMass scored the games first touchdown.

Cornerback Chris Wood intercepted a Bob Bleier pass to give UMass the ball at the Richmond 32 with just 52 seconds gone in the game. The Minutemen stayed on the ground, running three plays that picked up 13 yards and a first down to the 19 yard line.

Sophomore tailback Ted Barrett, starting for injured co-captain George Barnwell, then picked up five going with the blocks of Stan Kaczorowski and Mike Briggs.

Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi went left for five more yards and a first down to the Richmond nine. Fullback Al Neri busted through to the four before Barrett followed Briggs in for the touchdown with 10:44 remaining. Freshman Silvio Bonvini made it 7-0 with the point after.

Richmond answered quickly, driving 69 yards in 3:21 as all-American candidate Leland Melvin caught a 14-yard scoring toss from Bleier. Bleier completed three passes for 38 yards and ran for nine more yards during the drive. Brendan Toibin's PAT tied the game at seven.

UMass took the kickoff and drove to its 45 before a sack of Palazzi by right tackle Brian Tuft forced a punt by freshman Dimitri Yavis(playing in place of the injured Jim Tandler). Yavis botted the ball to the Richmond 14, a kick of 41 yards, but senior John Armstrong sliced through a punt return team full of underclassmen to make it 13-7 as Toibin missed the kick.

It's a sore spot," said Stull of his special teams. "We've given up two return touchdowns in two games and that's too many. Yavis did a great job of kicking the ball, he actually outkicked his coverage. We'll do a lot of work on that aspect of the game I assure you."

The quarter ended with Richmond leading. The teams traded possessions at the top of the second period. UMass lost the ball on a key fourth-and-one at the Richmond 37 as Palazzi took too much time setting up. Yavis punted it to the Richmond five.

UMass stomps Pacific

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Lisa Griswold scored two goals and Erin Canniff, Tonia Kennedy and Megan Donnelly added one each as the University of Massachusetts field hockey team overwhelmed a sluggish Pacific University, 5-0, Saturday on Totman Field at NOPE field.

Pacific was never a factor in the game as constant UMass pressure forced several breakdowns on both offense and defense. Most of the game was spent standing around watching the Minutewomen control play as fatigue and inexperience took its toll.

"We were not agressive at all," Pacific head coach Carla Conet said. "UMass was bigger, faster and more aggressive than we were. We were under attack."

"We really didn't let them do anything, we played our game and dominated the tempo," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said. "They boast a big play offense, but by blocking up the middle we forced them into a short passing game."

The Minutewomen scored quickly, jumping on the board with 23:45 to go in the first half as speedy junior forward Lisa Griswold scored the first of her two goals

Sophomore foward Monica Seta scored three goals to lead the third ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team to a 4-0 win over New Hampshire College, snapping the Penmen's 20 game winning streak, Saturday at Boyden Field.

The Minutewomen won their second in a row scoring twice in the first ten minutes of the game, but they didn't look as sharp as they did in their 9-0 opening win over Keene State last Wednesday.

"We got goals. That's about it," head coach Kalekeni Banda said. "We didn't click consistently. We didn't do the job I thought we should be doing. We didn't play up to our level, we played more down to theirs."

But when Massachusetts clicked, they were impressive.

Seta put UMass on the board with just 2:53 gone in the first half with a goal that wasn't very impressive. The sophomore from Cincinnati sent a roller that snuck by Penman goalie Patty Turner for the 1-0 UMass lead.

The second goal at the 11:53 mark of the first half was impressive. Sophomore midfielder Carolyn Michael lofted a high, arcing pass to Seta in front of the goal, who headed the ball into the net for the 2-0 lead.

"That was great," Seta said. "She just laid it right in there. I just caught her eye and she caught mine."

Seta scored her third goal of the game, completing the hat trick with 7:01 to go in the first half. She stole the ball from a Penman defender in front of the New Hampshire goal and beat Turner one-on-one for the 3-0 lead.

Micheel picked up her sixth assist of the young season on another corner chip. This time it was to freshman foward Cathy Cassady with 17:14 to go in the game who knocked in the pass for the 4-0 margin of victory.

Defender Debbie Belkin also stood out in the game before an estimated 250 people with some fine offensive and defensive drives.

Seta, though, was pleased to get involved so much with the offensive scoring.

"I want to be a part of the offense," she said. "It would be helpful to the team. We need it because we lost Jolie (DePauw, last year's leading scorer who didn't return to school this semester). I'm hoping it will be me (scoring)."

The UMass defense did give up its first shot on goal of the year and goalie Carla DeSantis made the first save of the year. After outshooting its division II opponents, who were 19-0 last year, by a 20-1 margin.

Penman coach Peter Taft wasn't too upset with his team's performance that evened this season's record at 1-1. "This is by far the best team we'll face all year. I was glad we kept the goals down."

UMass booters get past Green, 3-2

By GERRY deSIMAS

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team overcame an offenssively flat first half performance and scoring a goal for Dartmouth, as they outlasted the Big Green, 3-2 Saturday mornign at Boyden Field.

The Minutemen, who improved to 3-2 on the year, played inspired defense in the second half as Dartmouth picked up a loss in its season opener.

"I though we gave away both goals," UMass head coach Jeff Gettler said. "We weren't real conservative. We were too aggressive on defense in the first half and that's what gave up the goals."

Massachusetts took the lead on its first offensive posession, just 2:28 after the opening whistle. Senior co-captain Matt Dowd took an indirect kick in front of the Green goal and passed it around a line of Big Green players to freshman Anders Hedelin who beat Green goalie Jim Cisnerouse one-on-one for the score.

However, miscommunication by UMass tied the game up with 12:16 left in the first half.

With Dartmouth threatening in the UMass end, sophomore sweeper Matt Cushing tried to head the ball over the UMass net but it went too low and past Minuteman keeper Don Donahue.

Up to that point, Dartmouth had controlled the game offensively while a flat UMass offense had few opportunities. The miscue fired up the Minutemen who four minutes later, with 8:32 left, took the 2-1 lead as Tom Giorando took a nice cross from John Shannon in front of the net and fired it home.

UMass Halloween policy relaxed

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

For the first time in five years, students will be able to participate in campus activities during the Halloween weekend, after officials yesterday relaxed the University's Holloween policy.

The change reversed a ban on all Campus Center activities scheduled for the Halloween weekend, and will allow Campus Center to remain open for events scheduled form Thursday, Oct. 31, Halloween, until November 3, according to Dennis Madsen, vice chancellor of student affairs.

"We wanted to liberalize a little more so that students can enjoy the period without the disruption and problems, as we had in the past," Madsen said yesterday.

Madsen, who was responsible for giving the plan its final approval, was referring to 1979, when vandalism and arrests on Halloween night reached dangerous proportions.

As a result of those incidents, the University imposed stringent rules beginning in 1980, closing Campus Center and other University buildings, and prompting Housing officials to restrict dormitories to no more than two guests, and imposing a 24-hour security system.

Although the new policy makes no significant change in dormitory visitation rules, it formally states that certain activities such as films shown in Campus Center and concerts in the Fine Arts Center will be permitted during Halloween period.

"The implication is this is no longer 1980," said Michael Jones, student activities program director, who drafted the policy.

During October 31, the Campus Center will be closed to all events "which purport to be connected with Halloween," according to a draft. The building will be open for other non-Halloween functions.

The new policy also states the following:

•For films in the Campus Center or Student Union, written details about the movies must be filed with the Campus Center director's office and Public Safety office at least three weeks before the scheduled showing and cannot end later than 11 p.m.

• Concerts, dances and parties in the Campus Center Auditorium, Student Union Ballroom or Blue Wall, "which purport to celebrate Halloween cannot be scheduled in this complex," according to the published policy, during Halloween day.

• For concerts in the Fine Arts Center and Bowker Auditorium, written details regarding the program must be filed with the Department of Public Safety at least one month before the event and the concert is "not be publicized as a Halloween event, and the wearing of masks and costumes is prohibited," the policy states.

"What we've been able to do is allow student to take more initiative and responsibility in programming," Jones said. "We're willing and anxious to work with students."

U.S. drops rule on campus draft

A controversial proposal that requires male students to verify that they are registered for the draft before they can receive financial aid has been dropped by the United States Department of Education.

The proposal had been slated to go into effect this fall but the Education Department decided that it was not necessary when a spot check found that over 90 percent of the men have registered with the Selective Service.

However, the University of Massachusetts financial aid office still requires students to prove that they don't have to sign a draft registration compliance on their financial aid forms, if they are not men between 18 and 23-years-old , said Arthur Jackson, director of financial aid.

"If the University can ascertain that a person doesn't have to sign the statement because the person is a female or any of the other exemptions, then they don't have to sign a statement of registration compliance," Jackson said.

Students who apply for financial aid at the University must fill out a two-part statement of educational purpose and draft registered with the Selective Service.

If passed, the proposal would have required universities to collect further documentation from students.

Draft registration was reinstituted in 1980 by President Jimmy Carter.

Development center recieves federal grant

By LEE KORB
Collegian Staff

The Center for Economic Development (C.E.D.) at the University of Massachusetts has been awarded an $80,000 grant by the U.S. Development Administration. The grant will be used to create a full-time staff position in the center's Boston office, the C.E.D. director said.

Economic Development director Sam Seskin said the grant is a 33 percent increase over the grant received last year and compensates for inflation and the decrease in federal funding. He said this year's grant puts the center on an budget economically equivilant to 1983.

The center is a public service that provides assistance to cities and towns across the state. Since 1977, it has assisted 20 to 30 towns and cities a year with city planning and the rejuvenation of downtown areas.

The center currently employs three full-time people. Two work in Amherst and one in Boston, Seskin said. Although the center is part of the School of Management, the employees have no teaching responsibilities, he said.

The center researches already existing information and does interviews with businesses to collect data and establish current trends in growth. Once the trends are identified, they make predictions and recommendations of possible options to city planners, Seskin said.

Seskin said the center is currently involved in a project with the city of Gardner, Mass. to raise funds to employ new economic developer for the community.

Charted boating, hiking trails

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Fishermen, hikers, and area historians interested in the Quabbin reservoir can now chart their way through the Massachusetts region due to the work of a University of Massachusetts student and part-time cartographer.

Christopher Ryan, 25, a non-degree graduate student recently published a map of the Quabbin area. The map emphasizes boating areas, hiking trails, and the underwater contour. "The map is popular with fishermen and hikers because it shows them new places to go. It is a total recreation map. It is also kind of historical in a way," Ryan said.

Quabbin is the fourth area Ryan has charted in the past two years. Since 1983 he has designed hiking maps for Mt. Tom, Mt. Toby and the Holyoke Mountain Range Trail. Designing maps is, according to Ryan, an extention of his education.

"I have always been interested in hiking," he said. "A few years ago, I felt there wasn't an adequate map of the Holyoke range trail. At the time, I was an undergraduate geography major, and cartography classes were required. I just combined the two skills of hiking and cartography together."

Designing the map of Quabbin differed from the others in that Ryan did not have to do as much hiking. "Quabbin is such a large area, I couldn't hike the entire area," he said. "I relied on the experiences of other people who had already hiked the area."

"The government topography maps are unusually good for Quabbin, so I used them as my base (of information)," Ryan said. His map is a compilation of the underwater contours and the topography, in addition to the hiking trails.

The demand for his map of Quabbin has been greater than for his other maps, Ryan said. "I had 5000 copies printed up and so far, 3000 have been sold. I haven't yet figured out how much that comes to, but it has paid for the printing costs."

Ryan said his next project will not involve the Quabbin reservoir but another area waterway. "Next I plan to do a boating and canoeing guide of the Connecticut River. It will be a series of maps but will be in a book form," he said.

"Friends of Quabbin," a nature organization, has commissioned Ryan to design a map of Quabbin Park in Belchertown, he said.

Soldiers stand guard outside a shell-flattened block of apartments and shops yesterday in Tripoli after heavy fighting broke out leaving 28 dead.

29 killed by Moslem militias in residential areas of Tripoli

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Moslem militias fighting for control of Tripoli shelled residential districts of the northern port yesterday, paralyzing the city and sending civilians underground.

Police reported 28 people killed, nearly half of them civilians, and 68 wounded in the intense artillery battle that began Sunday.

Casualties included 10 Lebanonese army soldiers killed and 40 wounded by two mortar rounds that crashed into the 2nd Brigade's Bahjat Ghanem barracks during the night. State-run Beirut radio said a major and three officer cadets were among those killed.

In Beirut, Christian and Moslem militiamen traded sniper fire across the strip of devastation that divides the capital on sectarian lines. Predominantly Christian units of the army fought Druse Moslem militiamen around the army's stronghold at Souk el-Gharb in hills overlooking Beirut.

No casualty reports were available in the Beirut and hill fighting.

The fundamentalist Sunni Moslem Islamic Unification movement, supported by the PLO, and the Syrian-backed Arabian Knights have fought a war of supremacy for two years in Tripoli, which with 500,000 residents is Lebanon's second-largest city.

Tripoli's army garrison has stayed on the sidelines, unable to stop the fighting. The shells that hit the barracks apparently were strays.

The Syrian army controls much of north Lebanon and maintains positions on hills overlooking Tripoli, but has made no move to curb the fighting.

Police said the other dead in Tripoli were 13 civilians and five militiamen, three from Islamic Unication and two Arabian Knights.

Hardest hit were the densely populated residential districts of Baal Mohsen, Bab el-Tabb-neh, Shaarani, and Kubbeh.

Buildings were set afire an hundreds of families sought refuge in basements and bomb shelters.

All government offices, banks, schools, cafes and shops closed their doors, police reported, and the oil refinery at the harbor also halted operations.

They described the fighting as the worst in Tripoli since December 1983, when Syrian-backed PLO dissidents drove Palestine Liberation Organization cheif Yasser Arafat and his loyalists out of the city.

Six alleged Soviet spies ordered to leave Britain

LONDON (AP) — Britain ordered six more Soviets out of the country yesterday in an escalating series of expulsions of purported spies which has plunged Anglo-Soviet relations to one of the lowest points since World War II.

The governments accused two Soviets diplomats, two embassy clerks, a trade representive and a journalist of spying and ordered them to leave Britain by Oct. 7. Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe said the move was designed "to uphold Britain's national security."

The government also cut the permitted level of Soviet official personnel in Britain from 211 to 205.

The Soviet Embassy in London quickly accused Britain in a statement of a "provocative and vindictive action of an unfriendly nature" and said it was "totally unjustified on any grounds whatsoever."

It added that "the entire responsibility for the consequences of this action rests with the British side."

Britain last Thursday ordered 25 Russians to leave Britain by Oct. 3, saying they were named as spies by Oleg A. Gordievski, head of the KGB spy network for Britain who defected and was granted asylum.

Britain warned against retaliation, but on Saturday the Russians expelled 25 Britons, accusing them of spying.

In throwing out six more Soviets yesterday, the Foreign Office called the Soviet reprisal "an unwarranted victimization of innocent people, which the British government was not prepared to accept."

The statements by both sides carried ominous overtones of relations getting worse on a broader scale. The Foreign Office said Moscow's action "could not but set back the process" of improving ties. The Soviet Embassy replied that "it is hard to discern the professed desire of the British side for a better relationship."

In 1971, Britain expelled the largest number of alleged Soviet agents - 105 - but the Russians replied by ousting only 18 Britons, and 10 of them had already left Moscow. The retaliation then was considered by Britain as largely symbolic.

When the Russians on Saturday ordered 25 Britons to leave Moscow in a one-for-one expulsion, British officials were highly annoyed, claiming the Soviets had overacted.

One British official, who would not permit use of his name, pointed out that while before the present series of expulsions there were only about 98 British embassy staff, businessmen and journalists accredited in Moscow, the level of Soviet personnel permitted in Britain was 234.

Troops sweep into Angola, domestic violence persists

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Troops and warplanes swept into southern Angola yesterday to strike South-West African guerrillas the military said were planning attacks on towns and military bases in the territory.

Gen. Constand Viljoen, the armed forces commander, said Angola's Marxist government was informed of the strike against guerrillas of the South-West Africa People Organization and warned "not to interfere." It was the second strike in 10 weeks inside Angola, where about 25,000 Cuban troops are based.

Viljoen gave no indication of the size of the force, its targets or how deeply it penetrated. Southern Angola is the base area of SWAPO guerrillas fighting for the independence of South-West Africa, a mineral-rich territory also known as Namibia that South Africa has controlled since World War I.

"One followup can lead to another . . . Hopefully it the stride will be over within a week," Lt. Gen. Ian Gleason the army chief of staff, said last night on the government-controlled television.

Racial unrest persisted in South Africa. Hundreds in Johannesburg's huge black township of Soweto went on a rampage because of rumors that black leader Nelson Mandela had died in jail. Mandela's wife said the rumors were false.

Witnesses at Grootfontein, 157 miles south of Angola and South Africa's main Namibian air base, said air force Mirage jets took off at various times during the day.

Viljoen said reconnaissance and intelligence-gathering operations established that guerrillas planned long-range bombardments of military bases and attacks on big towns and residential areas in the northern part of the disputed territory.

SWAPO has not been known to have long-range artillery in its battle for Namibia, which South Africa governs under a League of Nations mandate abrogated by the U.N. General Assembly in 1966.

Gleason said troops were pursuing the guerrillas' 8th Battalion, which he estimated at 400-800 men and said was "well-dispersed" in southern Angola. He said it was the unit that was to have made the attacks.

After the last crossborder strike early in July, Viljoen said his forces killed 57 guerrillas and lost one man in a two-day operation. The July strike was the first since South Africa completed a negotiated withdrawal of its forces, a year late, from southern Angola.

Wexler reflects on advising Ferarro during campaign last year

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

When Anne Wexler received a phone call from her friend Geraldine Ferraro in July 1984 offering her the senior political adviser position on Ferarro's campaign for vice president, Wexler immediately accepted.

Now, more than a year after that phone call, and ten months after Ferraro and her running mate, presidential candidate Walter Mondale, suffered a crushing defeat in the 1984 presidential election, Wexler looks back on her decision with no regrets. She vows, however, never to work again for a candidate at a position as important as the one she held for Ferraro.

"That was my last one," Wexler, who is married to University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, said Saturday during an interview at the Chancellor's residence near Orchard Hill.

"That kind of operation is for young people. It was marvelous to be a part of history, but I would never do it again."

Wexler, who heads the Washington lobbying firm of Wexler, Reynolds, Harrison and Schule Inc., reflected on her work for Ferraro and the effects of the Ferraro candidacy on American politics.

"The very act of nominating a woman eliminated both the actual and psychological main barrier for women," she said, sitting on her enclosed porch overlooking the campus. "The candidacy permeates every facet of life. For a little kid in the first or second grade, you know a woman ran for vice president of the United States. It has that kind of permeating influence."

Wexler, who at 55 spends the work week in Washington and returns to the Pioneer Valley on Friday nights before flying back to the Capital each Monday morning, served as the primary strategist for the historic debate between Ferraro and George Bush.

She said the debate team spent most of the two weeks before the debate in a New York City hotel suite, drilling the candidate on background information concerning the Bush administration and trying to guess what questions reporters would ask.

Two days before the Philadelphia debate, the team, debate briefing books and all, moved to a television studio and recreated the stage exactly as it would appear in Philadelphia, right down to the spotlights and microphone positions.

"There wasn't a single question asked that we weren't prepared for," Wexler said. "I thought she did a superb job because she had to prove to a lot of people she was substantive."

Anne Wexler

For Wexler, the highlight of the campaign was the UMass campus rally, where 20,000 people, the largest group to assembl at any Ferraro rally, lined the campus pond and North Pleasant Street to see the first major party female White House Candidate.

"She (Ferraro) loved that rally," Wexler said.

For Ferraro, the toughest part of the campaign was dealing with the anti-abortion protestors who mounted a strong apparently coordinated offensive against the Democrat, Wexler said.

"She was bothered by how they (the protesters) attacked her," Wexler said. "Considering she is a committed Catholic, it was a tough thing a deal with. And in the early days it was clearly organized."

Wexler was not as bothered by the hecklers.

"It's something I've lived with all of my political career," she said. "I carried my share of signs in the anti-war days."

Wexler's political experience dates further back than just to the "anti-war" days of the 1960s. It began with the Truman campaign in 1948, when she was "licking stamps," as she said, and attending Skidmoore College in Pennsylvania, majoring in history.

After moving to Westport, Conn., in 1958, the New York native moved her way up the political ladder, eventually becoming the chairman of the Westport Democratic Committee.

In 1967, she co-chaired the McCarthy campaign in Connecticut with Duffey, and both went to Chicago as delegates to the National Convention, an experience, she said, she will never forget.

"It was very scary," she recalled, shifting herself in her porch chair. "No one had ever seen anything like that."

The convention was the scene of one of the most violent anti-war protests ever, as young anti-war marchers clashed with Chicago police. Scores of protestors were seriously injured.

"I remember we were gathering with all the McCarthy and Kennedy delegates in a room and you could hear marching feet outside the door," she recalled, a smile coming to her lips. "O'Dwyer (Paul O'Dwyer, a prominent politician in the New York political scene) listened and looked at the group and said, 'I hear the police, they are obviously coming to protect us.'"

The police passed, Wexler said, and the tension in the room, generated by the ugly scene outside on the streets, quickly dissipated after O'Dwyer's nervous joke.

"It was a very intense moment," Wexler said. "I can still see it and feel it."

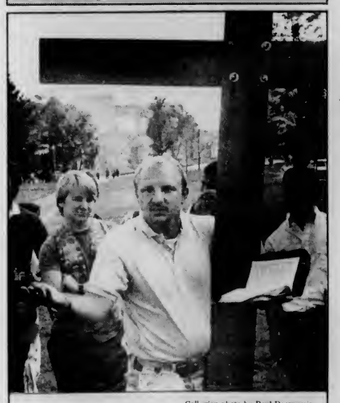
Leading Duffey's unsuccessful 1970 bid for the United States Senate seat in Connecticut, did not stop her from continuing her involvement in the Democratic cause.

She ran the National Committee's voter registration drive in 1972, as usual, involving herself with party reform.

From 1973 until 1976, she served as associate publisher for Rolling Stone magazine, relinquishing her position to enter the Carter Administration as deputy undersecretary of commerce.

In 1978, she was chosen by President Carter to be assistant to the president for public liason, making her the only woman in the president's circle of eight top advisers.

Wexler's marriage to Duffey in 1974 was her second, she has two boys, 29 and 31, by her previous marriage, which lasted 22 years.



Woman's Forum

Tuesday: All University women and faculty are invited to attend a "welcome back" reception to be held from 4-6 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Wednesday: An introduction to women's groups and centers will take place from 4-6 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Representatives from SCERA, Women's Leadership Project, Everywoman's Center, WMUA Women's Media Project, Women's Caucus of the Student Government Association (SGA) and other women's groups and centers, including some from UMass-Boston, will be on hand.

Thursday: All community and University women are encouraged to attend a women's support group which will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Bang's Community Center. There is a $3 charge.

Sunday: Valley Women's Martial Arts will hold a "fundraising celebration" from 2-4 p.m. at the Northampton Center For the Arts, Old School Commons, New South Street. The organization hopes to raise funds so that it may continue to provide free classes in self-defense training.

UMass anthropology prof honored

By EILEEN FRAZIER
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts anthropology professor Dena Dincauze has been named vice president of the Society for American Archeology, the last professional archeological group in the Western Hemisphere.

The group is geared towards professionals and non-professionals involved in North and South American archeology, Dincauze said. "We try to make people more aware of the past 12,000 years," she said.

The position of vice president serves as an apprenticeship, Dincauze said. As president-elect, she will work on administrative and policy matters and in two years she will become president of the group.

The group also acts as a legislative liaison for archeologists throughout the country. "This is our only political role," Dincauze said.

The society asks the government for grants to explore sites which could contain valuable historic information. Many prospective sites are located on inaccessible areas, such as private property or government-owned land, she said.

The group holds yearly meetings at which professional archeologists and archeology students present results of findings and present up-to-date discoveries. Last year the 50th anniversary meeting of the group was attended by more than 2,000 members.

Dincauze has been teaching at UMass since 1973 and is the author of several essays and articles. She has also been an editor for the Journal of American Antiquity for the past 10 years.

Women suffers from smoke inhalation

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A student was treated for smoke inhalation after a fire was set outside of her room Sunday on the fourth floor of John Adams, University of Massachusetts police said.

Pizza boxes, cardboard beer boxes and trash bags were piled outside her door and set on fire, police said. The woman said that she answered aknock on her door and the fire spread into her room when she opened the door.

Police said the woman and a police officer were taken to University Health Services and treated for smoke inhalation and released. Police said they have a suspect and are investigating in the the incident.

In other police reports:

Police arrested an 18-year-old man after they found him driving a car with a person in the trunk Saturday night. He was arrested for drunk driving and other motor vehicle violations after they released the person in the car trunk, police said.

A break was reported in Hamden Snack Bar Sunday morning by a janitor who found the building "trashed," police said. The building was locked and police say they have no suspects in the incident. There is no estimation of damage done or if anything was taken.

A $200 bicycle was reported stolen from Pierpont House Sunday. Police said it was locked and the chain was cut.

An equalizer and a power booster valued at $450 were reported stolen from a 1979 Ford parked in lot 22 Saturday evening, police said.

A 19-year-old Massachusetts Bay Community College student was arrested Saturday morning after he exposed himself to three female students at a bus station on Sunset Avenue, police said.

A 19-year-old UMass student was arrested and charged with possession of narcotics on a default warrant after he was involved in a motor vehicle accident on University Drive. Police said he was hit by a 1971 Toyota, hich received $800 in damage. The driver, also a 19-year-old UMass student, was cited for having no registration, failure to stop at a sign and having an expired inspection sticker, police said.

A pocketbook containing $140 was taken from a student's room on the 10th floor of John Quincy Adams tower Friday night, police said. Her room was unlocked and the pocketbook was stolen in an one hour period. Police said they have no suspects.

A radio worth $327 was stolen from a room on the second floor of Dickinson House Saturday morning. Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

Car insurance increase urged

Decrease if seat belt law adopted by State

BOSTON (AP) — The state Rating Bureau has recommended a 2.1 percent increase in Massachusetts auto insurance rates for 1986, but a 2.4 percent decrease if the commonwealth adopts a mandatory seat belt law by Jan. 1.

The action was the third and final recommendation made to state Insurance Commissioner Peter Hiam, who opens hearing Sept. 23 on private passenger car rates for 1986.

The proposed increased would raise the average premium by about $9 a year.

The insurance industry has asked for a 12 percent increase in the average $450 polic y for 1986. Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti recommended a 3.5 percent increase, or a lower amount with passage of a seat belt law.

"Overall, the industry's proposal for a 12 percent increase in auto insurance rates -more than triple the rate of inflation - cannot be justified," said Stewart Kemp, director of the rating Bureau, which is an advisory board in Hiam's insurance department.

"In fact, 1984 marked the third year in a row, according to industry data, that the auto insurance business has been more profitable in Massachusetts for insurers than in the country as a whole," he said yesterday.

Last year, Massachusetts insurance companies paid out 71.5 cents for every dollar collected in premiums, while across the country the average was 73.4 cents, he said.

Hiam is due to announce a decision on 1986 rates by Jan. 1. His final decision is expected to hinge on whether the Legislature approves a mandatory seat belt bill by the end of the year.

Greta Garbo celebrates her birthday tomorrow

NEW YORK (AP) — She wears privacy like a warm, winter coat and often is puzzled when a perceptive eye penetrates her customary disguise of slouched hat and dark glasses as she prowls the city streets in long, strong strides.

However, try as she will to cloak herself from film, fans and frenzy, neither age nor disguise can veil the remnants of sensuality and haunting beauty of Greta Garbo.

As she observes her 80th birthday tomorrow, only a tiny and tight fistful of friends might be privy to any type of celebration. So many have died. And she likes so few.

There were no marriages, there were no children born to the actress who once said "I want to be alone" in the movie, Grand Hotel.

"Marriage? I have said over and over again that I do not know," she once said. "there is always my overwhelming desire to be alone."

"Her birthday? It's just like New Years Eve," said an old friend, Ray Daum. "I once asked her to do something with me on New Years Eve and she said, 'Oh, I'm going to bed and if I hear horns going off and sirens, I'll wake up and say happy New Year Miss Garbo."

A nation of 'guiltophiles'

Rusty Denton

Some people say that love makes the world go 'round, others think that good times keep us going, but if you really want to know what gets people going, ask them about their guilt. Did love fuel the past century of psychological debate? No, guilt did! Do people watch soaps for hours to see someone having a good time? No, they're watching guilt! We are a nation of guiltophiles.

Technically, guilt is no fun at all: it's a fact, not a feeling. However, guilt pricks the conscience, the conscience makes us squirm, and then we try to stifle those quiet moral pangs. In fact, dealing with pangs of guilt has become quite an art form.

Some people are really into their quilt, I mean, like, really into it, you know? They sit and brood about their guilt in their best Woody Allen poses, waiting for Diane Keaton to tell them they're not so bad. Of course, they don't dare to talk about their real sins for fear that some will say, "You did WHAT?!"

Other people are into passing the buck. The trite expression is, "The devil made me do it." "Hey, I was tempted," someone says, "what was I supposed to do?" Say no, just say no.

A more creative approach to passing the buck is, "God made me with these urges." For the secular mind, this translates to, "Evolution made me with these urges, so it must be good for the species." This seems to be easier to say than "God/evolution game me this quiet moral pang." I'm sure the pang is good for the species.

Some of us prefer just to blame other members of the species. A rebuke I've muttered while driving is, "You're the only jerk on the road who had to cut in front of me when I was doing 85!" This leaves the other driver feeling angry, and me feeling sour, which is one reason I don't do 85 anymore. Or there's my friend. "Look, I didn't ask to feel bad, and nobody's gonna make me!" His approach to blame is subtle. He won't blame you for something that is his fault; he'll blame you for trying to make him feel bad about it.

I have other friends who try to release the anxiety of guilt in workaholism or in wild parties, or who feed it because "guilt is a constant, so you might as well have a good time." But nobody is as deft with pangs of guilt as those who try to balance them with their nice guy causes and politics. "Look at my worthy record. How could anyone conclude that I'm less than wonderful?" Yes, look at all the things that guilt will drive a person to do. Is that being genuinely nice, or is that trying to buy off an evil conscience?

All of these guilty antics are really a reflection of a universally human dilemma: is it worse to have quiet moral pangs, or to deny your urges? Nobody seems to agonize over this until after they satisfy their urges. I suggest that we have a conscience for a reason, and that no degree of squirming or rationalizing will change the facts of what is right and wrong. I also suggest that the conscience isn't a function of genetics, but is a stamp of the Creator's ownership. I wonder if He is as amused as I am by what goes on down here.

Lament of a floor father

Herb Ramy

Every year, the people of each floor on campus designate someone to be their paternal influence. Last year I had the distinction or curse, depending on how you look at it, of being this person.

Physically, there is no particular criteria for this father figure, although having a beard does seem to help. I guess it adds a certain amount of sincerity to an otherwise normal face. The only true prerequisite for this position I have ever found is that the person must be a great listener.

There are some advantages to being placed in this position. Chief among these is the added respect and trust one is given by his floormates. But in my opinion, the disadvantages far outweigh the advantages.

You might ask how could there by any disadvantage to being trusted or respected, but remember with added trust comes added responsibility.

The first disadvantage has to do with dating. Picture this if you can. You're at a dance, and suddenly you see that woman from your floor who has attracted you since day one. You ask the D.J. to play a slow song next. It comes on, and you walk over to ask her to dance. She accepts. As you're dancing you look into her eyes. She gazes back into yours and says:

"You know something, I really like you. You're just like a second father to me." You smile back and accept the "compliment," while wondering in the back of your mind what her feelings on incest are. It's almost insulting when someone trusts you that much.

The other major disadvantage to being the father of a floor, is that you can never have problems. You must always be ready to drop what you're doing and come to the aid of any floor member. Now, this isn't so bad if your friend is in the middle of a major crisis, but how about this situation for example?

It's Monday and you're walking out of your third class of the day where you have just failed your third exam of the day. These are the same exams that you spent an entire weekend studying for. As you step outside it begins to rain, and by the time you make it to the dorm you are thoroughly soaked. When you get to your room you realize that the door is locked and your key is still inside. Just at that moment a floormate comes to you with tears in her eyes begging you to take her to the mall so she can purchase the new Paul Young album. You of course, pull the gun away from your head and consent because it is your duty.

In an attempt in avoid "fatherhood" this semester I've shaved my beard, and have attempted to look insincere. I don't think it's working though. Some of the people are already asking me what I want for Father's Day.

AIDS at public schools

Stuart Gottlieb

In New York City, where I live, there is an old age home located in one of the more affluent sections of the city. Mayor Koch decided that this hardly-used residence building would be a great place to house New York's hundreds of homeless and unwanted AIDS victims. This idea went under extreme protest by everyone in my town and was finally postponed indefinitely. The major point of the local homeowner's argument was one that is a major point of the whole AIDS issue—nobody knows to what extent AIDS is contagious.

In my opinion, not unlike that of my neighbors or much of New York City, we shouldn't play with an unknown, deadly disease until we know all the facts. One example is a dentist nearby whom after finding out that a few of his patients would be working with AIDS victims, decided to treat them anymore. Some may call this paranoia but I call it common sense.

This brings me to the real issue at hand the allowance of AIDS children in New York City public schools. There were some wildly heated debates going on all summer over whether or not to allow these children to attend school. The pro side is relying on the undocumented opinions of some doctors that AIDS is only contagious through sexual intercourse. The con side is stating that nobody knows for sure how AIDS is contracted, let alone how it works or where it came from. It is my opinion that we should stay on the safe side and not allow these children in the school system. I'm sure that we can all feel sympathy for the victims and their families of this terrible disease, but I don't think it is right to make four or five families happy and in turn risk an epidemic of a 100 percent fatal disease.

There are many ironies involved with this issue, the most blatant being that in two out of the three families fighting for their child's right to go to public schools, the child died before the school year began. I can sympathize with the fact that this is basically just a moral, ethical issue, but my opinions stems strictly from the standpoint of "better safe than sorry."

I think this issue would be more easily settled if both sides would just take a minute and think about the wants and needs of the children involved. Would they be happy in a school with their peers, or would they just be a spectacle at recess? Would these kids, in fact, be getting a better education than they would with a private, or hospital tutor? Would the benefits of winning this AIDS issue bring peace to the victims families, or just unneeded grief from an unfeeling world?

Here at UMass, I've heard opinions from many Western Massachusetts residents who don't live with the reality of this killer disease. New York has the highest percentage of AIDS victims in the country. It has become a major issue in the city, especially with the high increase in new cases. Over the summer, I heard doctor after doctor from both sides saying the same things over and over again. The one understanding I got from hearing all of this is that we have little or no knowledge of the disease.

The last thing I heard was that the AIDS children would be allowed in public schools. After this decision, teachers quit, students were transferred to other schools and hundreds of parents picketed in front of the schools. Is this any way to get an education? It seems that the issue of giving these few children an education is getting in the way of educating everyone.

This touchy subject is yet to reach Western Massachusetts but it will be here soon. When it gets here, I hope the situation is handled better than in New York. After all, would you really feel safe knowing that your child traded with a victim of the most feared disease in today's society?

Letters

In his column, Rusty Denton presented arguments for the use of the death penalty as a deterrent to crime. While these arguments seem convincing, they are not based in reality.

Numerous research projects over the past 50 years have failed to establish that the death penalty results in lower murder rates. In fact, evidence suggest that executions may actually increase the incident of murder. Several states have had an increase in their rate of homicide following the reinstation of the death penalty, and a recent study in New York State suggested that an execution would result in 2 or 3 extra homicides in the following months within the state alone and possibly more within the nation as a whole.

dIt seems unreasonable to me to implement a punishment as morally questionable as the death penalty when there is no evidence that it is an effective deterrent against crime. Vengeance alone is not a justifiable reason to execute a person, especially when there is the everpresent possibility of executing an innocent person unjustly accused of crime.

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated income and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus just over a quarter of a million dollars — $257,000, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $179,000 owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

131 voluntarily resign from Chinese Central Committee

PEKING (AP) — Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping swept 131 senior Communist Party officials from power yesterday to make way for younger men and ensure the success of his economic and political reforms.

He also ended the life-tenure system that prompted power struggles between stubborn, elderly leaders which have plagued China since the communists took power in 1949. Deng himself was a victim when Chairman Mao Tse-tung dismissed him as a "capitalist roader" during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

Official announcements said all 131 officials submitted voluntary resignations, including 64 full and alternate members of the powerful 344-delegate Central Committee. Among those were 10 of the 24 Politburo members.

The resignations came at the fourth full session of the 12th Central Committee in Peking. Deng and his proteges, party chief Hu Yaobang and Premier Zhao Ziyang, had said earlier that major personnel changes would be made at a series of party meetings this month.

Deng himself is 81, but shows no sign of fatigue. He is the nation's paramount leader, head of the Central Advisory Commission and Central Military Commission.

Six Politburo seats were vacated by military men, including Marshal Ye Jianying, an ailing 86-year-old member of the Standing Committee who fought beside the late Chairman Mao in the communist revolution. The army has been resistant to Deng's modernization drive.

Also quitting the Politburo was Deng Yingchao, 81. She is former Premier Chou En-lai's widow, the most revered woman in China, and is known affectionately as "elder sister Deng."

Defense Minister Zhang Aiping, 75; Culture Minister Zhu Muzhi, 69, and navy commander Liu Huaqing, who is in his late 60s, resigned from the Central Committee. It was not clear if they would keep their governments posts.

Thirty members of the 132-seat watchdog Discipline Inspection Commission resigned, as well as 37 delegates to the party Central Advisory Commission, which was created in 1982 to ease elderly functionaries into retirement.

Two-thirds of the evening television news was devoted to the shakeup, listing those resigning and showing them raising hands in an unanimous decision to retire.

Diplomats called it one of the boldest moves by Deng, who has reversed the radical policies of his predecessors and created unprecedented stability since emerging as top leader in 1978.

Before yesterday's resignations, the average age of Politburo members was 74. Party chairman Hu Yaobang, 69, once said "senilty is a problem" in the hierarchy.

The changes left five people on the Politburo Standing Committee, the highest body of party power: Deng; Hu; Premier Zhao, 66; President Li Xiannian, whose age has been given both as 76 and 80, and senior economist Chen Yun, 80.

U.S. trade deficit soars, high debt status reached

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's broadcast measure of foreign trade soared to a near-record $31.8 billion deficit from April through June, pushing the United States into the status of a net debtor for the first time in 71 years, the government said yesterday.

Simply put, that means Americans now owe more to foreigners than foreigners owe to Americans, a position the country has not been in since 1914.

The Commerce Department report said the $31.8 billion deficit in the current account during the second quarter was 4.9 percent higher than the $30.3 billion current account deficit incurred during the first three months of the year.

The current account measures not only trade in merchandise but also in services, mainly investments flowing between the United States and other countries.

The report showed that foreign assets in the United States grew by $39.5 billion during the first six months of the year while U.S. investment abroad was growing by only $3.2 billion.

That would mean a deterioration in the country's investment position of $36.3 billion during the first six months of the year - enough to wipe out the $28.2 billion investment surplus held by the United States as the year began.

By the end of the 1985, economists predict the country could be in debt to foreigners by as much as $100 billion, making the United States the world's largest debtor country, substantially ahead of the previous leaders, Brazil and Mexico.

However, economists are split on how serious a threat this situation poses for the United States.

Inmates saw their way out of Plymouth County Jail

PLYMOUTH (AP) — Five inmates were still at large yesterday after sawing their way out of Plymouth County House of Correction and investigators said they may have had outside help.

escape was planned in advance and a car may have been waiting for them," said Peter Dorr, a special deputy sheriff, after none of the five could be immediately found.

A task force of deputies, police, state troopers and federal marshals spread out on a manhunt yesterday, some with dogs. The jail is centered in a 200-acre farm southwest of downtown Plymouth, near the expressway Massachusetts 3.

"We're following every lead we receive," Dorr told The Enterprise of Brockton. "The search is not concentrated in any one area."

Dorr said there were some indications the five had split up.

Dorr said none of the escapers is known to be armed, but, "They should be considered dangerous, especially if they are still together."

ARTS

"Isle of View" officially opened

By KIM DANFORTH
Collegian Correspondent

Artist George Trakas dedicated his permanent environmental sculpture, Isle of View, "to the students of the University of Massachusetts" in a ceremony last Thursday, applauding students' tendency towards "taking the unconventional route" to success.

Accordingly, Trakas was delighted to see the well-trodden route his bridges had already encouraged. The sculture is part of the University Gallery's current "Ten" exhibit, which marks the gallery's tenth anniversary.

Isle of View is art whose appeal is not purely visual. As 'useful art,' however, it is not lacking aethetic impact. Wood, steel and stone harmonize the sculpture with its island environment.

"Nice bridge, George," commented a passing student. "It's betther than that stone on the other side:" a comment to remind us that art continually raises questions about how we know what we perceive.

In the same useful vein, Trakas expressed hope that his piece will be "the beginning of responsible maintenance of the campus pond." As a first step, he hopes that "a little bit of funding" will be procured to remove the muck from the pond's floor.

Isle of View, like the campus pond, is unfinished and George Trakas, a member of the National Endowment for the Arts and University alumnus, will be seen on site this week.

Chancellor Duffey, Dr. Fredrick Tillis, Director of Fine Arts, and Helaine Posner, Director of the University Gallery also spoke at the dedication. The talk was of binding — binding the humanities and the arts, the University and the community and, of course, binding the east and west banks of the campus pond.

A massive sculpture itself, the Fine Arts Center was designed by Kevin Roche and John Dinkeloo as "The Sun Machine." It is structured to capture sunlight to mirror the buildings many juts and expanses in the pond and pools. The Concert Hall, the largest facility in the Center, seats 2,000 people. The Frank Prentice Rand Theater, Bezanson Recital Hall, University Gallery, and the 22 art studios raised on a 648-foot bridge are also part of the Fine Arts Center.

Can you afford to gamble with the LSAT, GMAT, GRE, or MCAT?

Probably not. Great grades alone may not be enough to impress the grad school of your choice.

Scores play a part. And that's how Stanley H. Kaplan can help.

The Kaplan course teaches test-taking techniques, reviews course subjects, and increases the odds that you'll do the best you can do.

So if you've been out of school for a while and need a refresher, or even if you're fresh out of college, do what over 1 million students have done. Take Kaplan. Why take a chance with your career?

Movie review...
"Eva" is compelling

A MAN LIKE EVA
Starring Eva Mattes

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

A Man Like Eva is a melodramatic tragedy based on Rainer Werner Fassbinder's life and downfall. Fassbinder, who directed The Marriage of Maria Braun and Jailbait, is portrayed as a sadist—with a twist. He's portrayed by a woman, Eva Mattes.

Fassbinder retains a small entourage of technicians, actors and actresses for the sole purpose of psychologically torturing them in order to make films. By exploiting their needs for him (either for love, approval, or fame), he effectively makes them dance to his tune. He is their dictator.

This is not a pleasant film and is not flattering to Fassbinder's memory, yet it has a certain perverse attraction. These absurd characters play out a Shakespearean tragedy, complete with doomed leader, lovers, and even a clown. None of the characters are likable; they unrelentingly tear at one another's psyches, like starving scavengers. Yet they are appealing because they are doomed.

Mattes portrays Fassbinder with the appropriate despair, depression and loneliness, but, as a woman, she gives Fassbinder a certain sexual ambiguity. In the film, Fassbinder prefers men, but has had laisons with women. When we see him having sex with a man, we realize that it isn't actually a homosexual relation, for, as the title reminds us, Fassbinder is actually Eva, a woman. Thus, when he/she goes to bed with a woman, it is a homosexual relationship. This sexual ambiguity permeates the entire film and this role reversal makes us wonder whether Fassbinder considered himself to be a man, a woman, or a little of both.

There are many other interesting questions that this film asks about Fassbinder's life. One is where Fassbinder's life began and his film ended. He behaved like a monster in order to make the actors and actresses into the characters that he wanted on film. Eventually, they get lost in their parts and mentally self-destruct. Fassbinder does nothing but pathetically watch the destruction that he has wrought through the lens of his camera.

Hampshire displays photos

Works by photographer Karl Baden are on display until Sept. 30 at Hampshire College. Baden has superimposed various images on his black-and-white prints.

Baden serves as photography director and curator of the photography gallery at Project Arts Center, Cambridge. He is represented by the Andover Gallery, Andover, and his work is part of the permanent collection at the Museum of Modern Art. New York City.

His photographs are being exhibited in the film and photography building of the Longsworth Arts Village, Monday-Thursday, 10 a.m.-midnight; Friday-Saturday, 1 p.m.-6 p.m.; and Sunday, 6 p.m.-midnight. Admission is free.

Suzuki method to be taught by Performing Arts Division

The Performing Arts Division will be offering a course in the Suzuki method, by which children learn to play musical instruments by ear. Lessons in both violin and piano will be available.

The Suzuki method stresses parental participation in lessons and practice, and use of records and tapes.

For further information, contact the Performing Arts Division at 545-0519. Offices are located in Old Chapel.

The key work on this week's art slate is diversity. There is, as the saying goes, something for everyone, from beginning ballet to international music buffs to art enthusiasts. Check it out:

The big news in music this week is a four-letter word—UB40. Said pop/reggae artists will play the Fine Arts Center (FAC) Thursday night, courtesy of the Union Program Council (UPC). Tickets are $13 for the general public and $11 for UMass students. UPC said 400 tickets were left as of last Saturday night. Stop by the FAC box office or a Datatix outlet to get one . . .

Folks who prefer classical tunes will want to hit the FAC's Benzanson Recital Hall, also Thursday at eight, to give saxophonist Lynn Klock a listen. Klock is also a UMass prof . . .

Friday marks the opening of Amherst College's Two by Two—The Art of Solo Dance series. Tim Wengerd, a former principal dancer with the Martha Graham Dance Company, will perform at 8 p.m. at Kirby Theater. Admission is free . . .

Here at home, the New World Theater, located in Hampden Commons, Southwest, opens its season Thursday with The Dance and the Railroad. Watch the Collegian for a preview.

Dancer Tim Wengerd will perform at Amherst College's Kirby Theater on Friday.

Women's tennis beats Rhode Island to go to 1-1

Minutewomen shake off illness to defeat URI, face NV on Thursday

By LAURA KAUFMANN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team opened its season with a win and a loss, losing to a good Tufts University team 7-2 before beating Rhode Island 5-4.

The Minutewomen, playing at Rhode Island on Saturday, had to contend with the illness of their two top singles players and the need to forfeit two matches before even taking to the courts. Once the teams started playing however, UMass proved to be the better two the two New England rivals.

In singles action, senior Diana Biagioli (playing up from her usual position due to the illnesses) was a 6-3, 7-5 winner in the number one position for her second straight victory of the young season.

Biagioli, who won the only singles match in the earlier meeting in Medford against Tufts, wasn't the only singles winner. Jill Nesgos and Michelle Cope, a pair of seniors, were easy straight set winners at the number two and five spots.

In doubles action, sophomore Debbie Ginn and senior Lisa Corbett were easy straight set victors in the first position while freshman twins Marybeth and Ann-Marie Polinsky won a close three set doubles match in the second doubles position.

Marybeth and Ann-Marie, doubles partners throughout high school, gave the Minutewomen good depth at the doubles spots. UMass also returns several players that did not play last season, giving the Minutewomen a lot of confidence going into the remaining 10 matches on their schedule.

On Thursday, the women play Northeastern University in their home opener at the NOPE (Totman) Courts behind Sylvan.

Northeastern should give the women a good match, but UMass is expected to come away with a victory. The match is scheduled for a 3:30 p.m. start.

The men's tennis team will face New Hampshire in Durham on Wednesday at 3 p.m. The men opened on Saturday, beating Rhode Island at Boyden.

The Minutemen will also play at Boston University on Saturday and at Connecticut next Tuesday. The only remaining home match of the season will be on Homecoming weekend (October 5) when UMass will play Vermont, on Boyden Courts at 1 p.m.

★ Volleyball cruises in tournament

The next victim for UMass was Vermont. The Minutewomen cruised through games one and two behind the hitting of Ringrose and Gladkowska and the usual domination on the serve as the spikers pasted the Catamounts 15-2, 15-7. The spikers then rudely disposed of Hartford 15-9, 15-2 to gain a spot in the finals against ECSU.

UMass jumped all over ECSU in the early going, cruising out to a 9-0 lead and forcing ECSU to exhaust their second time out of the game. ECSU mounted a comeback to close to within 11-5. But UMass, anchored by the serving of Maher, Ringrose, and Guiliotis, halted the rally and took game one 15-5.

The spikers executed more of the same tough serving and hitting in game two as Ringrose, Gladkowska, and Meehan led the charge.

UMass will next face the University of Lowell tonight at Lowell.

Undefeated field hockey hosts BC

Minutewomen, 2-0, start big homestand

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team, undefeated during its young season thus far, will be looking to add Boston College to its list of victims today.

The Minutewomen, 2-0, host the Eagles at NOPE Field at 3 p.m. this afternoon. Coming off of a 5-0 rout of Pacific, UMass should have little trouble against a BC team it has traditionally done well against.

UMass has also beaten Virginia 2-1 this year. Boston College is 2-1, beating James Madison and Yale (2-0 this past Saturday). Northwestern is the only team to defeat BC, 3-1.

The Eagles come into UMass led by forward Laurie Kelser. She has scored three goals for BC this season. BC coach Charlene Morett is expected to go with Kathy O'Brien in the nets today.

UMass, in its offensive explosion against Pacific, showed a balanced offense and solid defense. The Minutewomen boast a quicker team than the one that beat the Eagles 4-0 in Boston last season.

Forward Lisa Griswold, a transfer from Northwestern, scored a pair of goals against Pacific for UMass on Saturday. Griswold's quickness around the net and the return of last season's leading scorer, sophomore forward Tonia Kennedy, give UM coach Pam Hixon a pair of dangerous offensive weapons.

Kennedy had a single goal against Pacific. Erin Caniff, a junior forward and senior defender Megan Donnelly also scored. Lil Hultin, a sophomore defender, and Judy Morgan, a senior forward, picked up assists against Pacific.

On defense, Donnelly (an academic all-american and member of the United States national team) leads a tough unit that has allowed only one goal in two games. The goaltender for the BC game will either be senior Kathy Rowe or sophomore Lynn Carlson. Both have played this season. Rowe played against Virginia with Carlson getting in the Pacific game.

Hixon had not named a goalie as of yesterday, choosing to wait until this morning before announcing her decision.

The Eagles are an up-and-coming team that would dearly love to knock off the nationally-ranked Minutewomen. UMass, starting with BC, will play three straight home games.

"We're a good team and recognized as such," Hixon said before the season. "That means that everybody will be gunning for us. We can't afford to let down against anybody because we'll find ourselves in a tough position. If we keep up our intensity, we will do very well. I think we can maintain our level of play."

UM volleyball flawless in taking tourney

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

There is a saying that is probably overused in the world of sports that says: "The first one is always the sweetest." The University of Massachusetts volleyball team would be quick to agree with that statement as the Minutewomen dominated a sixteen team field on their way to their first ever UMass Invitational Volleyball Tournament championship.

The spikers destroyed an overmatched Eastern Connecticut State squad 15-5, 15-7 in the championship game on Saturday. Other UMass victims included Smith College, Keene State University, the University of Vermont, and the University of Hartford. The spikers victory over ECSU raised their season record to an unblemished 6-0 mark. UMass has yet to drop a game this season.

"We accomplished everything we wanted to accomplish," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "I thought we were very consistent and composed in tight situations. That, for a first weekend, was a very nice thing to see."

There was really only one very tight situation for the spikers throughout the tourney. That came in game two against Smith, after UMass had handed the Northampton school a 15-1 drubbing in game one. At one point, Smith led game two 13-9 and were two points from forcing a third and decisive game. But freshman hitter Barbara Meehan nailed a kill for an important UMass side out. A Smith miscue and an Ann Ringrose kill brought UMass to within one at 13-12. Meehan then executed a near perfect block to knot the score at 13-13.

Senior hitter Sally Maher gave UMass a 14-13 lead on a service ace. Smith tied the score again at 14-14 before freshman setter Juliet Primer served out the game, 16-14.

"I think our experienced players we have on the court this year are showing through in tight situations like the one we faced against Smith," said Sortino.

The remainder of the road to the championship proved to be a cakewalk for the Minutewomen as the spikers allowed no more than nine points in a game the rest of the way. The key to this was the always potent serving game. UMass served tough consistently throughout the tourney not allowing opponents to get into an offensive flow.

"I told these kids a long time ago that while we're still working on basics we needed to score points off our serve. It's always held us well," said Sortino. "It helps in certain situations because you always know you're going to get points off the serve either way."

UMass used a variety of weapons in their second pool play victory over Keene State. The spikers got out to a quick start in game one, taking a 6-0 lead behind the serving of sophomore middle gitter Marcy Guiliotis. Junior hitter Violetta Gladkowska and sophomore defensive specialist Debbie Cole also contributed to the UMass serving clinic as Cole served the spikers to a 15-3 victory.

UMass fell behind early in game two 2-0, before a Guiliotis kill tied the score at 2-2. Again, serving was the key weapon as the spiker lead swelled to 9-2. Meehan put down three beautiful dinks to increase the lead to 12-2 before the freshman hitter ended the match with two impressive kills. UMass won the game 15-3.

"I thought we had good attack selection and our attack coverage and calling of offensive shots was very heads up," said Sortino. "I thought we were really seeing the defense across the net and distributing the ball very well."

Minutemen show vast improvement, Holy Cross awaits

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

RICHMOND - The University of Massachusetts came close to spoiling the University of Richmond's home opener on Saturday.

Thanks to a halfback option pass and several UMass mistakes in the second half, the Spiders escaped with a 19-14 victory.

"I tried to tell everybody that Massachusetts was not the same team we played a year ago," said Richmond coach Dal Shealy. "Coach (Bob) Stull has done a super job with his personnel and you can't even begin to evaluate the improvement they made over a year ago."

Shealy was right on target. The Minutemen have made great strides from 1984. Losing to Richmond by only five points was no fluke, given a few breaks the Minutemen could have won. Richmond, maybe the best Division 1-AA team in the nation, had to resort to trick plays to get past UMass.

Holy Cross, 1-0 with a victory over Colgate, comes into Alumni Stadium on Saturday (1:30 p.m.) with a three game winning streak over UMass. The Cross was an easy 35-7 winner last season in Worcester and is one of the teams on the UMass payback list.

"We feel we owe them," senior linebacker Steve Silva said. "None of us have ever beaten them and we don't want to lose at home. I think we realize now that if we play together and play with intensity, we're capable of beating anyone."

Minuteman Mutterings: Among the things UMass will be working on this week, according to Stull, are special teams and passing. Tailback George Barnwell, who missed the Richmond game with a bruised shoulder, is expected back for Holy Cross. The Dave Palazzi to Tom Cioppa 45-yard touchdown pass was the second reception of the receivers career. How tough was the UMass defense? In the first half, Richmond had only 47 yards rushing . . . Freshman Dimitri Yavis averaged over 41 yards a punt.

Senate votes tonight on new SGA constitution

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

At tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, Speaker John Ruddock will make a motion to adopt the SGA Constitution, which if passed, will be the first ever held by the association.

If the motion is approved, review of the document will be tabled for four weeks, with four of seven area governments having to approve the constitution in that period. Once approved by the areas, the document will have to be approved by the full senate.

"It's going to be one of the most important documents reviewed by the senate," Ruddock said. "It's one of the primary tools of empowerment that undergraduates have."

The proposed constitution, a revision of the March 5, 1984 document, will then be reviewed by the University Board of Trustees.

About opposition the senate may face from the trustees, Ruddock said, "As with any issue of value, there is some hesitation on the part of some to ensure that their own rights are not in anyway encroached upon."

Prior constitutions have not passed, Ruddock said, because there existed "various conflicts on the part of students, community, campus administrators and the trustees on areas that have needed to be worked out." Specifically, he said, it was when it came to students expressing themselves on policies affecting their individual rights.

Ruddock said he views the proposed constitution as very valuable in clarifying the relationship between the SGA and the trustees.

The document, Ruddock said, "is one which should be interpreted broadly, so as not to limit powers of students, house councils, area governments or the senate as a whole."

Also scheduled tonight is a motion that the senate reaffirm its opposition to the proposed elimination of seven sports teams, sponsored by Dani Burgess, co-president of the SGA.

The seven teams were cut out of the athletic budget by the trustees in May 1984, but extended for two years " for a period not to exceed the 1986 season." The move was made to make the major sports, such as football and basketball, more competitive.

"Part of the University strength is in its diversity," Burgess said. "Granted, basketball and foothall are fine sports, but to single out those sports just seems like it's ignoring the will of students."

Since last week's meeting adjourned early, old business, including making the Student Coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) a non-voting member of the senate's coordinating committee, will be proposed.

Finally, in new business, the senate will move to propose that Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey suspend all classes this Friday as part of "Freedom Friday" activities. The purpose of suspending classes is to show solidarity with people struggling for their freedom and human rights in South Africa.

Doctor discusses AIDS publicity

By CAROLYN PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

Society has to keep AIDS in perspective, a health official said last night in a lecture on the public concerns of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome at Hampshire College.

"During the heightening of public awareness of AIDS, we have lost the sense of the size of the problem," Dr. Michael Gross, a former Hampshire Collegeprofessor, said.

Many diseases have posed, and still pose, just as serious a threat to our society, he said. Hepatitis, for example, inflicts a comparable fraction of the population, is as expensive to treat, and is just as intractable as AIDS. Hepatitis, to a degree, also holds the same groups of people at risk and for equally unknown reasons, Gross said.

The question of whether or not children who have contracted AIDS should be allowed to attend public schools has received a lots of public attention, he said. Research has shown that in the families of these children, siblings have not shown signs of having been exposed. Gross said he believes that these results can be extended to include the school environment.

Another question that has concerned the public has been the risk factor of the heterosexual population in contracting the disease. Gross said it is more difficult for women to give the disease to men than vice versa. He also said that the use of spermicides may kill the virus that causes AIDS.

Many persons, such as the Rev. Jerry Falwell, have considered AIDS a blessing, Gross said. They say that it is God's way of killing gays. To this Gross say, "then lesbians must be God's chosen people" since they are at the lowest risk of sexually communicating AIDS.

Selectmen rearrange town voting precincts

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen Monday voted unanimously to approve a town redistricting proposal which would place University of Massachusetts dormitory residents into five separate voting precincts.

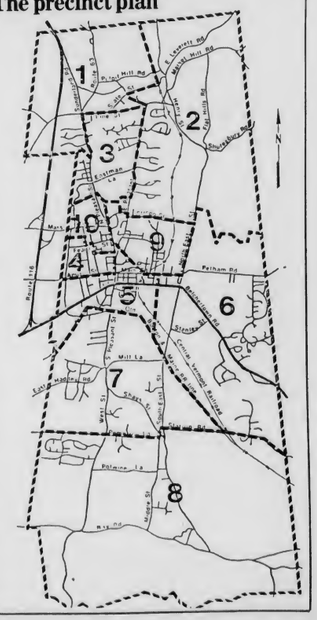
Because of a new requirement that the state census include about 11,300 UMass students living in dormitories as residents of the town, many voting precincts were found to exceed the state limit of 4,000 residents, Selectman Allen Torrey said. The new plan divides Amherst into 10 voting precincts instead of eight which enables each precinct to comply with the state law.

The final proposal, which was revealed last week by redistricting subcommittee members Torrey and Selectman Richard Minear, cuts the Southwest Residential Area in half.

"In Amherst, where you have tremendous populations in small areas, we get some very small precincts," Torrey said. "It's really an uneven result."

The subcommittee had been working since July.

"You don't have complete freedom of action, the precincts can't vary in size by more than 10 percent," Torrey said.



Residents who opposed the plan, because it divides a historic neighborhood near Pine Street, addressed the board before it made a final decision to accept the plan. Minear said the plan might violate a state guideline and urged against it because of the additional time it would take if the state rejected it.

The board also voted unanimously to approve the action of Town Manager Barry Del Casthilo in renewing a transit agreement between UMass and the town.

Under the agreement, UMass acts as a carrier for the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority in the Town of Amherst. Nine transit routes within Amherst are expected to encompass 405,360 traveled miles during fiscal year 1986.

The agreement is "a very important part" of the daily operation of Amherst, board Chairwoman Barbara Griffith said.

South Africans oppose recent school closings

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—Police moved in with tear gas and rubber bullets yesterday to put down efforst by thousands of mixed race students and their teachers to open schools closed by the government near Cape Town.

Meanwhile, black students boycotted classes near Johannesburg and Pretoria.

Police used rubber bullets and tear gas against students, parents and teachers who massed near schools in the Cape, where the government closed 464 mixed-race schools indefinitely on Sept. 6 after rioting. About 360,000 youngsters had been attending the schools.

Witnesses said scores of arrests were made as crowds massed outside locked-up schools. They said that at times crowds outside locked schoolyard gates refused to move to let police patrols out of the yard.

The demonstrators complained that closing the institutions hurt students who hadn't rioted.

The white-minority government contends the schools provided meeting grounds for rioters.

Near Johannesburg and Pretoria, authorities for 19 months have been trying to force black youngsters to attend school.

Students there began boycotting classes in early 1984, complaining about inferior education. Now they are staying away to protest the presence of the army and police in black townships, and the state of emergency that imprisoned hundreds of students without charge.

President P.W. Botha says security forces are needed in the townships to quell intimidation by radicals, rioting and general lawlessness.

Reagan goes on television tonight

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Reagan brushed up on issues ranging from international tradef to expectations for his summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev as he prepared yesterday for his first formal news conference in three months.

The major televison and radio networks planned to broadcast the half-hour session from the East Room of the White House beginning at 8 p.m. EDT.

Although he kept most of his afternoon free to prepare for the news conference, Reagan scheduled largely ceremonial events to receive the credentials of new ambassadors and a report from the commission planning clelebrations for the bicentennial of the Constitution.

Business executive David Packard and his Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management came in to talk to Reagan about their study of defense contracting practices, and congressional leaders scheduled a session with the president to talk about the farm bill pending on Capitol Hill.

The question-and-answer session with reporters was to be the 31st White House news conference of Reagan's presidency and the fourth since he was sworn to a second term last January.

Harvard protesters' fate undecided

CAMBRIDGE (AP)—About half the 90 Harvard Law School students who face possible disciplinary action stemming from a protest last spring asked the law school faculty yesterday to monitor proceedings against political activists.

The request came after the school's Administrative Board, which is responsible for disciplining students, asked the protesters in a letter last June to detail their involvement in an April 24 rally and sit-in to oppose Harvard's investment in companies doing business in South Africa.

Doug Hagerman, a third-year law student, said the students considered the board's request an effort to discourage political activism on campus. Many have already told the board they will not comply, he said.

But Professor Frank E.A. Sander, chairman of the board, said board members were simply trying to determine what involvement, if any, the students had in the protest.

"Certainly in the old days when I went here, if the school had said 'what is the extent of your involvement," it would have been appropriate to say what your involvement ws," he said. "Because we don't regard this as a court, we regard this as a community."

The studetns are among 119 who signed a petition last May in support of 10 fellow law students who occupied a campus adminstrative building for eight hours.

Anti-apartheid suit called for PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—The nation's governors are being urged by Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt to denounce apartheid in South Africa and to join him in signing a petition supporting the Free South Africa Movement.

In a letter to the 49 other governors, Babbitt also chastised the Reagan administration for showing "indifference" toward South Africa's black majority.

Jim West, Babbitt's news secretary, said the letter was prompted by an advertisement in Sunday's New York Times and other newspapers.

"Most Americans, including citizens of my state, are troubled by apartheid," Babbitt said. "Strong action by the United States can bring about change in South Africa. We must show the entire world that we want change.

Duarte sacks trip to B.U.

BOSTON (AP)—Jose Napoleon Duarte, president of El Salvador, has postponed a planned visit to Boston University because of the kidnapping of his daughter, a university spokesman said Tuesday.

Spokesman Bob O'Rouke said no new date had been set for the Duarte visit.

Duarte was scheduled to visit the university Thursday, Friday and Saturday to inaugurate the school's World Leaders Forum. He was to receive an honorary degree Friday and tospeak at a special convocation.

Duarte's daughter, Inez Guadalupe Duarte Duran, 34, was kidnapped last Tuesday as she was parking her car at Nueva San Salvador University. Two of her bodyguards were killed in the incident.

Professor destroys myth of kids being riveted to the T.V. set

Children found to be active while watching

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

A child sitting mesmerized by a television set and passively absorbing the content shown is a common image, but it is a fallacy, says a University of Massachusetts psychology professor.

Daniel Anderson has been reseraching the patterns of television viewing among children since 1973 and has discovered that common beliefs of children's viewing habits are often misinformed.

"While there was no research in the area, there were lots of people holding opinions of passive children, sitting and staring," Anderson said.

Anderson's research, funded primarily by the National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Mental Health, consists of observing hundreds of children watching television, either in the laboratory or in a home situation.

With television comes concerns for the medium itself and of the content conveyed, he said. His interests are aimed at discovering how children really watch television, their ability to make mental inferences and what sort of content captures and loses the child's attention.

Children do not just sit and absorb the material. Certain factors are important to maintaining their interest, such as comprehensibility of the material, he said.

"If children don't understand, they will automatically stop paying attention," he said. "As children get older, other factors such as interests influence viewing. Boys will stereotypically like action, assertions of power, and girls like family-oriented, glamour shows," he said.

"We discovered that children do numerous other activities while the T.V. is on, looking away from the screen about 15o times an hour," he said.

Anderson produced a tape for the Children's Television Workshop and recorded his results. An interesting observation, he said, was that when mothers recalled how much the children were actually watching the screen, they overestimated considerably.

"There were a lot of assumption...children sitting passively, using no mental activity and absorbing the content on the screen. But by really watching them, the kids told us differently," he said.

To test if children can make inferences without explicit explanations Anderson used short clips showing situations without all the details, which required the child to make inferences. "The overwhelming results showed that kids are able to make connections, meaning that they are mentally active while watching television, he said.

In the fall, Anderson will begin research on college students' memory of television programs. "There is very little work done on adult television viewing," he said.

Fair shows women what groups exist

Interested women will have a chance to make "an informed decision" about joining a women's group when 10 such groups meet at 4 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The Women's Referral Fair, sponsored by the Women's Leadership Project, was set up to halt a trend that group recruiters have noticed recently. Women would attend introductory meetings held by the different groups only be become frustrated and lose interest altogether.

"The idea behind the fair is to have an event where all the groups come together and do recruitment," Lisa Trocki, coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project, said.

"Networking" is another concern, she said. "UMass is a big campus with few women's gsroups and because we're not in contact, we tend to duplicate services. The fair will give us a chance to get to know women from other groups."

Groups on hand will include the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, the Everywomen's Center and the Lesbian Union.

In the first 30 minutes, literature will be displayed and guests will be free to move around and ask questions. Later, a representative from each group will give a brief description of its objectives and services. Refreshments will be served and the fair is free of charge.

GUITAR MAN—Pete Sutton, in CASIAC at UMass, plays a few chords Monday night by Massachusetts Avenue in Amherst.

Crossing pedestrians cause 3-car accident

The driver of a 1975 Ford caused a three car accident Monday when he stopped suddenly to allow pedestrians to cross Massachusetts Avenue, University police said.

The pedestrians did not use the crosswalks or give any warning they were crossing the street, police said. The driver of the Ford stopped quickly and the driver of a 1976 Dodge hit him in the rear causing $500 damage. A 1979 Buick, which received over $1,000 in damages, then hit the Dodge in the rear. There were no injuries or citations issued, police said.

In other police reports:

A man was assaulted at 3:47 p.m. Monday while trying to help a woman in a car. The man was assisting her when he was assaulted by another driver who had been threatening her. The man was hit in the face and neck and refused treatment, police said.

A 1971 chevrolet Impala valued at $1,800 was reported stolen from P lot 22 Monday morning, Police said.

A Walkman cassette radio, valued at $101, was stolen from a room on the 13th floor of John Quincy Adams dormitory Friday. It was not known if the door was locked, police said.

Peace program helps faculty encorporate war issues

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

Concerns about world security and the threat of nuclear war have come to the five colleges, embodied in the Program on Peace and World Security Studies.

The program, begun in 1984, and funded by a grant from the Ford Foundation, attempts to focus on various problems that threaten world peace.

"The program is aimed at the five college faculty to enrich their interests and encourage them to include more of these issues in their teaching," said Michael Klare, director of the program.

The program concentrates on issues such as U.S.-Soviet relations, arms countrol, preventing nuclear war, and the role of the Third World in global conflicts, he said. "The attempt is to present a wide variety of views and department disciplines on these complex subjects."

The program is composed of Klare, his assistant John Sanbomatsu, and a steering committee composed of three professors from each of the five colleges.

The professors come from varying disciplines so that different ideologies can she dlight on different aspects of the same problem, Klare said.

Jerome King and Nicholas Xenos, both from the political science department, and George Levinger from the psychology department represent UMass. "We're trying to help develop competence in teaching in international peache and aworld security, making these issues a legitimate faculty concern," Levinger said.

By giving the faculty intellectual stimulation, the members hope to give them incentive to integrate this material into their own teaching.

Klare, who first received a bachelors and masters degree in Art History at Columbia University, became involved in the issue of world peace during the period of the anti-Vietnam War demonstrations. He then received a doctorate in International Relations and has been involved in these issues ever since, he said.

"The ultimate goal is world peace. Nobody has "the" answer to the road to peace, so we're welcome to any new ideas," Klare said.

Various seminars and programs are an important part of the committee's attempt to inform the faculty, and ultimately the students. A year long lecture series will begin on Oct. 9 incorporating all aspects of the issues, Klare said.

Phi Mu sisters lose their house, live off campus

By PETER DELANI
Collegian Correspondent

Thirteen women belonging to the national chapter of Phi Mu at the University of Massachusetts are living off-campus this semester because they were unable to renew a contract on their North Pleasant Street house rented from the Lamda Delta Phi corporation.

The women are currently living in the Brittany Manor apartments in South Amherst and the house has been sold to another Greek organization.

"These living arrangements are strictly on an interim basis," said Robert White, director of the Office of Greek Affairs.

"It was unfortunate to lose the house, but we're all very happy to be able to stay together."

—Phi Mu sister Susan Werschler

White said negotiations, "became increasingly difficult and hectic as the summer drew to a close." The National Chartering Association of Phi Mu was involved in contractual negotiations throughout the summer.

Phi Mu has been renting the house on North Pleasant Street from Lamda Delta Phi since 1981.

"We weren't informed that we didn't have a house until August 26, nine days prior to the start of school," Susan Werschler, president of the sorority, said.

The contract problems stemmed from a monetarial disagreement, White said. Phi Mu sought to purchase the property from Lamda Delta Phi but was unable to pay the price the corporation was asking. With Phi Mu out of the negotiations, Lamda Delta Phi began negotiations with Alpha Tao Gamma and sold it to that Stockbridge fraternity.

After discovering that Greek Affairs could not temporarily house the sorority sisters in other Greek houses, the women settled in Brittany Manor. Thirteen sorority sisters and three other women rented out an entire floor of an apartment complex.

"It was unfortunate to lose the house, but we're all very happy to be able to stay together," Werschler said.

"I think it is even more positive than before because the whole situation has brought us all closer together," said Tara Berkowsky, vice president of Phi Mu.

The women individually took out leases for the apartments but are still trying to function together as a sorority. Rush pledging and other activities are being held at another Greek house, Phi Kappa Alpha on North Pleasant Street.

"Diagnosed cases have been dobling every five to nine months with no evidence of any decline in this rate," he said. However the long period in which it takes for AIDS to appear in the victim, an average of five years, will delay the fallying of this rate, he said.

"Preventative measures taken so far will be reflected in falling rates within the next few years," according to an informational pamphlet handed out at the lecture.

Groups at highest risk of contracting and communicating AIDS are homosexuals, hemophiliacs, recipients of blood transfusions and users of injected drugs, Gross said. The number of persons in these groups who have been exposed to the virus, according to tests measuring the level of antibiotics of the virus in the blood, are extremely high. Ninety percent of all hemophiliacs, 50 percent of injected drug users, and 70 percent of gay and bisexual men have been exposed, Gross said.

"The actual clinical cases of AIDS have been significantly lower" than the percentages of exposure. For example 10 percent of hemophiliacs who have been exposed actually contracted the disease.

Gross said that while some of the reasons that these groups are especially at risk are known, such as the sharing of needles of injected drug users, most reasons are not known. Since these people are transmitting the disease unconsciously, "they should not be blamed or condemned by the public," he said.

Criticisms of Soviet health

Stephen Erickson

Looking at Soviet totalitarianism as a political system gives us a rather generic theoretical view. Totalitarianism has very real human effects, however, and by looking at some real examples of Soviet oppression we can understand its implications better. As noted in last week's column, the Soviet Union was one of many nations to sign the Helsinki Accords, which supposedly guaranteed basic human rights for the peoples of that nation.

As one might imagine, human rights are a difficult thing to monitor in a society as closed as that of the Soviet Union. To facilitate compliance with the Helsinki Final Act, 75 courageous men and women volunteered to monitor and report abuses from various regions within the Soviet Union. These jpeople did not plot the overthrow of the Soviet government, nor did they engage in what would be considered normal political activity in the West. They merely received and imparted information pertaining to human rights, a right in and of itself guaranteed under the Helsinki Final Act. Three of these people have died of medical neglect or maltreatment in Soviet labor camps, 15 have been allowed or forced to emigrate, and most of the remainder have been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment and internal exile.

A few years ago, two peace groups attempted to organize within the Soviet Union, one being the Baltic Nuclear Free Zone and the other The Group to Establish Trust Between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Admittedly these groups were inspired by European and American peace movements, but despite Soviet overt and covert support for such Western movements, those within the Soviet borders faced suppression and persecution. Members of these groups have been subject to detentions, interrogations, searches, beatings, arrests and dismissal from work. The leaders of these groups are presently serving prison sentences in Siberia.

Alexi Nikitin was a coal miner in the Ukrainian city of Donetsk. Well-liked and respected by his co-workers, he brought their grievances of higher wages and safer working conditions to the appropriate Soviet authorities. Despite persistent efforts, Nikitin's pleas were rejected. In time a mine accident occurred, killing and injuring several miners, but still no changes were made in the working conditions. In desperation, Nikitin invited a few Washington Post reporters to his home to discuss the problems of Soviet coal miners. Days after the journalists left, Nikitin was incarcerated in the local psychiatric hospital and eventually transferred to a special psychiatric hospital in a remote region near the Afghan border, where he remains today.

In the Soviet Union, psychiatric facilities are used for political purposes, and usually more resemble prisons than hospitals. The Soviet Union bills itself as the near perfect society and worker's paradise, so it is convenient for the authorities to diagnose anyone who does not hold this view as being insane. As Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights Charles Fairbanks has stated, "The very notion that mental health can be identified with holding specific political opinions belongs to the political cultrue of totalitarianism."

Within these institutions inmates are subject to the cruelest of treatment. Sadistic and sometimes fatal beatings occur. The injection of drugs to induce pain is common, including insulin shock therapy which causes hypoglycemic comas. Another punishment is the "wet pack" in which an inmate is wrapped in strips of wet sheeting which tightens as it dries, causing great agony. Only when one renounces political or religious views does the pain stop. Only then is one "cured."

Music for profit not people

Peter Wissoker

In the aftermath of last week's Lone Justice show and all of its corporate trimmings, it seems worthwhile to reconsider the nature of rock-and-roll and what we, as the primary consumers of the medium, should ask from the people who present it.

Two days before Lone Justice even arrived here on campus we were given the chance to witness the spectacle of the corporate sponsors of the event in the name of the Rolling Stone Music Exposition. This "exposition" actually had very little to do with music but instead cluttered the Cape Cod Lounge with the advertisements and promotions of about ten corporations which were trying to reach the youth market, which is to say, us, in order to sell products.

The connection of industry/advertising is something which started in the 1960's with the Jefferson Airplane's ads for Levi's and Quicksilver's ad for Camero's. But as the image of the musicians became less reputable, the desire to be connected with those terrible people, who did not have a large source of income, buying power , or whatever, lessened. But now, as the money came back to people of our age group and our material desires as a group increases, these stigmas are slowly disappearing.

The first big tour to reflect this new trend was the 1981 Rolling Stones tour which was sponsored by Jovan. Soon to follow were other large sponsored tours by Rod Stewart and the Who. And the latest in this trend seems to be this Lone Justice tour (the db's were booked separately). What's more, most of the bands that last year were booked into the Blue Wall (a bar) were sponsored by beer companies (purveyors of beer, get it?).

The problem here is not UPC's, they wanted to book Lone Justice before they knew about this promotion stuff. Instead, the problem is ours, because as consumers of music we have to decide whether we want the music we listen to be bastardized into a selling vehicle for Bose, Maxell, and Pierre Cardin (among others). The drawing appeal of a concert is the music, not the chance to win a new car. No one on campus really benifited from the promotion of these products. UPC received little reward for their services, and had to provide sound and lighting equipment.

One wonders how Lone Justice was chosen to be the first group to represent the music end of this music expo. As soon as the concert started, it became clear that lead singer Maria McKee looks and sound somewhat like another blond haired singer who has made it big, Madonna. So what we end up with is a corperate sponsorship of a potential future corperate asset in the tradition of another mass marketed product. This is rock music?

The truth is that groups which are more likely to sell out to corporate sponsors are the ones who most likely are going to get more publicity/exposure and therefore more airplay in place of someone who is more interesting but less acceptable to the people who want to make money from our market.

The conclusion that can be drawn from all this it that we have to decide what we want to consume and when. We are going to be barraged, as we already are, with a constant stream of advertising to push us to accept what is offered as the only alternative. It is up to us to be discerning consumers and not promote this type of manipulation, which although directed towards us, we should not tolerate.

To this end, I suggest listening (at least occasionally) to the alternative stations in the area like WMUA, WAMH, and WSYL. Also, turn off your MTV and don't be seduced by the offer of a free jacket or a new car to get you to accept music which you would otherwise ignore or laugh at.

Make a difference with SGA

To all those first semester students and upper classmen who have just started to wonder where their dollars go every semester when they are compelled to pay the Student Activities Fee, I would like to give you a very short overview of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association.

At its best, the UMass SGA lobbies the State House and Washington for more financial aid while fighting to keep your tuition low. It produces the Course and Teachers Evaluation Guide to give you some idea of the good and not so good teachers at the University. The SGA runs a legal services office that offers a full range of legal services to the undergraduate and graduate community. It funds a radio station, concerts, a video center, an off-campus housing office and a free bus service. It supervises and gives technical assistance and resources to dormitories, student committed and operated businesses, and numerous other cultural and social awareness organizations that, very simply put, try to make UMass a beter place to live. Its potential is as boundless as the imaginations of the thousands of students that have been involved with it over the last fifty years.

As its worst, however, it is a group of screaming egotists whose only concern is how to maintain and expand their own personal quests for power while destroying their opponents. At its worst, the SGA is a handful of people who are so convinced that their views are right , and that others' views are wrong, that they refuse to listen or compromise on any issue, however trivial or petty the issue may be. At its very worst, it is the best argument for autocracy that I have ever witnessed.

The central event that will decide which of these extremes will exist will occur within the next few weeks. The fall senate elections will elect the people chiefly responsible for spending the $1.8 million that each of us pay into the Student Activities Fee each year. Any undergraduate who has paid this fee may become a senator. There are, on average, two senators per dormitory—some have more, others less. The Greek Area and Commuter students each get senators according to the number of students living within their different constituencies.

It is not all that difficult to be a senator. Nomination papers are available in Room 420 of the Student Union Building in the Senate Office, right above the Mini-Store up the stairs and to your right. All it takes is twenty signatures from students who live within the constituencies you wish to represent. The nomination period ends Sept.24 at noon and the election will be held on Sept. 30 and Oct.1.

If you have any questions call 545-0341 and ask anyone in the office for more information. The Senate meets once a week on Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center. Just ask Campus Center Information Desk for the place. If you have the time and the needed patience, then I strongly urge you to join. Within the SGA it has always been the individual student with the common sense and willingness to work that has made the University community a better place to live. The chance is yours.

John Crowley is the chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee and the election coordinator for the fall Senate Elections.

SGA figures misunderstood

The article about women in the senate (Sept. 10) has caused much confusion. I would like to clarify a few things. The story was based on an editorial written by me for the purpose of recruitment, a caucus brochure, and a brief telephone interview. The original editorial stated, "once the percentage of women in the senate was about 50%. Today it is hovering around 25%. The percentage of women who call themselves feminists and work to organized the women in the senate is less than half that number," (i.e. 12 percent).

The reason for the original editorial was to encourage women to join the senate and encourage undergraduate and graduate women, as well as faculty and staff, to support and use the Women's Caucus in anyway they can.

I was also interested in letting women already involved in the senate know that a major objective of the caucus is to be accessible to all women no matter what their political background might be. The purpose of the caucus if for women to support each other, not exclude each other.

The reporter who wrote the story is accurate and professional, and I respect her work. Perhaps people shouldn't jump so quickly to criticized the Collegian and its staff. We all have bad days.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Split among whites in government only ray of hope in apartheid struggle

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Even though we hear a lot about South Africa being an apartheid regime, there are quite a number of people who don't know what apartheid is.

Apartheid is a system that legally affords people political rights based on the color of their skin. For black South Africans under that regime it means several things: A minority of 5 million whites control the social, political, and economic functions of South Africa; 24 million blacks who make up 72 percent of the population have no citizenship or civil rights; they are allowed to live on 13 percent of the land called Bantustans which the least desirable land to live on; their average monthly earnings are $250 compared to the $1136 monthly earnings of whites; and the educational aid they receive per year of $145 is insignificant compared to $1199 which white students receive.

These were just some of the facts that were brought up Monday evening at a discussion titled: "What Is Apartheid?" held at Amherst College.

Themba Mandikane, a student from South Africa who attends Amherst College, discussed what it is like to live and work there.

"You must show a pass whenever you go into or leave the city. If you don't have it or forget it, you run the risk of going to prison," Mandikane said.

"When you find a job, you must sign a contract with the employer for nine or 10 months which says that you can't leave to look for another job during that time," he said.

He also said that public education in South Africa is segregated. "Blacks must attend segregated schools. The only way they can attend a white university is to prove that what they want isn't available at a black university."

Another student, Jabu Maphalala, also from South Africa, discussed his country's politics. "In the late 1950s, Nelson Mandela formed the African National Congress Youth League which was more militant than the African National Congress (ANC). He was jailed in 1962 because he believed in changing policy violently. He didn't want to kill people, he wanted to blow-up military installations. However, because the police refused to dismantle a bomb which they were informed had been planted, the bomb exploded, killing a police officer. He was arrested because he was the head of the ANC and he believed in violence.

Since his arrest 25 years ago, the government has offered Mandela his freedom many times on the condition that he denounce violence. "To me, if he denounces violence, he will split the ANC and the country," Maphalala said.

Maphalala commented that the Reagan administration is sending over a steady stream of conservative reporters to interview Mandela in the hopes that he will say something communistic. "Wherever the help we have comes from is fine. We came to the United States first but was turned down."

Last Tuesday, President Reagan signed an executive order putting a ban on these things:

- Bank loans to South African government except to finance educational, housing or health facilities open to all races.
- Computer sales to any agency of the South African government involved in the enforcement of apartheid.
- Nuclear cooperation with South Africa, including exports of technology or services until and unless it signs the nuclear nonproliferation treaty.
- Export marketing assistance to US firms operating in South Africa and employing 25 or more that do not adhere to the Sullivan Code of Conduct.

"There are those in the South African government who want to keep this archaic, brutal, racist government the way it is and will do anything to make sure it stays that way."

"These so-called sanctions that Reagan has imposed on our country are not helping my people in the least and I believe are aimed at splitting the support for heavier sanctions," Maphalala said.

According to Professor Jan Dizard, professor of sociology at Amherst College, "Emerging among the white elitists in the government is a growing split which is the only ray of hope in a long struggle that neither side can win."

"The leadership is divided. There are those in the South African government who want to keep this archaic, brutal, and racist government the way it is and will do anything to make sure that it stays that way. A higher number in the government are fed up and understand that time is running out and that this situation will blow up," Dizard said.

This small minority in the government is putting pressure on the Botha regime for reforms. Even though a small number are pressing for reforms, they are a very powerful and influential number.

Dizard suggests that the United States keep pressure on government and business to invoke a wedge in the South African government and to divest as soon as possible. "Only then will white rule sufficiently weaken. It will give symbolic support to black South Africans and give warning to white South Africans that time is running out."

Red ribbon symbolizes struggle of black S. Africans

Show your support!

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Every day, thousands of black South Africans are losing their lives in their never ending struggle for basic human rights.

To help bring attention to the black South African's struggle and to show solidarity for their struggle, a red ribbon campaign has started on campus.

The ribbon symbolizes the blood shed in the fight against apartheid, and the suffering of millions of black people in South Africa.

"The idea for the campaign came from a collective group of community organizations in Boston who approached me," said Sherwood Thompson, director of the Office of Third World Affairs.

The purpose of the campaign is to make the local community aware of the urgency of the problems in South Africa. "We want to educate the people about the atrocities in South Africa and show our solidarity with the struggle against apartheid," Thompson said.

In addition to symbolizing the struggle for freedom among black South Africans, it also symbolizes the demand for the freedom of Nelson Mandela. "The campaign is endorsed by the African Congress, the African People's Congress, and various other organizations with the major thrust on lobbying for the freedom of Nelson Mandela," he said.

"Wearing the ribbon will allow people who, for whatever reason, cannot protest or be in the front line, a convenient, non-threatening way to protest," he said.

The Office of Third World Affairs and the Third World Caucus are the sponsors of the campaign on campus. However, they are encouraging other student groups and organizations to join them in starting a network to bring on support.

There are many ways that people can become involved with the project. "Students can spread the word on campus, in their communities about the campaign, they can ask friends, relatives, to wear the ribbons, and groups could hold meetings about the problems in South Africa, print flyers, hold press conferences, and become distribution centers for giving out ribbons," he said.

Ribbons can be picked up at the Office of Third World Affairs located in the Student Union Room 308.

Get our new $49* software module when you buy an HP-41.

It's a deal that has no equal, for a calculator that has no equal.

Our new HP-41 Advantage software module packs 12K of ROM. One and a half times the capacity of any other HP-41 module. Large enough to hold the most popular engineering, mathematical and financial programs ever written for the HP-41.

You get comprehensive advanced matrix math functions, roots of equations and polynomials, integrations, base conversion and logic functions, and time value of money functions.

Our new module is also sub-programmable. So you can quickly access just a portion of a program, or transfer that section to your own program.

And it's even menu-driven. That eliminates overlays and reduces the number of prompts.

In short, you get everything it's going to take to help you make the grade in everything from Linear Algebra to Physics to Electronics to Statics and Dynamics.

The HP-41 is a deal all its own. Its operating system is so advanced, it doesn't need an "equals" key. Little wonder it's preferred by more engineers than any other calculator.

This is a limited time offer. Call (800) FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658B. We'll instantly give you the name of a dealer who has no equal.

Do it now. The phone call is free.

But our new module won't be for long.

BY BRADFORD VERTER

GOFFREDO PARISE: Solitudes. Translated from the Italian by Isabel quigly (Adventura, $7.95 paper).

The Italians are renowned for combining muted beauty with torrential passion. Parise, winner of the 1982 Premio Strega, does this with great poignancy and skill. A collection of minimalist short stories arranged alphabetically, Solitudes covers the gamut of subjects from felicita (happiness) to solitudine (solitude), addressing such eternals as youth, mystery, nostalgia and sex. While he chooses themes that are by no means unique, Parise's writing is uncomparable. He evokes powerful emotions with poetic simplicity. In "Fascino (Fascination)", one of the first stories in this collection, there is a brief description of a mother's love for her child being all the more intense for his backwardsness. filled with similar passages of warmth and sympathy, it is impossible not to praise Solitudes.

KENZABURO OE, ed: The Crazy Iris, and Other Stories of the Atomic Aftermath (Grove Press, $6.95 paper).

This yea. marked the fortieth anniversary of the bombingof Hiroshima and Nagasaki in August 1945, two events whose effects had untold significance for Eastern and Western cultures alike. In memorium Kenzaburo Oe, one of Japan's foremost men of letters, has brought together a collection of stories by Japanese authors reflecting first-hand reactions to the bombing. Some of the stories involve graphic description of the physical destruction caused by the bomb. These are moving and horrifing. Even more moving and horrifing, however, are the stories that demonstrate the psychological destructiveness of the bomb. Tamiki Hara, who wrote a story ("The Land of Heart's Desire") dealing with his trepidations about facing an "unknowable future" in the post-atomic age, illustrated his anxiety with a clarity that even his beautiful writing could not match. he committed suicide in 1951 upon hearing rumors that A-bombs would be deployed in Korea.

The collection is not centered around finding the party responsible for the bombing, it does not try to attack or incriminate. The Crazy Iris serves a goal much more important than finger-pointing. It teaches by way of example the obscene violence and the profound anguish such weapons cause. The book is a desperate plea for disarmament, a desperate plea for rationality in our system of muscle-minded superpowerdom. And what is the inevitable result of releasing such destructive forces? An insane future of crazy irises, of once-reliable nature run amok.

ARTS

'Arts for Animals' is an eye-opener

To review is to take risks—of offending and being offended, and worse. When the subject is a mixed media presentation of works by artists affiliated with the animal rights movement, watch out!

Touchy stuff, here, and for good reason. Meat, multinationals, monkeys, mice and mink are all tied into a cycle of consumerism which, critics say, results in cruelty capitalism and a world devoid of ecological sanity.

To illustrate these themes in our world, Student Union Art Gallery Director Jane Kreisman and members of the UMass Animal Rights Coalition advertised in The Animals' Agenda for suitable material for the show "Arts For Animals."

Amongst the exhibits: photographs of human/animal interaction; portraits of endangered species etched in slate; mixed-media composits with political overtones; and animal images made surrealistic through coloring and mounting on frames inlaid with real and unreal skins.

Art Review

Denver mixed-media artist Tricia Carney showed the most original 'umph' with a number of overtly political collages depicting the carnivore mentality of, amongst others, President Reagan, his 'contra' force, the slaughterhouse business, and easy-to-read supermarket meat charts.

The most gripping of these featured a line-up of 35mm shots of livestock in various stages of slaughter. Below this film was typobabble (ABCDEFGHIJ, etc.), which the artist explained as "the ABC's of slaughtering," along with Reagan's infamous "founding fathers" remark. The ugly image that connects dismembered animals to the blood-stained contras—torture—comes alive in Carney's works, and so do the implications of art on politics.

"We hope this show will inspire people to educate themselves about the Animal Rights Coalition said.

"People can become active through our group and others, and make signigicant changes in the lives of animals through changes in their own personal attitudes and habits."

This show is not morbid, as one might expect, but it sure as hell isn't pretty. Neither is the world of animals that we, by our dominant nature, choose to manipulate.

Field hockey rolls on, BC falls, 2-0

Minutewomen win third straight, stopping Eagles

By SUSAN GOLDBERG
Collegian Correspondent

Controlling the tempo on both ends of the field, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team remained undefeated, beating Boston College, 2-0 yesterday at NOPE field.

During the opening minutes of the game, Boston College showed some strong offense, forcing UMass into its own end. However, that offense was quickly shut down with excellent UMass defense on the part of senior forward Judy Morgan.

"I was a little nervous at first," said UMass coach Pam Hixon. "They (BC) are a much improved team and they came right at us. It took a little while for us to get into the flow of the game."

The Minutewomen, now 3-0 and looking to climb from seventh in the pre-season poll, took control of the game. UMass carried its offense to the Eagles, creating several scoring opportunities.

One of those chances finally paid off as junior forward Erin Canniff scored the first goal of the contest with 17:56 left in the first half.

Taking a pass from Morgan, Canniff set up to the right of BC goaltender Cathy O'Brien and lifted in her second goal of the season.

"Erin is playing great field hockey this season," Hixon said. "She's playing well on the left side with freshman Ruth Vasapolli. She's giving us both solid offense and good steady defense."

Two minutes later, with 15 minutes left in the first half, the second and last goal of the game was scored by sophomore forward, Tonia Kennedy.

Both goals were scored without the benefit of penalty corners as the UMass offense pressed the BC defense and O'Brien.

Kennedy's goal was unassisted as she pulled the ball out of a crowd in front of the BC net and scored her second goal in as many games.

Freshman forward Ruth Vasapolli drives on BC goalie Cathy O'Brien in action yesterday at NOPE. UMass won, 2-0.

"It's good that the goalie isn't being tested," Hixon noted. "It means that defense is keeping them away from the net. They had the ball close to the endline a couple of times late in the game, but the defense pushed it out of there. I'm very pleased with our effort. We played well today."

In the first half, UMass goaltender Kathy Rowe made three saves. She wasn't called on to make any in the second half as the UMass defense kept the Eagles from taking any unobstructed shots.

Hixon was quick to point out the play of senior defender Megan Donnelly.

"Megan really controls the defense," Hixon said about her all-american. "She organizes the rest of the defense and sets the tempo for us. I thought Karissa Niehoff and Chris Kocot also played well. We're coming together, finding the right combinations. It's a process that takes some time, but I feel we're on target."

O'Brien made seven first half saves and 12 for the game. A big difference came in total number of shots attempted. The Minutewomen had 18 shots in each half while Boston College, 2-2, had five in the first and four in the second. UMass enjoyed an 11-6 advantage in penalty corners in the game.

"Massachusetts is very strong," said BC coach Charlene Morett, "They have good depth in every position. The forwards are strong and very quick. It's hard to get your offense going against them. They are well-coached and very tough."

UMass will try to run its record to 4-0 as it faces Iowa on Thursday in New Hampshire.

Men's and women's soccer on the road today

Minutemen face New Hampshire, undefeated women are at Providence

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

As the undefeated University of Massachusetts women's soccer team prepares for this afternoon's match with Providence College at 3 p.m. in Providence, UMass' eight-year old varsity program stands just four wins away from 100 wins.

In comparision, it took the UMass men's basketball team 18 seasons from 1901 at 1909 abd 1916 to 1925 to accomplish that feat.

Even four-time national champion North Carolina hasn't hit 100 wins in its six plus seasons with 93 thus far.

But the only thing that matters to UMass' sixth year coach Kalekeni Banda is winning today's game with the Friars.

"We have to go in and take it away. It won't be given to us. Nothing's easy for us. If they schedule us, they have to be good or I wouldn't schedule them.

The UMass men's soccer team, 3-2 on the season, will be at New Hampshire this afternoon in the only other varsity action in tap.

As far as the schedule goes, the Minutewomen, 2-0 and ranked third in the nation last week, faces 1982 playoff opponent Rochester on Saturday, Brown, who was ranked number one in the NCAA's last season next Tuesday and Vermont next Saturday in the drive for 100.

The Brown, Vermont and the October 3 date with Connecticut are all part of the Minutewomen's four game homestand that end with the Rutgers match October 5.

"Everyone is going to go hard after us because we're the ones to beat," sophomore Monica Seta said.

Seta, at the moment, is the team's second highest scorer with a team-high four goals (eight points). Midfielder Carolyn Micheel leads with two goals and a team-high six assists. Micheel could threaten Elaine contant's 1978 season assist record of 12.

The men, riding a three-game winning streak that has included victories over Fairfield and Dartmouth, will go into New Hampshire looking to maintain their consistent play.

The Minutemen, without the services of last season's leading scorer Kurt Manal due to a leg injury, are searching for increased scoring from their forwards and midfielders. Freshman Sam Ginsberg started in goal against Dartmouth. He, along with senior Don Donahue have shared the goaltending duties so far this season.

SOCCER NOTES—Massachusetts has outshot its first two opponents, Keene State and New Hampshire College, by a combined total of 51-1. Granted that these two aren't the caliber of a North Carolina or UConn, it still is an impressive testament to offensive domination.

The California-Berkely soccer team, that was ranked second, ahead of UMass last week, is a varsity sport but it receives its funding from the club sport program. None of the players on last year's Final Four team were on scholarship.

It was California's second straight NCAA appearance in the program's three years.

THE STOPPER—Kansas City Royals pitcher Bret Saberhagen in action earlier this season. He is the team's winningest pitcher as the Royal's battle for the A.L. West crown.

Provost asks for state funds

$1 million is requested

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

One million dollars has been requested by the University of Massachusetts provost for the creation of a new biotechnology center on campus.

Provost Richard O'Brien asked for state funding to hire a director, five new faculty and several staff members for the new program. In addition, a new building has been proposed to house the 50 faculty members, graduate and post doctorate students who will be involved in biotechnology research, said George Agrios, chairman of the University Biotechnology Committee.

"The new program will promote and strengthen inter-disciplinary cooperation among the faculty," Agrios said. "It will include faculty who still belong in their departments and will get together as members of the biotechnology center."

Biotechnology is a booming field which combines research from many differenct disciplines of science, Agrios said. "Basically it is the application of modern technology to biological systems.

"It applies genetic engineering techniques, computer science and high technology to biological systems to try and improve products or produce things that couldn't be produced before," said Agrios.

Biotechnology research will help produce healthier plant, animals and microorganisms by moving genes from one organism to another. To do this, many different scientists specializing in different fields need to combine their efforts in a central place much like the proposed

Debate found in sanctions by Reagan

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

Since signing an executive order on sanctions against South Africa, President Reagan has come under attack from critics as "cozying up" to the South African government.

"Anyone who describes these sanctions as "cozying up" to the South African government is wrong," said Ashley Wills, country officer for South Africa at the Southern Africa Affairs Bureau of the Senate Department. "Our government is looked at with suspicion by South African government. We are not regarded as a friendly power," he continued at a panel discussion held last night on the United States and the crisis in South Africa.

According to Wills, there are two societies in South Africa. "One is predominantely white, middle-class. The second is black, poor, and underprivileged."

White South Africans have never been a majority, yet they have always ruled. "They are afraid that their values will be crushed if taken over by the black majority," Wills said.

Dr. Jean Sindab, executive director of the Washington office on Africa, had some opinions about Reagan's recent sanctions. "You must understand how these sanctions came about. Ronnie counted every head in the House and Senate and knew that 2/3 of both the House and Senate could override his veto. To save himself the embarrassment of being the first president in 12 years to be overridden by Congress, he signed the executive order."

Sindab added, "It makes no sense to stop bank loans to South Africa when the banks themselves have already stopped loaning money to South Africa or to ban the importation of the kruggerand when kruggerand sales are off 80 percent. These sanctions are symbolically important at best."

President Reagan's policy on constructive engagement was addressed by Roger Wilkins, a member of the Steering Committee of the Free South Africa Movement. "I don't like it and I never liked it. I think the policy is dead. Ron buried it the day he signed the executive order."

Many people view the South African crisis as complex. "It's only complex from the view of white people because they have to worry about reconstructing a policy which is fair to blacks without giving up power," Wilkins said.

He also addressed the issue of communish coming to South Africa. "I've been to South Africa and I've been to Russia. I don't believe communism is coming to South Africa because the Russians are such profound racists that they are reversed Midases. Everything they touch turns to mud!"

Ward's suicide titled a shock

Past president noted for accomplishments

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

John W. Ward is best remembered for his idealism and unselfishness as president of Amherst College and chairman of the Massachusetts state commission named after him which investigated fraud in state and county building contracts.

For those who knew him, his death this summer, recently ruled a suicide, came as a total shock.

"I find it difficult to believe . . . he had things together too well," said Evan Johnston, Legal Services Office consultant, who worked with the Ward Commission as Vice Chairman of the University of Massachusetts Building Authority.

"I idolized him, he ws one of my heroes," Johnston added.

Ward, a Harvard graduate and ex-marine, taught English and American history for over 20 years, at Princeton University and then Amherst College.

IN 1971, he was named the 14th president of Amherst College.

"He was a very popular, very humane, supportive person," said Kurt Hertzfeld, treasurer at Amherst College under Ward.

Ward's accomplishments included the introduction of co-education at Amherst.

"The whole idea of diversity of teh student body weighed heavily on his mind," said Hertzfeld. He tried to get student from blue-collar and poor families to attend the College, Hertzfeld said.

Ward was popular with the student body, as he led a student sit-in at Westover Air Force base in 1972. The action was not popular with alumni, but Hertzfeld said, "In perspective, I think most alumni will agree that co-education was right and the Vietnam affair needed to be called to public awareness."

In May 1978, Ward accepted an offer by Gov. Dukakis to head a panel which uncovered fraud in the awarding of building contracts and came to be known as the Ward Commission.

The Ward Commission found that "contractors bid so low tht in order to make money, they had to cheat on the job," said Johnston.

"I find it difficult to believe . . . he had things together too well."

—Evan Johnston, LSO consultant

Johnston found that the damage to University building was an estimated $25 to $30 million.

Ward felt that the problem in Massachusetts was that there was not a system of construction, that money was being spent wherever there was pressure, said Johnston.

"He realized that UMass was the flagship to the state college system . . . he merely wanted to point out a poorly done job . . . he blamed it on the loose system," said Johnston.

Overall, the commission investigated $10.1 billion worth of construction, of which 75 percent was faulty, he added.

The Commission managed to push three bills through the state legislature, despite

"Freedom Friday" Motion endorsed

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate last night approved a motion to endorse "Freedom Friday" activities which includes a call for suspension of classes. The decision was reached two hours after a prolonged debate on Commuter Area Government appointments.

The "Freedom Friday" motion, sponsored by senators Paul Wingle and Clare Bouzan, calls upon Chancellor Joseph Duffey to classes tomorrow and declare a general academic moratorium on all campus activities. The purpose, according to the motion, is to show solidarity with those people in all countries who are struggling for their freedom and human rights.

"It's not enough that we decry racism on our campus," Wingle, the sponsor, said. "This university is not an island."

Wingle said that realistically classes will probably not be canceled, but "if we make it known that this issue requires the attention of the entire University and makes us think . . . I think it's important."

After much debate on the effectiveness of the suspension of classes, senator Gayle Wintjen called for the senate to relate to the South Africa's anquish.

"Just try to put yourselves in the position of the South African students," Wintjen said. "You're here in one of the finest universities and they're fighting for their

Weir released to U.S. safety of others untold

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Rev. Benjamin Weir is free after a 16-month kidnapping ordeal in Lebanon, but President Reagan said yesterday that he "will not be satisfied" until the six remaining American captives also are released.

Weir was released to U.S. authorities in Beirut on Saturday, but an announcement was withheld to determine whether the release of the other Americans might also be obtained.

"We were trying to keep it so quiet because we don't want to do anything that endangers the chances of the other six," Reagan said at the conclusion of a speech promoting his tax reform proposal.

But White House spokesman Edward Djerejian, briefing the press after Reagan's speech, said it became apparent Tuesday night that no more releases were "imminent."

Forged letter rewords book of moral issues

BOSTON (AP) — The author of "Telling Right from Wrong" said yesterdy he can't get speaking engagements on campuses since he admitted forging a letter of praise for his book from a Harvard professor.

Timothy J. Cooney's book on moral philosophy was published this summer by Prometheus Books, of Buffalo, N.Y., after Random House canceled it last November. The book is in its second printing after an initial run of 3,000 copies, he said.

Cooney admitted last year he manufactured a letter purporting to be from Robert Nozick, chairman of the philosphy department at Harvard, which described the book as "truly brilliant."

"What I did was definitely immoral," Cooney, 56, said in a telephone interview from his New York home. "I didn't have a book that anybody would read. I couldn't get academics to read it, because I'm not in academia.

Professionals no longer answer to student boards

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Professionals paid through the Student Activities Trust Fund will no longer answer to the student boards which hire them, a result of a controversial professional wage classification study implemented in July.

The salary program is designed through recommendations from a two-year study by Olney Associates of Boston, a management consulting firm. The job classification system sets wage scales for non-academic professionals at rates comparable to positions at 15 other schools.

"Olney removed student input," President of the Graduate Student Senate, Jerry L. Ashlock, said. "Instead of answering to student boards, people hired by student boards and paid through student funds, now answer to the administration."

"Policy making aspects have shifted subtly," Legal Services Staff Attorney, Tom Coish, said. "Within our new job descriptions there are virtually no references to the student boards which we used to answer to. Authority has shifted to the administration."

"It's used to be explicit that Directing Attorney, Charles DiMare, acted under the direction of the student governing board," Coish said. "Now he answers to the administration, the Student Activities Office."

Coish said he viewed the emphasis toward administrative supervision within advocacy groups as potentially dangerous. "The possibility for compromising our legal situation is all too real.

"We can sue the University; we are often opposing parties," he said. "This program creates a serious conflict of interest."

Coish said that job descriptions under Olney do not adequately reflect what the job is. "Supervision of students is given no great weight," he said. Under the program, students ar counted as half a person. "This has the effect of enhancing top-level administrators who work with other professionals," he said. Legal Services employs six full-time students. Coish's new job description states that he "provides functional supervision of up to three student paralegals, total one person."

"As a lawyer I have more to lose than an administrator in a supervisory capacity," Coish said. "My Massachusetts attorney's license is on the line if something goes wrong.

"Student empowerment is eroding," Coish said, "and Olney is being used as the vehicle."

Under the Olney program, problems with jobs may only be grieved with approval from department heads, Coish said, compromising employees' abilities to appeal.

"Basically, Olney does what the administration wants it to do," Ashlock said, "it was commissioned to redefine, but what it actually does is disempower students."

Ashlock said the program has given impetus to a union drive by the Office and Professional Employees International Union.

"Professional don't have adequate representation on campus," he said. To hold an election the union must have signed union cards from 30 percent of the professional staff. Ashlock said he expects to go into the election with 50 percent.

State Rep Buell aims for progression

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

A woman now spending her first year as a Massachusetts state representative has serious goals of progression for her own gender, and for her alma mater; The University of Massachusetts.

Rep. Carmen Buell, D-Greenfield, who graduated from the University in 1984 with a masters degree in regional planning, said the statewide issues she is currently concerned with include the "feminization of poverty" and rising tuition costs.

"You can look at prevalent nationwide statistics which show that children are the largest growing sector of people in the United States living in poverty. Children are poor because their mothers are poor," Buell said.

Women, she said, have a special role in the Legislature. Though there is an official women's legislative caucus with an approxiamate membership of 25, which works as a lobbying tool for those issues directly affecting women, Buell added, there "need to be a lot more women in the Legislature," and "there needs to be a really strong support system for women who want to run for seats, both financially and emotionally."

Sexism wasn't a big issue in her campaign, Buell said, but noted, "Once I've been here (in the House of Representatives) I've found issues that are usually traditionally women's issues are not taken as seriously as others, and we've had to work a lot harder to get them the attention they deserve."

Buell also hopes this year to make UMass more accessible and more attractive to students, particularly those who presently can't afford higher education.

"I have a strong commitment to making sure UMass is supported substantially. We're working to set up a system so students can attend the school regardless of their financial situation. That's one thing I feel very strongly about," she said.

Noting a recent UMass event where Chancellor Joseph Duffey said that UMass should aspire to be the best public institution in New England, Buell said, "Instead, I believe what we should be saying is, 'we should be the best in the entire country'. That's what our goal should be. Let's not accept anything inferior to that."

Buell said she hopes students "will get invloved in political activity" because if not decisions "will be made in the void."

"I recognize the frustration in getting involved, but the only other alternative is not getting involved and if that's the way students will be, they have no right to complain about unfair legislation which affects them," she added.

Though Buell said state politics "isn't necessarily dictated by party," she said Democrats "have got to focus much more on local level elections."

"There is no basic mechanism of support for a state level candidate and those of us who have recently ran for a seat in the Legislature know what kind of money and energy the Republicans are exerting and know that that is what they're shooting for," she said.

Telefund seeks to aid UMass

By JENN HEMENWAY
Collegian Correspondent

Perhaps one of the most elite clubs on campus is "The Chancellor's Club," open for membership to anyone willing to give $1,000 or more to the University of Massachusetts.

Seeking to bolster University monies, Telefund, the University's telemarketing project, solicits telephone contributions by making membership to "The Chancellor's Club," and other pledge levels available to alumni and parents of University students.

"It's the most visible component of the school's development program at this point," said Robert Frickler, associate director of development. "It's the most sophisticated version of phone solicitation I know of."

Telefund, which started in 1983, has employees which telephone 60,000 people each fiscal year. "The impact of the program has been very dramatic," Fricker said. Contributions from Telefund's annual fund drive have doubled in two years. In fiscal year 1983, donations reached $774,000. In 1984, donations reached $1,232,000.

The money is generated from alumni and parents. Thirty-five to 40 percent of parents contacted contributed, for a total of $298,000. "Parents are extremely supportive of the school," Director of Telefund Linda Lawrence, said. "They are concerned about the quality of education."

Lawrence said 40 percent of the class of 1985 gave an average pledge of $37. "This is a clear indication of the affection alumni contacted hold for the school," Fricker said.

Student workers do most of the calling. "We hire an elite core of student," Lawrence said. She said she feels Telefund has a good quality of extremely persuasive, skilled callers.

Callers are trained to encourage alumni to make substantial gifts to the University. "The goal is the begin them (alumni) in the habit of giving early and try to raise the gift yearly," Fricker said.

Telefund divides donations into several levels. "We take advantage of where people feel their sense of belonging," Fricker said. The first level, termed the Chancellor's Club, is a gift of $1000.

Callers are also trained to sell the school. "Callers want to do something for the University and are aware that it's growing and want to be a part of it," Lawrence said.

Earlier in the meeting, 70 minutes of debate went toward Commuter Area Government appointments, which was the same issue debated for two hours last week.

Despite the prolonged debate, the main motion, calling for the 13 commuter appointments was passed by the body.

Debate centered around nine commuter appointments made during this week by the governing board and four that were put off indefinitely last week. A question of whether the appointments were made constitutionally arose during debate.

John Crowley, chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee said the appointing power of the Commuter Area Governing Board has "been an assumed power for the last six years." He added that the commuter governing board does not "have the written power to do what its been doing."

Dave Martin, spokesman for the commuter government said he has "operated under the assumption that the governing board had the power to appoint."

"The Commuter Area Government's constitution," Crowley said, "is approximately a half page long and nothing in the constitution says anything about appointments.'

biotechnology center, Agrios said.

"We don't have a biotechnology tradtion," he said. The proposed program will centralize equipment for the biotechnology faculty to use, while they still work in their own departments. He said faculty for the program will come from department retirements in addition to the new faculty who will be hired if the proposal is passed.

"We hope that research in biotechnology will be funded by private industry or by granting agencies such as the National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Health," said Agrios. The faculty will have to submit proposals and compete for funds to get grant money.

"One of the big thrusts of biotechnology is to increase cooperation between the University and private industry . . . that might lead to discoveries that can be useful to society," he said.

Students will also be able to receive hands-on training with biotechnology research and will be well-equipped to enter a booming field upon graduation. "It's where the jobs are today," Agrios said. "There's a company in Cambridge where the average age of the employees is 31."

The university biotechnology committee sent out a questionnaire to 20 departments and recieved answers back from 18 departments who are currently involved in or have plans to do biotechnology research. Agrios said the departments come from the colleges of food and natural resources, natural science and mathematics and arts and sciences. The chemical engineering and polymer science also indicated interest in participating in the program.

Provost O'Brien submitted the budget for the biotechnology center to the Board of Trustees last May.

A N C "Soviet-controlled"

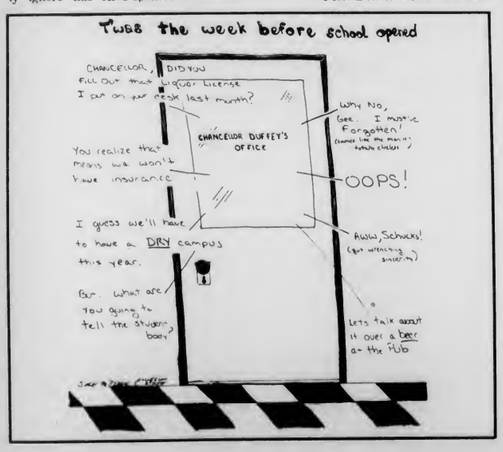
Peter Dow

Once again, UMass finds itself wrapped in controversy: the cause currently being crusaded for is the "freedom" of South Africa. On campus, students see posters promoting the violent overthrow of the repressive South African government, and advocating the granting of power to the African National Congress (ANC) and the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). Before we all jump on the politically-popular "anti-South African" bandwagon, we should investigate the credibilty of the ANC. At the same time, we should put South Africa into historical perspective, as we remember the results of our self-righteousness in the past; in Cambodia, Vietnam, Nicaragua, and Iran.

The ANC is, quite frankly, a terrorist organization controlled and supplied in large part by the Communist bloc. This may sound like "red-baiting" to righteous radicals, yet their complaint is only valid as long as the factual evidence is ignored.

ANC-sponsored terrorism is well known to any one who is knowledgeable on the subject of South Africa. Bishop Desmond Tutu, for instance, has long been involved with the ANC, and has spoken highly of such noted terrorists as Nelson Mandela and Oliver Tambo. Tutu once described Tambo (leader of the ANC) as "a person with Christian convictions and sincerity in his desire for peace and justice and democracy in South Africa." Yet in 1983, Tambo showed his "Christian convictions" by ordering the terrorist arm of the ANC (the Umkhonto We Size) to explode a car bomb on a crowded street in downtown Pretoria. On this occasion, 17 people were killed and more than 200 injured, most of them black. In 1984, Tambo showed his "desire for peace and justice" by having the ANC explode a car bomb in the port city of Durban, killing three people and wounding 16 others.

Indeed, the ANC extremists within South Africa have increased their use of violence. This violence, however, has been directed not only at the South African government, but also at black leaders who reject the Marxist-Leninist goals of the ANC.



From Dec. 1984 to Jan. 1985, more than 30 black mayors or community council members were murdered or critically injured. Sam Dlamini, the deputy mayor of Sharpeville, was hacked to death with machetes by 12 ANC militants; Phillemon Diphoko, deputy mayor of Evaton, was stoned to death by 40 ANC extremists; Mayor A. P. Kuhmalo of Katlehong was firebombed; and the list goes on. Yet the American media and Bishop Tutu conviently ignore this ANC-sponsored violence against moderates who want peaceful change in South Africa.

In Nov. 1982, the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Security and Terrorism undertook a massive investigation to reveal the "roots" of the ANC; what they found was not surprising. The ANC has long been dominated by the South African Communist Party (SACP): after taking testimony from South African experts, it was revealed that of the 22 top members of the ANC National Executive Committee, 10 were also members of the SACP. One of the experts was Bartholomew Hlapane, a former member of the Central Committee of the SACP, and of the National Exeucutive Committee of the ANC, who declared; "No major decision (of the ANC) could be taken without the concurrence and approval of the Central Committee of the SACP. Most major developments were in fact intiated by the Central Committee." Hlapane also stated that the sole source of funds for the ANC's military activities was the SACP itself (Hlapane and his wife were subsequently murdered in their Soweto home on Dec. 16, 1982 by an ANC assasin armed with an AK-7 rifle).

Dr. Igor S. Glagolev, who defected from the USSR in 1976 and who had been a Soviet coordinator for southern African terrorism, stated: "The decision to begin an offensive for the conquest of southern Africa was taken by the Politburo of the Communist Party of the USSR near the end of the 1960's . . . Through Usef Dadu (the national chairman of the SACP) the Soviets control not only the SACP but the ANC as well (Dadu is also Vice Chairman of the ANC Revolutionary Council)."

From such evidence exposing the ANC's terrorist acts and communist ties, the American people should at least be questioning the credibility of ANC claims that they represent the South African majority and that they desire democracy. The self-righteous leftists have ignored the apalling and repressive governments that they have assisted to power in such "liberated" countries as Iran, Vietnam, Cambodia, and Nicaragua. It is now up to moderates and conservatives to assume the politically unpopular position of supporting peaceful, pragmatic change in South Africa, for this is the only way to prevent the massive bloodbath that will surely follow if the terrorist, Soviet-controlled ANC gains power.

Multi-faceted fraternities

Ronald Berutti

Last week, talk show host Phil Donahue let the nation know that fraternities are the worst type of institution in America, and that they promote corruption of young men all over the country. Unfortunately, the attitude which he displayed on his show is absorbed as gospel by millions of Americans, including many UMass students, who have a tendency to dislike fraternaties to begin with. Being in a fraternity myself, and seeing the inner workings, I feel that the record should be set straight on the campus' fraternity system, because it would be unfair to judge the system before its case has been stated.

One of the foremost assests of fraternities is that they sponsor more fundraising events and community service projects than does any other sector of the campus. Over $100,000 has been raised recently for such diverse charities as Multiple Schlerosis, Easter Seals, Cystric Fibrosis, the Jimmy Fund, the United Way, and the Police Delinquency Project. Also, this week, all of the campus fraternities are going to join together in helping to build a children's park at the Fort River School. This is no small task which is being undertaken.

All of this requires a lot of planning, organizing, leadership, and responsibility. It does not just materialize on its own. These experiences acquired in a fraternity come in handy in the real world. These are things that cannot in the residential houses or in an apartment complex. Having to keep the house in order, the brotherhood motivated, and the budgetary checkbook balanced gives every brother a taste of running, and being a part of, a business. In essence, fraternities are just that, a business among friends. Because of that, many fratenity men are now today's business leaders.

What is hazing? Don't all fraternities require that their pledges perform ridiculous or dangerous acts in order to become a brother? Some fraternities may still haze, but on the whole, it appears that fraternities are becoming much more aware of the uselessness of hazing. Speaking from personal experience, I can honestly say that I was not hazed, nor were those in my pledge class. I strongly believe that most fraternities do abide by the law and do not haze. Instead, there appears to be a trend by fraternities to use the pledge period as a constructive learning experience where friendship and community involvement are stressed.

As for social life, fraternities are unbeatable. Lasting friendships are found here, held together by the secret bond of brotherhood. Also, on a campus where socializing is on the realm of extinction, fraternities offer a tremendous social outlet for all students. What is better than 50 friends socially interacting among themselves and others on campus? People will claim that fraternities promote drunkenness and sexual harassment, but just take a walk Southwest Residential Area on a weekend evening; sexual harassment and drunkness will be found in every corner. Drunkenness and sexual harassment are a product of our times, not a product of our fraternities, and they can be found anywhere on any college campus. However, fraternities make a concerted effort to limit this type of behavior.

So don't automatically be biased by someone else's unknowledgeable opinion of fraternities. First, see what fraternities can do for you, and then formulate your own opinion.

Strategies for arms talks

Mark Rubin

Between 1945 and 1970, the United States exercised what can technically be called unilateral arms restraint, while the Soviet Union undertook an extensive nuclear arms proliferation. The U.S. didn't call it that because Washington, especially by the 1960's, decided that arms reductions would be more likely once the USSR had achieved nuclear warhead parity. The result was two arms control treaties.

Now, the superpowers have put a new twist to long term nuclear arms control strategy; word twisting. Word twisting is the wrapping of senseless pledges in golden paper.

The first twisting came with Mr. Gorbachev's golden pledge of unilaterally freezing all Soviet missile deployments in Europe until November, and called on the Americans to do the same. Thus, he reasoned, a goodwill atmosphere would be established for arms reductions negotiations. What he didn't bother mentioning is that the Warsaw Pact has largely finished its SS-20 deployments, and will begin replacing them with new missiles in—you guessed it—November.

NATO, however, has not finished deploying its missiles which will (allegedly) counter the SS-20's. With fewer NATO missiles in Europe, the Reagan administration would never agree to Gorbachev's terms, since the U.S. vows to negotiate from a position of strength. In world opinion, however, the Soviets look great: a unilateral step to reduce the threat of nuclear war which the West refuses to participate in.

The second major word twisting occurred this summer when the United States proposed on-sight inspections of underground nuclear testing. The Soviets declined, since they view such inspections on their soil as espionage. Their twist: a golden, universal freeze on nuclear testing from Aug. 6 until Jan. 1—even longer—pending a reciprocal American response. The U.S. refuses to become involved in nonverifiable arms agreements and has vowed to continue testing. Another great propaganda success for the Soviets, and another blow for the stingy, untrusting Americans.

Many people view such a war on words without too much alarm. Propaganda campaigns have always been commonplace between the superpowers. Work twisting, however, is different. It's the meaningless committments in the golden wrapping that is so concerning. Should this continue, huge, unilateral arms reductions may be made, but absolutely nothing would be done to curtail the arms race.

In about two months, Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev will meet for their infamous summit conference. No one is expecting a miracle. Nuclear disarmement, negotiated by two distrusting foes will, unforunately, take more time.

What could come out of this summit is a pledge to terminate the beginnings of the word twisting era. In its place, an overall strategy must be agreed upon to break out of the stale-mate at the Geneva nuclear arms negotiations. An excellent position would be a mutual pledge to view nuclear arms solely as a deterrent to nuclear arms. This makes arms reduction easier because it eliminates the impossible task of weighing, for example, the value of nuclear weapons vis-a-vis conventional forces. By centering negotiations on just nuclear arms, the problem will be easier to deal with.

Constitution affects all

Roth/Burgess

At present, there are approximately 150 issues which are of immediate concern to the students on this campus. These areas of concern pose imminent and dangerous threats to the rights of students within our community. On a lighter note, there are approximately 100 more issues which need our attention and concern so they do not reach the levels of danger which are presented by the first set of issues we mentioned. Obviously, this is a task far too large for us or any of the other student leaders to handle alone. We need to work together if we are going to successfully resolve any of these issues. In fact, in many respects, the student government is better at finding you something to occupy your time than the unemployment office. Just stop by the president's office, tell us what type of things you would enjoy working on (where your expertise lies) and we will give you the rundown on what issues need your help and where you can take the opportunity to aid your fellow students.

At last night's student senate meeting, the new and most recent version of the Student Government Association's Constitution was brought for consideration. Big deal—Right?? Wrong, it is a big deal, in fact one of the most important that will be facing us this year. Throughout the past few years, students and administrators have been heavily negotiating many areas of concern within this document. These include such things as the Bill of Rights, which students would like to include to help insure that the needs of all students at the University are adequately and legally responded to by the University administration. Also, this includes fighting for the inclusion of agencies and structures, such as the Student Judiciary, which will allow the students of this campus to maintain the sovereignty of their everyday actions, without having them lost somewhere in the University bureacracy. Obviously, there are many more areas of concern, ranging from money problems to rules and regulations.

Before the saga of the SGA Constitution ends in the senate, it first must go to all of the Residential Areas. Four of the Residential Area Governments must approve it before it can be brought to the floor of the Senate for final consideration. Everything in this document effects the students of this campus! If it is ultimately passed by the Board of Trustees then it will become the official University policy regarding the rights and quality of the student government. This will affect the quality of life which every one of us obtains from this university.

The constitution provides all of us with the perfect opportunity to become involved. The House Councils, Area Governments and the Student Senate are all holding representative elections and are beginning to build their agendas for the coming year. By starting your involvement now, you can learn the complicated processes of the SGA firsthand by studying the constitution. This is also a chance for you to help organize your Residence Hall and/or Area around the important issues which you want to see them deal with during the coming semesters. Remember, you also have the option of running for the student senate. Stop by the Student Senate Office (420 SUB) this week or next week for details.

One final thought: Universities cannot exist without a student population. Isn't it time we worked together to make our presence known?!

Stacy Roth and Dani Burgess are the SGA co-presidents.

Accomodating a stranger

Renee Bacher

My mother would kill me if she knew what I did today.

Riding my bike up North Pleasant Street, I passed a man who was peddling very slowly on his bicycle loaded down with gear. I passed him, risking my life as a PVTA bus brushed by, nearly taking my shoulder with it. As I passed, he yelled out, "Hey, do you know any place decent and cheap to eat around here?" Turning very carefully so as not to lose my balance, I recommended a local sub shop, but he didn't hear me. He pulled up alongside and asked again. By this time, I was already envisioning myself wrapped around a bus stop sign so I motioned him to the sidewalk on the corner.

With his wire rimmed granny glasses and blue wind breaker, he reminded me of an old friend, so I took the time to be helpful and suggested some other places to eat in town. His accent and bikepacks indicated that he wasn't from the area.

"Where are you from?" I asked.

"Ah-uh-wuh," he answered.

"Oh, did you ride your bike here from Iowa?"

He nodded humbly. We got into a conversation about traveling and suddenly I wanted to invite him over to my house for dinner. However, I was on my way to someone else's house for dinner, I was already late, and I still had to bike home and pick up my stringbean casserole. At the same time, he asked me if I wanted to join him for a cup of coffee. I told him I couldn't.

Looking at the biking gear and his faraway smile, I tried to picture myself in a strange place, on a bicycle with no one to talk to.

"Have you been camping?" I asked.

"Yeah," he answered. "Last night I froze my butt off. Say, do you know of any fraternity houses that would let me sleep on their floor?"

Thinking about the prospect of sleeping on a frat house floor, I was overcome with sympathy for our wayward traveler. I remembered my summer of backpacking in Europe with a friend. There was a time when we weren't able to find lodging and wound up sleeping in a train station. I decided I would play fairy god mother.

"I don't know about frat houses, but I live a few blocks away from here and I don't think my roommates would mind if you slept on our living room couch," I said. I emphasized living room couch so he wouldn't mistake my offer. As the words came out of my mouth, I thought I might be making a grave mistake. Maybe he was an Amherst strangler, a rapist, or a robber. If he were female, I would have been slightly more at ease. But I started thinking about good deeds and how sometimes you have to just let go of cynicism and doubt and risk your life.

"Gee thanks," he said. "That's really nice of you."

The "gee" made me feel much safer about my offer. Anyone who says "gee" can't be capable of doing horrible things, I thought. So, I made him a little map and said I'd see him around 9 p.m. My roommates were very understanding about the situation, being that they are Ultimate frisbee players and have slept on many a living room couch during far away tournaments. In addition, Ultimate players are generally laid back about everything.

At 9 p.m. he arrived and slept on our couch. At 10 p.m. another homeless friend arrived and slept on our other couch. I felt good about my ability to provide couches for the bedless and I have vowed to continue doing good deeds regardless of my doubts. However, my mother will never hear about it.

AIDS insensitivity ostracizes

We are again amazed by the insensitivity of our fellow students. Stuart Gottlieb's assertions (Sept. 17) that AIDS patients should be further shunned by society has enraged us.

Medical researchers have found that AIDS seems to be transmitted only through bodily fluids, such as blood, semen, and possibly saliva. It cannot be transmitted by mere contact with an AIDS victim.

However, people of this society, in their selfish, paranoid way, have chosen to ostracize AIDS victims and their supporters. Is not AIDS enough of a burden to bear? Must we also remove all semblence of a normal life from the victims? Must be strip these victims of their dignity?

In Mr. Gottlieb's opinion AIDS sufferers should be denied such rights and privileges as dental care, public education, and housing. Is it not logical that people with AIDS would not admit to having the disease in order to avoid such persecution? It follows that this would decrease public awareness of the disease and retard the research process that will eventually lead to a cure.

American society should confront the AIDS crisis by helping its victims, both in maintaining the lifestyles to which they have become accustoming and in seeking a cure to the disease.

Spiritual replenishment needed

Just the other day I listened to a simple man preach the word of the Lord on the campus of UMass. Although his remarks were somewhat controversial, he was nevertheless a courageous soul whose only purpose was to shed a sliver of light on the dormant souls that infest this campus and others around the world.

But, to be honest with you all, I care not whether his interpretation of the Bible was congruous with mine or not.

What I am deeply concerned about was the majority of you who stood comfortably from the sidelines and relentlessly hurled a barrage of opprobrious remarks directly at him. It was malicious. In was insensate. Never before have I witnessed such a disrespectful exhibition toward one man—and in the presence of his wife and three small children.

You know something, his insightful observations were indeed accurate, for we are all in dire need of spiritual replenishment. Really think about it for a moment.

Photojournalism and the Collegian hit its foulest note Tuesday. I am referring to the quarter-page photograph of Linda Justice. How blasphemously intrusive it is to print a picture of a woman who has just learned that her fiancee has been killed. I can think of absolutely no reason why the editors thought this photo would be of public interest.

As a Collegian reader, I am insulted, as well as disgusted, that you could misperceive your audience so. I was even more disgusted when (after interpreting a confusing caption) I realized that the woman is, along with the tragedy, hundreds of miles away. Without a doubt, you have abused your journalistic responsibilities. I am distressed that the Collegian has stooped to such tasteless sensationalism.

Hypocrisy of liberals evident

In David Valade's column of Sept. 16, he writes about the hypocrisy of the Right in dealing with South Africa. I cannot understand why he, like most liberals, is able to comprehend the suffering of the Misquito Indians in Nicaragua, Jews in the Soviet Union, or even the suffering of Afghan refugees who have been gassed by Russian helicopters.

Liberals call the suffering of Blacks "abhorrent" but they call the persecution of Misquito Indians "unfortunate." I know of no greater hypocrisy.

Litter box liner serves purpose

Like many other seniors, I have been thinking back over my first three years here. Among other things, I thought about the Collegian. This is the poor, forlorn paper one occasionally finds used for paper mache, package stuffing, or litter box underliner. True, though I hate to admit it, I have used this piece of newsprint for such unsavory purposes. Despite this use of the Collegian, I think it is an excellent journal and I think it deserves recognition for its accomplishments.

The Collegian has been a source of information for me; it has provided necessary information about the University and the Amherst area that I could not find in any other newspaper. Yet, the Collegian is really more than just a source of information. One thought that I dwelled on in thinking about the past was this: the editorial page of the Collegian has been a forum for the discussion of issues that have affected my education here at this university. The raising of these issues in the paper has developed my interest of these issues. My increased awareness has served me well in my term here. It has helped me to better understand education, its inherent problems, and how other students think and feel. It has also has made me more open-minded and more careful in addressing student issues.

I hope that the editorial page of the Collegian continues to address the issues that confront me as a student. In the past, differing opinions have been given their say, encouraging me to consider different positions. Though there are too many different subjects that have appeared on the editorial page to discuss here, I think that most issues have been given fair coverage. The great variety of issues brought out in this way in itself is a tribute to the breadth and depth of the minds of the students, the faculty, and the administration of this university.

The next time I use the Collegian to line a litterbox, I'll surely be reminded of how the Collegian has been, and will continue to be, a part of my education.

This week this column actually will disseminate information which is useful now and for the next few days. So let's go . . .

Tonight, Thursday in case you don't remember, UB40 will be playing at the Fine Arts Center. They played on the Common this summer, in Boston, and the show was reputed to be really great.

If you'd rather something with a bouncier rhythm, Otis Day and the Knights, the band from Animal House in case you forgot, will be playing at Pearl Street in Northampton tonight.

Tomorrow night offers the best double bill of the season if you're willing to do a little driving. First, James Brown will be playing at the Bushnell Auditorium in Hartford, only an hour away, and when the show is over you can hop in your car and take a drive across town to the Agora to see the Ramones. Is this heaven or is this heaven?

Closer to home, Chilean musicians Inti-Illimani will be playing Buckley Recital Hall on the Amherst College campus.

Saturday night the incredibly casual Incredible Casuals will be playing at the Zone in Springfield with Bamboo Steamers.

Sunday and Monday will be good nights to be at the Iron Horse in Northampton with John Fahey on Sunday and Sean Potts of the Chieftains and Bakerswell on Monday.

FRESH DRAUGHT BEER TO GO.

Ask most beer drinkers and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days young men delivered bucketfuls to your door, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now we've found a way to deliver the same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

UMass men's cross country ready for season opener at Yale

By PHILIP SAYLES
Collegian Correspondent

Ask any coach during the pre-season how his team will do and the response invariably accents the positive. University of Massachusetts men's cross country coach Ken O'Brien is no exception to the rule. However, such optimism seems justified as the Minutemen return a cast of young but seasoned runners.

The men, who face Boston College and Yale in New Haven this afternoon at 3:30 p.m., have strong depth according to O'Brien.

While the team consists of mostly underclassmen, it is not lacking in experience. "Many of our runners were exposed to the rigors of varsity competition as freshmen," noted O'Brien, who pointed out that the team will face "perhaps the toughest schedule we've had since I've been here."

Leading the team this year is senior captain John Panaccione, labeled by O'Brien as being "one of the better runners in the East" and the team's best overall competitor. Backing Panaccione are juniors Paul Stanislawczyk (fourth in the NE indoor two miles last year), Wayne Levy and Jan Novak. Sophomore Bill Stewart is also a versatile runner who adds great depth.

Others who could crack the top five are sophomores Chris Axeford, Rick Dow and John Lorenzini.

UMass' schedule includes last season's New England champion Boston College and doesn't let up. The team also faces powers such as Yale, Georgetown and Dartmouth.

O'Brien has led UMass to the top five in New England for 15 of the last 16 years.

"I'm very confident going into this season," the coach said. "If we can develop as we go along during the season, we can become a very good team."

UM water polo splits

The University of Massachusetts men's water polo team opened up it's 1985 fall campaign with a 2-2 record after splitting their four matches at the MIT tournament this previous weekend.

The Minutemen emerged victorious against Amherst (10-4), and MIT (11-1), while losing to Brown and Iona.

The leading scorers for UMass were Bill Feeny with eight goals and three assists, and Mike Hoover with four goals and five assists.

Volleyball gets tough, stays undefeated at Lowell

Minutewomen win seventh straight match

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team, currently ranked third in the Northeast, ran its winning streak to seven games, defeating the University of Lowell 15-7, 15-9, 9-15, 15-10. The spikers join the women's soccer and field hockey as UMass' only undefeated teams.

Fatigue from the Minutewomen's long weekend during which they won the UMass Invitational, was evident in the early going and in the latter stages of the match as the passing and defense usual trakemarks of UMass domination, suffered.

"We had a real hard time on defense," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "Technically, we passed poorly and forced our setters to adjust to those bad passes. Weren't ready for a long match."

The UMass streak of thirteen consecutive game wins was halted in game three, as Lowell prevailed 9-15. But the spikers rallied behind the offensive leadership of senior hitter Sally Maher and freshman middle hitter Barbara Meehan to take game four and the match.

"Losing the third game rattled us a bit," said Sortino. "But it was good for us to lose a game. It was a growing experience. The sign of a good team is the ability to play poorly and still come out on top."

Sortino was quick to acknowledge the play of freshman setter Ann-Marie Larese, who came off the bench in game four to relieve a tired Juliet Primer.

"Ann-Marie did a great job coming off the bench," said Sortino. "They (Lowell) really wore Juliet down in game four. Ann-Marie got us back into our offense."

The Minutewomen will put their undefeated record on the line this weekend as the spikers prepare to do battle at the Central Connecticut Invitational Tournament.

The tourney will feature Northeastern University and the University of New Haven, who are ranked ahead of UMass in the Northeast poll, number one and two respectively. Also present will be number four ranked Army. UMass placed third last year, losing to Northeastern in the semi-finals.

UMass will face Division one host Central Conn. St. in the first game of pool play. UMass was three-for-three against CCSU last season.

"It's going to be a pretty tough weekend," said Sortino. "We'll see how good we really are."

Women's soccer destroys PC, 7-0

PROVIDENCE — The second ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team won its third game in a row, crushing Providence College by a 7-0 score, here yesterday afternoon.

The Minutewomen, who received three first-place votes in the latest national poll, had an easy time in their first-ever match with the Friars.

Freshmen forwards Michele Powers and Beth Roundtree each scored two goals to lead Massachusetts, now 3-0 on the year.

The UMass pressure started early and paid off when freshman Cathy Cassady scored her fourth goal of the year with a little over seven minutes gone in the first half. Cassady took a pass from Monica Seta, dribbled around a Friar defender, and scored.

Sophomore Carolyn Micheel gave UMass the 2-0 lead just four minutes later when she beat Friar goalie Kathy Kronin one-on-one. Powers gave the Minutewomen a 3-0 halftime lead when she beet Kronin one-on-one.

Beth Roundtree gave UMass the 4-0 lead and made it 5-0 when she intercepted a Friar pass intended for Kronin and scored again.

Goals by Powers and Sophomore Catherine Spence (Chris Schmitt assisting) gave UM the final 7-0 margin. UMass had a 26-1 shot advantage over the Friars, UM's first Division I opponent this year.

Jan Holland and Carla DeSantis split time in the UMass net with DeSantis making UMass' lone save in the second half. Kronin made 19 saves.

The Minutewomen take on the University of Rochester on Saturday.

Through three games this season, UMass has combined to outshoot its three opponents by a 77-2 margin and has outscored its opponents by a 20-0 score.

Minuteman booters beat NH in OT, 3-2

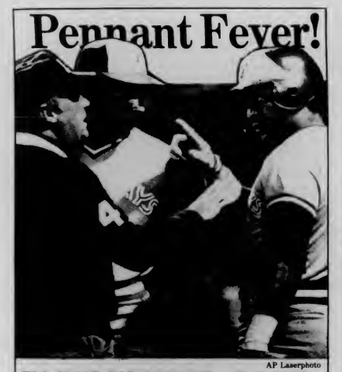
DURHAM, N.H. — Senior forward Ferdie Adobpe stole a pass and beat two New Hampshire players singlehandedly to give the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team a 3-2 double overtime victory over UNH yesterday.

"It was a great goal, he stole the ball about 40 yards away, beat two UNH players and nailed a left-footed shot past the far post to give us the win," said UM coach Jeff Gettler, whose team has won three straight to go to 4-2 on the season.

UMass went out to a 2-0 lead as Nick Marciano (assisted by Adobce and Andy Bing) beat UNH goalie Dave Barlow with 21 minutes left ikn the first half.

Bing netted the second goal (assisted by Tom Giordano) with 6:14 to go in the first half.

But the Wildcats got physical and tied the game in the second half. Adrian Pfisterr ran over UMass goalie Sam Ginsberg 7:06 into the second period. The officials called Ginsberg for the penalty, despite the obvious contact by the UNH player, and pfister hit the penalty shot.



Marc Griffin tied the game at two at the 14:45 mark. The teams played through one overtime as UMass missed on several golden chances. Adoboe then won the game with his big play.

Ginsberg played well, making six saves. UMass outshot UNH 20-15. The Minutemen also enjoyed a 6-5 advantage in corners.

"It was a character building victory," said Gettler. "It was a good team effort. We played well. I told the team after the game that now, they are a good soccer team. We showed a lot today."

UMass will play in the Iona College Invitational tournament this weekend. They return home next Wednesday against Brown. UMass is ranked seventh in New England.

Fall baseball notebook

Minutemen are building for '86

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Potential. The one thing all sports teams have and few live up to. Across the nation, collegiate baseball teams are playing their fall schedules and talking about the potential they have for the spring. That includes the University of Massachusetts and veteran manager Dick Bergquist.

"We have the makings for a very good team. We have a lot of good players returning and several solid incoming freshmen. Potentially, the team could be excellent."

Potential is more than some abstract term for the Minutemen. 1985 will be a good year for UMass baseball.

The Minutemen came into their fall schedule without nine graduating seniors. A pair of All-New England selections, shortstop Angelo Salustri and designated hitter Todd Comeau, drove in the bulk of UM's runs while Bruce Kingman and Steve Messina scored a large percentage of those runs.

Throw in staff ace Jim Knopf, starting second baseman Jack Bloise, Yankee draftee Todd Exold and do-everything utilityman Dan Clifford, and the losses seem insurmountable.

Until you look at who's back. The Minutemen return a group of talented players and have recruited a group of eight highly-sought freshmen. Several walk-ons and transfer could also figure into the picture.

On the mound, righthander Bob Kostro and lefthander Steve Allard are UM's only sure things. Both had solid seasons last spring and compose what right now anyway, is a two-man staff.

Three seniors: Jon Martin, Matt Subocz and Jeff Jensen, pitched well at times last season, but Bergquist said he will keep only the best pitchers, regardless of class.

Brett Valentini, Mick Wydra, Pat McNamara and Tom Pia all saw varsity action last season, but again must have good falls to make the varsity.

"I'm going to keep the best pitchers that come out and if anyone is a sophomore or freshman they can pitch junior varsity," Bergquist said. "We have a lot of pitchers out and will only keep the best."

Freshman hurlers Dave Telgheder, Mike Owens, Jeff Richardson and Ken Greer have the talent to contribute. Bergquist has been impressed with Telheder and Owens the most so far.

The infield will seen senior slugger Jeff Cimini at first, either Rob Holiday or Darrin O'Connor at second, Steve Allen at short and at third base either O'Connor, Tom Fabian, Doug Wright or freshman Steve Kern. The catching will be handled by Sean Flint.

The outfield will see Matt Sheran, Jay Zerner (out for the fall with an injury) and possibly Fabian or freshman Jack Card.

Designated hitters could include Wright, Kostro or one of the freshmen. Other solid freshmen include catcher Dean Borelli and infielder Gary DiSarcina, whose uncle was a UMass all-american in 1969.

Potential, the University of Massachusetts baseball team ha a lot of it. "That's for sure," noted Bergquist. "I just hope we do something with it."

'Freedom Friday' : a day of protesting apartheid

By JEFFREY MATHIEU
Collegian Correspondent

Today is "Freedom Friday," a day to protest apartheid, which will be celebrated by speeches and a march from Amherst town common to the University of Massachusetts.

Students and faculty from the Five College community will rally together and call for all the colleges in Western Massachusetts to fully divest from companies doing business in South Africa, Gerry Scoppettuolo, staff professional of the Student Government Association, said. Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst Colleges have stock invested in businesses in South Africa; Hampshire and UMass do not.

The march down North Pleasant Street, beginning at 10 a.m. in town, will end on the Metawampe laawn behind the Student Union Ballroom. Speakers will include former Boston mayoral candidate Mel King and African National Congress Representative Solli Simelane. Speeches, poetry readings and music will follow the main addresses.

According to bulletins distributed by organizers, ralliers will demand that charges be dropped against the students who were arrested last spring while protesting investments at the University. Thirty-three people were arrested in that incident.

Approximately 5,000 people are expected to attend the rally, said John Ruddock, speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Susan Walsh, an organizer at Mount Holyoke College, said she had hoped to influence the U.S. Congress to act toward sanctions against South Africa. She was the originator of "Freedom Friday."

"Apartheid is leading to very widespread bloodshed," said Jean Grossholtz, political science professor at Mouth Holyoke College. Nearly 700 have died in violence in the apartheid nation, whose 15.6 percent white minority rule the 72.1 percent black majority.

Hampshire College divested stock worth a total of $39,000 nine years ago in response to student pressure. The University of Massachusetts divested last spring with stock worth $370,064, following a 1977 trustee policy of divestment from all companies doing business in South Africa.

Amherst College has divested about $7 million and has another $15 million invested in companies doing business in South Africa. Figures for Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges were not available.

Next Sunday marks the first day of autumn

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday Sept. 22 marks the first day of fall, a time when western Massachusetts becomes a focal point for various seasonal activities and an extensive view of the foliage.

"Western Mass. is one of the prettiest parts of New England and one of the finest in the country," said Roger Ward, Senior Forest and Park Supervisor for Mount Sugarloaf State Reservation in Deerfield.

Ward, said there will be a late foliage this year. "The foliage should be at it peak around Columbus Day weekend. So much moisture has kept the valley green, the foliage isn't even at 1 percent yet," he said.

Mount Sugarloaf in Sunderland is a wooded 652-foot mountain of red sandstone, from which a view of the Connecticut River can be seen winding though the Pioneer Valley. Other features include a lookout tower, picnic, areas, and hiking trails.

The Joseph Skinner State Park in Hadley is another popular spot in western Mass., with a two-mile road leading to the 930-foot summit of Mt. Holyoke.

Baghouse causes additional concern

By DANIEL MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

A fine of up to $25,000 a day may be charged to the University of Massachusetts if the broken "baghouse," an emission filtration system which keeps solid coal particles from Physical Plant chimneys, is not repaired by Oct. 1.

The system has been inoperable since late July or early August, said Peter Wozniak, physical plant operations suprvisor. Without the baghouse, through which coal smoke is blown to trap solid coal particles in its 17,000 bags, the Physical Plant is operating in violation of the Clean Air Act of 1970.

The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) has estimated that without the baghouse, the Physical Plant is emitting about 300 tons of coal dust a year. This is five times the legal amount allowed by the Clean Air Act, said Stan Chin, environmental engineer of the Environmental Protection Agency's Boston office, in a Daily Hampshire Gazette report.

Clutches which connect the baghouse's induced draft fan to its motor broke this summer and have been sent back to the manufacturer in Buffalo, N.Y. for reparis, Wozniak said. The repair costs will not cost the state because the clutches are still under warranty from the manufacturer.

"They're (the clutches) are supposed to be delivered this week," Wozniak said.

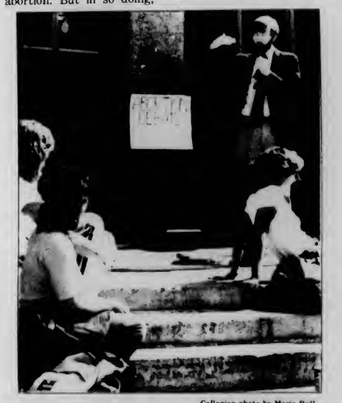
Abortion debate turns lecture

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

An "abortion debate" scheduled last night turned into a lecture on "An Unimpeachable Thesis Opposing Abortion," where no one voiced disapproval of one man's "pro-life" views.

John C. Rankin, executive director of the New England Christian Action Council spoke to a group of about 20 studetns in the Student Union Ballroom, following his afternoon "Street Level Forum on Abortion" where he met up with opposition from a handful of "pro-choice" advocates.

Calling abortion "an unquestionable form of child abuse," Rankin said, "The reason most women have abortions is out of convenience."



The Christian Evangelist said he sees abortion as a narrow-minded decision which looks solely to the present, not taking into account the implications such an act will have for the future. In years to come, Rankin said abortion as a concept will produce a "collective guilt" similiar to what he said we feel now over the holocaust among our society as a whole and will encourage legislation legalizing euthanasia.

"What is going to prevent the child whose parent's aborted one of his siblings to say to his mother and father when they have reached a certain age, 'Mom and Dad, you have no utilitarian use in society, and therefore I'm going to agree with the legislation which says every person over sixty-five will be painlessly gassed te reduce the burden on our society.'?" Rankin asked. The child, he added, is part of an "abortion generation" who will soon be able to complete the abortion act in the opposite direction."

Rankin also termed abortion as "the ultimate in male chauvinism," where he states, "A man often flees responsibility by leaving a woman whom he has impregnated. She is alone and often feels no choice but abortion. But in so doing, she merely passes on the chauvinism by treating her child as a piece of disposable property."

Rankin calls himself open-minded and said he spends more time studying the views of those who oppose him than those who agree with him, adding that "over and over again I go places to speak and (they) do not come up with an opponent to debate me."

"If abortion really is a necessary thing for this country, then I challenge anyone to stand up and argue for its purpose.

A building in downtown Mexico City stands twisted in rubble after Thursday morning's earthquake.

Thousands dead in Mexico

A major earthquake in the Pacific Ocean yesterday caused severe damage in three Mexican states, collapsed buildings in Mexico City and sent the city into chaos. Death reports ranged from the dozens to the thousands.

Live television scenese showed buildings in rubble with many people trapped. One 13-story building was said to have collapsed, trapping many people inside.

An amateur radio operator said he had seen many dead people on the street.

Another report said 35 percent of the city's buildings were damaged.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said the U.S. Embassy was undamaged and that communications with the embassy had been established.

Kalb said there was significant damage in the old section of the city, including the popular tourist area Zona Rosa, a fashionable and hotel district in the center of the city.

Both blood and gasoline for emergency vehicles were said to be in short supply and the government was asking for donations.

The Mexican Embassy in Washington said cathedrals had collapsed in Jalisco, Guerrero and Michoecan states, all on the country's west coast, with several buildings having collapsed inthe capital.

Three escapees still at large

PLYMOUTH, Mass (AP)—A second escape from the Plymouth County House of Correction gave himself up Thursday, leaving three still at large, sheriff's deputies reported.

Thomas DeVoll, 22, of New Bedford, serving a term for larceny of a motor vehicle, turned himself in at the distric attorney's office at Fall River District court, according to Petter Door, a special sheriff's deputy.

"I think he knew that we were aware of where he might go or turn for help, and that we had not lost his trail," Dorr said. "He probably just ran out of stamina."

Dorr said DoVoll was returned to the jail immediately and was being interviewed by investigators.

"We have some active leads we are working on" involving the three missing inmates, Dorr added.

Carlos Guilbe, 23, of Brockton, telephoned jail officials and surrendered quietly Wednesday after living in a tree in a park, Sheriff Peter Y. Flynn reported.

Flynn said Guilbe had been living in the tree about a block from his home since the Sunday night escape because no one would take him in.

"He was toohot," said Flynn. "He had nowhere to go."

"He was probably tired and cold and ready to surrender," Dorr said.

Sheriff deputies said the five apparently sawed their way through a bar covering a window in an old laundry room of the Plymouth County House of Correction Sunday evening.

After sawing through the bars, they apparently lowered themselves with a bedsheet about 12 feet to a courtyard and climbed over a fence.

The escape was discovered in a 10 p.m. bed check.

Senate passes immigration control bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate, trying to regain control of the nation's borders, passed an immigration control bill yesterday that would impose severe penalties on employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens.

The vote was 69-30 on the third immigration bill to pass the Senate in four years. The legislation went to the House, wehre the Judiciary Committee is considering a different version of immigration reform.

The margin was considerably less than the Senate's 80-19 vote in 1982 and the 76-22 tally in 1983. Neither of those bills became law, although a House-Senate conference came close to fashioning a compromise at the end of last year's session.

Before the immigration vote, Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., gave up plans for an amendment that would have made it more difficult to terminate a program for foreign agricultural workers.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., sponsor of the bill, asked senators to support the measure "if you agree with me it is a balanced and well-intended proposal. It is certainly a political 'no win' for any of you. I can tell you that."

Wilson, who opposed the bill before his success on the foreign workers' provision, said he turned into a supporter because "I don't know of any alternative." But Wilson said he doubted that it would do much to stem illegal immigration.

The foreign workers' program, successfully placed in the bill by wilson, would admit up to 350,000 field hands to pick perishable frutis and vegetables. But it was modified to allow Congress to end the program in three years, a provision that now will remain because of Wilson's decision to stand pat.

Harvard spends to oppose apartheid

CAMBRIDGE (AP)—Harvard University President Derek Bok has taken an activist role toward helping black South Africans by announcing creation of a $1 million university fund aimed at improving their lives.

Bok said the fund could finance trips by undergraduates to tutor black South African high schoolers, to send medical students to provide health care, and to help law students work on cases relating to South Africa or bring black South African students to study at Harvard.

Bok, an avowed foe of South Africa's racial separation rules, also suggested in a statement to the Harvard community that the money could be used for efforts to publicize the plight of political prisoners in South Africa or to help in the defense of those whose rights were violated.

"The widespread violence, the mass arrests following the declaration of a state of emergency and the stubborn refusal of the Botha government to extend full political rights to the black South African majority have deeply troubled individuals and institutions everywhere and made them consider how they should respond to such cruelty and repression," Bok said.

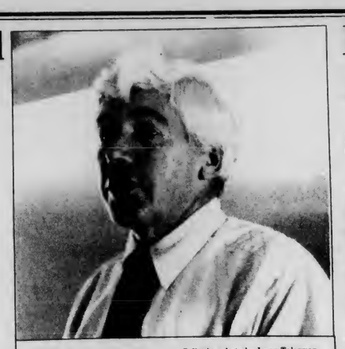
New Speaker elected to Faculty Senate

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate opened its new year yesterday with a new senate speaker and the reappointment of the chairman of the Rules Committee.

The new Speaker, Ronald Chilton, a sociology professor at the University since 1970, siad his primary goal for the senate would be "to keep on top of the committees and make sure they function effectively."

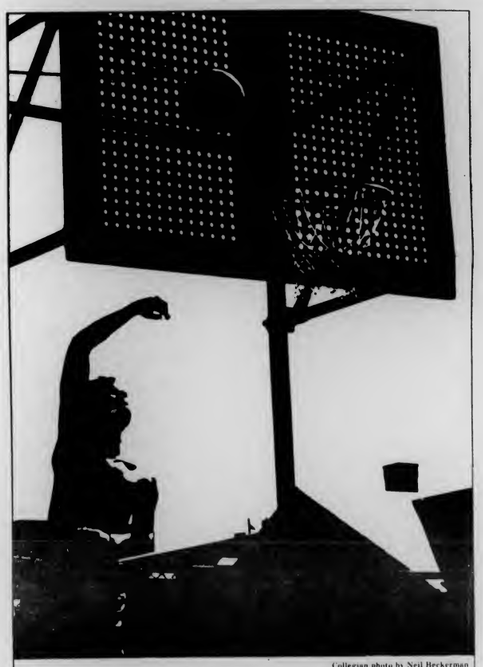
The senate reelected political science professor David Booth for the second time to chairman of the Rules Committee. Booth, a professor of state and local politics, has taught at UMass since 1967.



Marsha Rudman, an education profesor, was also named to the Rules Committee.

A by-law ammendment to create a committee on University Relations and Development, and an ammendment to add a member of the administration to the Research Council, were postponed until the next senate meeting because of language revisions.

In other senate action, Gordon Sutton, a sociology professor, asked Provost Richard O'Brien if there would be any changes in the University's affirmative action hiring program in light of the Reagan's administration's change in policy.



O'Briend said there would be no change in University policy. "The views of the administration in Washington are getting further and further away from the intent of this University," O'Brien said. "We are determined more than ever to pursue affirmative action."

In a recap of summer action, Booth said the Rules Committee had asked legislators to oppose a proposed calendar system for the state-wide higher education system. The calendar would mandate the openings for all state schools and would make it impossible to complete the fall semester by Christmas, Booth said. "Our feeling is that our system has worked well," he said. "This would be an unwarranted interference."

The Women's Film Festival shows 2 films

In conjuction with Freedom Friday and Diversity Week the Women's Film Festival starts tonight with two films, City Lovers at 7 p.m. and Chip of Glass Ruby 9:30 p.m. in Campus Center, room 163.

Those coordinating the festival, which is now in its fourth year, hoping to "promote the strength and diversity of women through film by examining a wide variety of issues and themes concerning women's lives," according to Liisa Trocki coordinator of the Women's Leadership Project.

Both films were written and produced by Nadine Gordimer. city Lovers is a tale of interracial love in South Africa, while A Chip of Glass Ruby deals with political activism and how a strong commitment to abolishing discrimination affects one woman's life in South Africa.

Plans for the future of the festival include lectures by women who made the specific film being shown, which is expected to begin in mid-October.

The festival is sponsored by the Women's Leadership Project and funded by the Student Government Association. The films are one hour each and free of charge.

Refugees to speak about experiences

By MICHELLE GOODWIN
Collegian Correspondent

A group of Salvadoran and Guatamalan refugees will be speaking about their personal experiences and reasons for fleeing their native countries at 7 p.m. Sunday at the University of Massachusetts Newman Center, and at 7:30 in the Bangs Community Center on Boltwood Walk in Amherst.

According to Lois Aherns, spokeswoman for the local American Friends Service Committee, the Caravan for Peace and Justice in Central America is comprised of 15 Christians whose private faiths in a "modernized Gospel" have been threatened by their own governments.

"The refugees include members of student's rights groups, and unions whose members have mysteriously died, or have been threatened by their military governments," Aherns said.

"We are spending more than $1.5 billion annually in Central America to continue a secret extermination of millions of religious, poverty stricken people," said Aherns.

At this time, the most intensive bombing in the history of this hemisphre is leveling Salvadoran and Guatamalan villages, causing thousands to seek refuge in other countries, Ahrerns said.

In this state, the caravan will be urging support of the Backman Bill, which will give legal state support to Central American refugess threatened with deportation. After the state tour ends, the group will join other lobbyists in Washington to ensure passage of the Moakley-DeConcini Bill to suspend deportation of Salvadorans living in this country.

By informing the public first-hand of the existing conditions in Central America, the Caravan and the American Friends Service Committee hopes to arouse concern and involvement in working towards ending the warfare, Aherns said.

WMUA to stop accepting military sponsorships

By FRAN PADO
Collegian Correspondent

The Management Board of WMUA radio recently voted to stop accepting underwriting sponsorships from the military for the '85-'86 school year.

In a 7-5 vote, the board decided to drop the sponsorships, which are short announcements costing about $4 for each 60 seconds.

The station's Program Director Jim Neill said: "The station has a reputation of being fairly liberal and our listenership is based on that." The military sponsorship would "cause more trouble than to be worthwhile."

"One of the basic goals of of WMUA is to promote social awareness and avoid oppression; because of the military's exploitative history I feel that any such involvement by WMUA could be viewed as the wrong kind of endoresement," Stepchen said.

Although the radio station will no longer accept military sponsorships of any kind, Stepchew disclaims censorship.

"This is not censorship. We will still do public service announcements for the military, he said. These bulletins receive no guaranteed airplay and are not paid advertisements.

Stepchew said WMUA is politically active and "respect the extreme moral and ethical beliefs of numerous staff members. "While I can only speak for myslef, the anti-military vote reinforces my personal belief that the military is an oppresive organization. It's WMUA's responsibility, without any concern to our sponsors to promote social awareness; accepting sponsorship from the military would discord with these ethics."

Dave Goff, underwriting director for the station, didn't agree with the decision to reject military's sponsorship. He said his "only contention is that in this country, the army isn't a political tool," and that the station would have been "letting people know they can have help paying for their education."

The military is getting public service announcements on WMUA, and Goff said he "didn't see a problem with them donating money to us." The station receives money from such sponsors as Wendy's, The Sub, Amtrack, and Campus Travel.

"In no way is a listener going to believe that a political ad is the view of the station," Goff said. "It's a business deal," said Dave Dipeitro, technical trainer at WMUA, who was also in favor of the military sponsorship. He said the sponsorsip would not have meant "that we were supporting the army. I think that if we put on an ad that can help people get through college, then that's a public service."

"I don't like the history of the military, nor their current visibility on campus. It goes along with the whole 'Red Dawn/Rambo' ethic, which I oppose." "Luckily, we're under no economic constraints and do not have to depend on sponsorship from groups we oppose."

Trustees approve optional fee for SSAM

BY STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees is expected to decide if the Spring 1986 tuition bill for the Amherst campus will include an optional $2 fee to fund the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM).

The trustees executive committee has approved an optional "check-off" fee for SSAM, but it is "not determined whether it will be $1 or $2," Randy Donant, director of student activities, said. The full board will address the issue at its next meeting on October 2.

UMass President David Knapp recommended the $2 fee only for next semester's bill, later it will be $1 per semester, to compensate for the money which SSAM lost this semester when it was without funding.

"I'm sensing they will probably go with the $2 fee," Donant said.

After the Student Government Association cut the annual budget of $2100 for the UMass chapter of SSAM on March 14, SSAM held a campus-wide referendum calling for a $1 fee to fund the organization.

Students approved SSAM's proposal by a 6-to-1 margin in the referendum, but the board of trustees questioned the legality of the mandatory fee increase, because mose of the money would leave campus when it fell under control of the statewide SSAM office.

"The SGA cut our funding with a positive attitude that this (the activities fee increase) would go through," Barry Wray, director of the UMass SSAM chapter said.

The purpose of SSAM, Wray said, is to unite students of the Massachusetts state colleggges and universities so that they will have a stronger voice in the Legislature.

"Our objective is to develop better communication between the school," he said.

In February, SSAM representatives met with MAssachusetts House Speaker George Keverian, who praised SSAM for doing its job well.

Canton Does And Doesn't Have Surplus

By Gerry deSimas Jr.

CANTON — Some unanticipated in- come and some careful spending have helped the town end up with a surplus- just over a quarter of a million dollars — $255,000, for the fiscal year that ended June 30 — first selectman Samuel Humphrey said this week.

But a bill of about $170,000 owed to Blue Cross in connection with the town insurance, looms in the background.

The tax collector's office took in $73,000 more than it was budgeted due to payments of back taxes and liens. The town also received $16,000 from the state in road aid, and the town clerk's office added an extra $12,000 to the coffers.

A mild winter saved over $10,000 in plowing and overtime costs, and the Board of Education ($60,000), the Board of Selectmen ($166,000) and the

"There's an incredible view of the Pioneer Valley and various other ranges in Massachusetts, New Hamp- shire, Connecticut, and Ver- mont," said Bill Lastley, park interpreter.

ASkinner park include the Notch Visitor Center located on rt. 116. "This area has some of the best hiking in the Valley," said Lastley.

Another renowned attrac- tion in western Mass. is Northfield Mountain Recreation and En- vironmental Center. Nor- thfield Mountain offers boat rides on the Connecticut River through Oct. 14.

"It's beautiful at this time of year because you see a double vision of the fall foliage in the water's reflec- tion," said employee George Broskey.

Northfield Mountain also has a pump storage hydroelectric station at 200 feet. Tours through the plant to see the equipment, and the upper resevoir on top of the moun- tain are available.

In addition, the center has 25 miles of hiking trails, nature walks and a 22-station physical fitness program, all accessible to the public year round.

Aside from being the most colorful time of the year, fall is also the time for apple picking.

Atkins Farms and Fruit Bowl in Amherst has 300 acres of apple trees to "pick your own." The farm will be open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday for at least the next three to four weekends.

President of the farm, Pauline Lannon, said, "There is a special deal on apple jprices this year because some of the apples have suffered hail damage." One-half a bushel normally priced at $5 is selling for on- ly $3 this season.

Apple picking can also be done at Quonquont Farm in Whately, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays, Sun- days, and holidays, although there are plenty fo apples to be picked within the six acres of land at Quonquont, owner Wilma Hoxie said this wasn't a good year for orchards. "Lots of fruit was lost due to spring frost," she said.

Quonquont orchards will be open until the apples are gone and Hoxie seems to think that won't be long. "The apple picking season usually goes to the end of October, but autumn seems to be rushing us. We've already seen some color in the trees," she said.

Wozniak said that if the baghouse is not on line by the Oct. 1 deadline, he will meet with DEQE the next day along with Chief Power Plant Engineer Hermine Randall, Physical Plant Director Roger Cherewatti and possible an attorney, "to explain the status of the baghouse and why we shouldn't be fined."

The money to pay the fine would come from the Physical Plant's operating budget, Wozniak said. But logistically, he said, "How that would happen, I don't really know."

The Physical Plant was first cited by the DEQE as being in violation of the Clean Air Act in 1977. Con- struction on the baghouse began in 1980. So far, the University and the Massa- chusetts Department of Capital Planning and Operation, which handles state construction con- tracts, have missed three start-up deadlines.

The deadlines, prescribed by the DEQE were set for 1981, 1983 and July 1984. The most recent deadline of April 6 of this year was met with less than a week to spare.

"My own gut sense is that is will be very tedious and aggravating and time con- suming, but everything will eventually work out," Woz- nink said.

Young to oversee publications

Vice chancellor's office worker gets promotion

Mary Young, an assistant to the vice chancellor for University relations, has been named director of University communications at the University of Massachusetts.

In her new position, Young will oversee University publications, such as admissions booklets. She will be directing the design and production of the materials and will also continue in her present position as assistant to the vice chancellor.

The new position will be a "significantly different focus for me personally," Young said, because of her new managerial position.

Young said she is looking forward to coordinating the University's publications and make them "more effective and more efficient."

"The University has beautiful publications that have won a good number of national awards," said Young.

She said her goal is to make the University well-known for the publications.

An experienced journalist, Young wrote a weekly column for the Valley Advocate for four years and wrote free lance for national magazines, including Yankee and Mademoiselle. She has also taught journalism interviewing classes at Hampshire and Mount Holyoke College.

In addition to her two jobs, Young is working toward her master's degree in organizational development. She describes her life as, very busy, but very exciting. "It's very, very challenging to manage creative people," she said.

Smith College student killed falling from horse during class

A Smith College student died Wednesday after she fell from a horse while practicing jumping maneuvers at the Smith College Riding Stables, an official said Thursday.

Maryanne Donnelly, 20, a junior from Westport, Conn., was at a riding class at the stables practicing two-foot jumps when "apparently she slipped off the horse and fell," said Mary Callahan of the Smith College public relations office.

"It's not really clear what happened. According to her instructor, as the horse was landing, she fell," said Callahan.

Donnelly had been classed as an "intermediate" rider and had been a member of the college's junior-varsity equestrian team for the past two years, Callahan said.

The horse she was riding belonged to the college, Callahan said.

Donnelly was taken by ambulance to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where she was pronounced dead on arrival. An autopsy will be conducted today, Callahan said.

The results were not available.

A service for Donnelly will be held at noon today at Helen Hills Chapel on the Smith College campus.

Juveniles clean up damage in Campus Center

Two juveniles were taken from the Campus Center Wednesday afternoon by University of Massachusetts police after allegedly spraying hairspray at each other on the Campus Center escalator, police said.

Police said they were turned over to their parents and returned to Campus Center yesterday to clean up the damage under the supervision of their parents.

In other police reports:

Two Datsuns were damaged in seperate incidents in lot 25 Wednesday, police said.

A 1980 Datsun received $300 in damages in a hit and run accident.

An illegally parked Datsun was also reported vandalized that afternoon. Police said the car was probably damaged by one of two cars it was blocking. The car was towed.

A purse containing $80 and identification was reported stolen from an unlocked filing cabinet in Bartlett Hall Wednesday afternoon. It was taken in a three-hour period, police said.

A wallet containing $9, a calculator and identification was reported stolen from an office on the fourth floor of Morrill Science Building Wednesday afternoon. It was taken in a period of 10 to 15 minutes after the owner left her office to get a soda, police said.

Students and apartheid

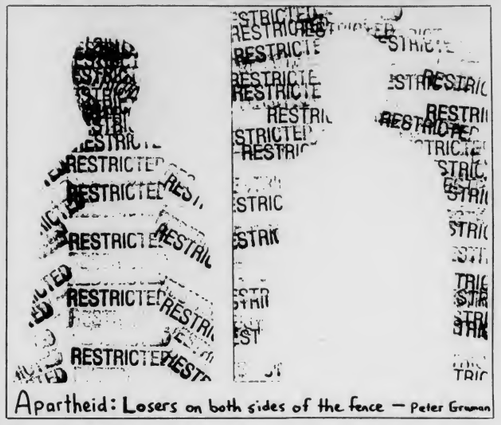
The time has come to rally for remedy. Today is Freedom Friday, the issue is apartheid in South Africa, and the problem is our combined inability to hasten change and understanding within that country through education, sanctions, and sensitivity here at home.

Profits apparently come before peacemaking; the handwringing and hohumming of many leading educational institutuions in the move for divestment as a means of effecting South African change is nothing less than disgraceful. Our schools are meant to be more enlightened.

It's taken years of lobbying for the desirability and inevitability of separating our money, and tacit support, from apartheid, as well as disruptive sit-ins and arrests in our own administrative building and in the government buildings of our leaders. But finally, our trustees, Congress, and other "people who count" are waking up to the fact that they, too, must take one side or another in this fight for rights.

The decision by UMass Trustees this year to completely divest the University's monies soaked in apartheid is good news. It cleanses our image. Thus, we followed pension funds of 30 major cities and states, worth $1.8 billion, away from the stained economy of South Africa.

As with past problems, student pressure has played a pivotal role in the decision for remedial action. Officials will deny it, but partial divestment after prolonged protest at Brown, Yale, Columbia, and soon Harvard represents more than just coincidence. The collaboration of student/faculty protest and critical national attention has spurred trustees to take action more than practical reasoning could.



Apartheid is a political disease for which ignorance is no longer an acceptable excuse. Reversing positions on an issue is tricky for any politician, but his crisis requires our leaders to override "image" and go about setting our priorities straight.

Constructive engagement, as our president knows it, is no longer viable. History has shown that we cannot profit by turning a deaf ear upon cries of continued oppression; if we must look at oppression as a cost/benefit situation, then no one benefits.

Today's events are, at this point, the very least students can do to press South Africa towards a more peaceful solution than revolution. The changes that must occur withing South Africa will be revolutionary, but with foresight we, as a country, can help South Africans avoid the bloodbath which we unfortunately and characteristically have learned accompanies such drastic change.

While we celebrate the part UMass has played in this saga, students must work to ensure this issue remains alive—on campus, in the community, and in our nation. The business of the world continues on, and we must not forget that divestment doesn't end the dilemma that is apartheid.

Apartheid: Losers on both sides of the fence — Peter Gruman

'Privilege pursuit' players

Those of us at UMass involved in radical politics have every reason to be concerned about the direction America is taking today. Our society is built upon the spirit of priviliege rather than cooperation, and this has evil consequences. The conservatives who point to the Soviet Union as the evil empire are motivated not by a desire to eradicate evvil but by a desire to maintain their privilege. They feel justified by our society's formal commitment to human rights to do whatever they want in the name of these rights, and point to the Soviett Union to excuse their actions. They succeed in this because other Americans are also interested only in their own privilege, and can be won over by crass appeals to their self-interest.

The military received an extra $50 billion in Carter's last years because he was afraid to appear 'soft on defense,' and another $50 billion during the first years of Reagan. They received so much they didn't know what to do with it. They built the York antiaircraft gun and the Bradley tank, billion dolar systems that didn't work. Yet even today, Democrats quake in fear of appearing 'soft on defense' on Capitol Hill, and cannot speak out against the massive corruption in the military, the $1000 toilet seats, $800 hammers, $100 billion Star Wars weapons systems that don't work. Why? Because we, as the strongest nation, are privileged to defend ourselves with whatever we want, and to speak out against that privilege is anti-American. Or is it? Do you make an obese person strong by feeding him whatever he wants? Do you make the defense industry strong by giving it whatever it asks for?

Or is a strong defense what our society needs? Do we not rather need a safe and secure world? The conservatives argue against the evils of the Soviet Union, but then fight affirmative action and support apartheid. They are not conservatives but regressives, and so they deserve to be called. These regressives maintain, pointing to the doctrines of Marx and Lenin, that the Soviet Union is bent upon bringing the entire world under communist domination. Therefore we must have a foreign policy based on resistance to communism wherever it manifests itself. But what is the real issue here?

Cuba has one of the best health-care systems in the world, and a dedication to practical human rights totally unmatched by our own society. Their constitution guarantees the right to work as a basic right. If someone becomes sick, their job is held for them for up to two years. They have actually fed their people. They have reached out to the US for diplomatic recognition and alliance for many years and have done so despite our attempts to invade their islands and overthrow their revolution. As a sovereign nation, they have the right to ally themselves with the Soviet Union. We do not recognize this right, just as we do not recognize their right to choose their own form of government, ostensibly because their governmetn is not baseed upon the consent of the people, and because it denies basic human rights like the right of free speech. But is it not really, because Cuba denied us the [illegible] of continuing to subjugate them [illegible] economically and exploit them economically?

We have no moral claim on the Soviet Union, as long as we do this. We cannot expect to live in a safe and secure world, until we respect our neighbors as equals, and live not for our own private privilege, but for our common right and privilege to live in a world at peace.

AIDS education more education

I am writing this in response to Stuart Gottlieb's comments on Sept. 17 in "Aids at public schools". Mr. Gottlieb, I believe that you are missing the entire point of this issue. You state that by allowing children with AIDS to attend public schools there is unneccessary grief caused for everyone involved. Well, Mr. Gottlieb I want you to think about that statement for a moment. Are these poor, innocent children interrupting everyone's education or instead are the ignorant people who would protest and threaten an innocent child actually the guilty ones?

You say that the issue of educating these children is getting in the way of educating everyone. I agree, but who brought up the issue? The children are not disrupting the school, the parents are. These paranoid parents who know nothing about the disease thell their children all sorts of stories about how they can catch a fatal disease from these people and how they shouldn't associate with them. Instead of filling our children's heads with assumptions about AIDS I believe parents should educate themselves about the disease and then educate their children. After parents have learned more about the disease then they have a right to educate their children on it also.

Children should be taught how to treat an AIDS pateinet. The patient should not be treated like a monster but like a person. You say in your article, Mr. Gottlieb, that "the pro side is relying on undocumented opinions of some doctors that AIDS is only contagious through sexual intercourse." You obviously have not been doing your homework on the subject. It is true that the most common way to catch AIDS is through sexual intercourse but doctors know that it can be transmitted through dirty needles, blood transfusions, and transfer of certain body fluids. Casual contact with AIDS victims does not caus the transmission of the disease.

Mr. Gottlieb, you claim that you come from an environment which understands AIDS, yet I don't believe that you have enven tried to understand this disease. From what I can see, you would like to treat AIDS patients like lepers and send them off to deserted islands somewhere. Well, I think that the only way that we can cure this fatal disease is to understand it. Everyone must try to understand it and not push it aside as someone else's problem. We only fear things which we don't understand.

People like you, Mr. Gottlieb try to hide your fear under the guise of morality. AIDS is only in its beginning stages now and people are just awakening to the horrible consequences of the disease. It is not limited to California or New York, it has spread to this state already. I only hope that we may fully understand this disease soon so that we can find a cure.

Republican values are insulting

I am writing in response to the recent proliferation of UMass Republican Club posters on campus, especially in the Residence Halls. These advertisements, espousing Republican ideology, are insulting to me for several reasons. Firstly, the slogans such as "Tired of campus radicalism?" and "Proud of American Values?" are offensive due to thier inference that anyone who is not a Republican is necessarily: a) a protester or radical b) opposed to tradional American values c) a communist secretly awaiting a "Red Dawn" in the United States.

Furthermore, I am interested in exactly which "American Values" I am supposed to be proud of. If these ideals include the values represented by President Reagan's favorites like the racist Jesse Helms, the extremely homophobic and fanatical Jerry Falwell, or the anti-semitic Ray Shamie, then my response would have to be "no". As for "campus radicalism", I can only wonder why the Republicans of UMass have not become bored with harping on the so-called "silly" protesters, "freaks", and "long-haired" radicals. Additionally, I am sure that if the RSU advertised with a slur like "Tired of Campus Fascism?", then the Collegian would be besieged with indignant and self-righteous replies.

Finally, as a senior at UMass, I have endured the ludicrous and often unfounded attacks of Republican Club members like Stephen Erickson and ("Central American expert") Peter Dow long enough. These posters are symptomatic of the UMass Republican Club's infatuation with generalizations, stereotypes and empty rhetoric. Because of the abundance of misinformation, the over-zealous attacks on and obsession with radicals, and the tunnel vision implicit in Dow's and Erickson's [illegible] columns, I find them Republican ridiculous and ultimately, boring.

Friday film follies

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Correspondent

What's your faithful film reviewer to do? There are lots of films around but only one is new. But I'm not afraid of my column writing chore, a lack of material has never stopped me before.

The newest movie on the scene starts William Hurt acting so serene. All of Kiss of the Spiderwoman's reviews to date have said it is an artistic film that is also great. William Hurt and Raul Julia star in this tale about a homosexual and rebel in a South American jail. These two individuals share the same cell and have nothing in common but the war-torn stories they tell. Despite their differences, their hopes are the same. They share each other's fantasies, like the dream sequence that gives the film its name. If this sounds like a movie you want to see, you can find it at Northampton's Academy.

If a good French comedy interests you, check out Pleasant St.'s The Tall Blond Man With One Black Shoe. The Shooting Party is an Edwardian Big Chill, if you need a fix of good British acting this film will give you your fill.

In Amherst, there's Stop Making Sense with the Talking Heads, a documentary on the group that performs "thinking man's rock," that was supposed to be so amazing that it sent critics into shock. The Cinema is also showing Pink Floyd's The Wall. If you want to see what else is around look at the ad from the Mall.

That's all folks.

How many times have you caught yourself asking for "the best of both worlds?" Is this possibe? Or must one choice be made? The New World Theater Ensemble's production, "Dance and the Railroad," captures this dilemma in the cross-cultural entanglement of two Chinese men fighting for lives of their own through martial arts and dance, and in the midst of a labor strike on the American railroad.

John Cruz, "Lo" and Victor Ho, "Ma," are two opposing personalities which meet atop The Golden Mountain, a railroad, to mock and berate each other about conforming to this new world of "white man." Each fears becoming the "deade Chinaman" who has willingly accepted the white man's way of life. Interwoven in the quick-flying dialogue movements of martial arts and interpretive dance which promote a serene and unique space for one character, and a comic relief for the other.

The camaraderie in The New World players was easily apparent during the dress rehearsal. The 15 members were quick to prove that a group representing the Five College area could be a cohesive unit. Victor Ho is a second-year student at Amherst College, and John Cruz is an exchange student from the University of Hawaii, Helo. The choreographer, Richard Cessario, a teacher of martial arts, creates the movements for thw two which also uses elements of the Peking Opera.

The play itself is by an American-born Asian-American, David Henry Hwang. As a young author of 24 he represented, to director Roberta Uno Thelwell, the sophistication and level of Asian-American playwrighes today.

Both the author and the play were acclaimed in New York, according to Thelwell. One of the reasons for the author's success is his use of language. The straightforward modern slang may seem unconventional and unfair to the characters of the past century, but in fact Hwang uses the modern lingo as a translation of a Chinese regional language which is full of color and metaphors. Hwang's approach is meant to rid us of the stuffy and mystic sterotypes of the Chinese.

The show will run tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Hampden Theater in Southwest. Tickets are on sale at the Fine Arts Center, 10-4 p.m. and will be $2.00 for students and $4 for the general public. Northampton will also be featuring the ensemble at The Old School Commons, in the Northampton Center for the Arts from Oct. 3-6.

UB40 knocks out FAC audience

By DANIEL CALNAN

The British supergroup UB40 is the best thing that's happened to reggae since Bob Marley was putting out records a few years back. Last night at the Fine Arts Center Concert UB40 proved to a sold out audience that it is one of the best live acts around today. Season opens with revival

By LISA RIDDICK
Collegian Correspondent

This season, the New World Theater will be sponsoring a series of plays which reflect the beauty and diversity of people of color.

The first play to be performed is Dance and the Railroad. The play incorporates elements of the Peking opera, dance, and martial arts in exploring the struggle for the dignity of two men during the Chinese railroad workers strike of 1867.

John Cruz, a studetn at the University of Massachusetts plays the character of Lone and Victor Ho, a student at Amherst College, plays the character of Ma.

Dance and the Railroad was chosen as the first play of the season because it's a revival. The show played last February to three sold out performances. "The audience response was overwhelming. We never expected to play in front of a sold out house," said a spokesperson for the play.

Another reason the play was chosen is because it is the first Asian American play to be shown in the area in a long time. "We want to show the audience that there are Asian American playwrights out there," said the spokesperson.

The New World Theater was founded in 1979 in order to present the theatrical works of Third World people as a major contribution to contemporary theater arts.

The Theater highlights the theatrical works of Third World people and brings out the individual and cultural traditions and achievements of African, Hispanic, Asian, and Native Americans by not considering them as one entity. Some future performances we will see are: In Living Color and Voices In The Rain.

The play will be on campus for two weekends. From September 19-21 and from 26-28 at the Hampden Theater at 8 p.m. The play will also be presented on October 3-5 at the Northanipton Center for the Arts.

Minority students served by caucus

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

In the late seventies, a group of Third World students frustrated by the lack of representation they had on campus, formed their own legislative body.

"The Third World Caucus was formed to represent students of color who otherwise wouldn't be represented," said David D. Moore, internal coordinator of the Third World Caucus.

There are 40 members of the caucus. However, only fifteen of them can be senators in the Student Senate. "Fifteen senators represent five percent of the Third World population on campus which is considered to be a high number," Moore said.

The caucus will be involved in several projects this semester. "One of the projects will be working on is getting the Tower Library renamed, getting the New Africa House renovated because it hasn't been renovated since it was taken over by the students in 1975, expand the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and other Minority Studetns (CCEBMS) staff to accomodate the increasing minority population on campus, and getting students involved in committees that matter," he said.

The caucus members often vote in blocs. A bloc vote means that all members as a group, vote for the same cause. "It's a very effective way to get measures approved," Moore stated.

Any student interested in joining the Third World Caucus, should contact David D. Moore at Nummo News which is located in the New Africa House.

"It's no surprise that John is playing so well," said Stull. "He's a great athlete and plays tough against the run. But he's not the only good defensive player we have."

Nose guard Mike Dwyer has also been strong. The senior has 14 tackes and a sack. Defensive backs Platek and Bob Shelmire have also played the run well and improved their pass coverage.

Offensively, UMass has senior co-captain George Barnwell back at tailback. The 5-9, 178 pounder ran for 80 first half yards against Morgan State before badly bruising his shoulder. He dressed but did not play against the Spiders in Richmond, but is healthy for Saturday's game (1:30 p.m.)

"George's being back really helps," said Stull. "Ted Barrett did a good job in his place, but George was our leading rusher and it's always good to have him."

Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi had a great first half against Richmond, running well and throwing a 45-yard touchdown pass to split end Tom Cioppa. But in the second half, under a better Spider rush, the UMass signal caller made several bad decisions that resulted in turnovers and completed only three passes.

"It's a learning process for Dave, and to his credit he didn't have all that much help against Richmond in the second half. We made too many mistakes and they cost us," said Stull. "I'm confident he'll bounce back."

Cioppa has replaced junior college transfer Lonny Brock at starting split end. Another juco transfer, fullback Al Neri, has been UMass' most consistent rusher with 61.5 yards-per-game. The 220 pounder gives UMass the big third-and-short threat it has been missing.

Lineman Stan Kazorowski and Mike Briggs have played well on the right side. Center Peter Montini had a strong game against Richmond.

Special teams have been a headache for UMass. Morgan State ran back a kickoff and Richmond returned a punt for a touchdown, trends that Stull wants stopped now.

"We worked all week in practice on special teams play," the coach noted. "It wasn't that we weren't getting to the ball, we just weren't making the tackles. We've shifted a few different people into the return teams, so hopefully that problem will be solved."

Left guard Sheldon Hardison (right) does battle with a Morgan State player earlier this season. The Minutemen face Holy Cross at home on Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

There haven't been any problems from punter Dimitri Yavis or kicker Silvio Bonvini. After replacing the injured Jim Tandler, Yavis has averaged 41.4 yards a punt while Bonvini is perfect on seven points after attempts.

Look for Holy Cross (winners of three straight against UMass) to try and establish its running game with Fenerty. Quarterback Pat McCarthy can be rattled and UMass will try to pressure the Cross senior.

On defense, Holy Cross has a great defensive line anchored by all-american candidate ed Kutschke (6-3, 250), a dominant tackle, the secondary and linebackers are inexperienced however.

"UMass appears to have the strongest team since I've been at Holy Cross," said fifth year coach Rick Carter. "Palazzi gives them a new dimension. I expect a tough, physical game."

THE PREDICTION: UMass 24, Holy Cross 21. Over 14,000 are expected in Alumni and UMass will respond. Look for the UMass option offense to produce and the defense to shut down Fenerty. It's payback time for the Minutemen seniors.

UMass Men's golf starts slowly

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team opened its fall season with a third-place finish in the Yankee Conference championships.

The Minutemen also lost a dual meet as a loaded Westfield State dumped UMass 387-417 in a match at the Shaker Hills course.

In the Yankee Conference meet, UMass took third with a socre of 413. Connecticut was first and New Hampshire was second. The host Rams were last with a best five score of 443. UMass had 413, New Hampshire came in with a 405 while Connecticut ran away from the field with a 397.

For UMass, Bill Conley and Joe Petrin were low with 81's. Senior Brian Fitzgerald had an 82, Jim Forsgard carded an 83 with Brian Kumiega shooting an 86 for the fifth spot. Steve Giard had an 88 and Jim Ryan a 90.

In the Westfield State match, Fitzgerald and Conley pulled 81's. Senior Al Vorce had an 82. Giard shot an 85. Ryan and Tim Smith each had an 99 while Kumiega shot an 89.

Westfield had three players breaking 79 to win the match easily, 387-417.

"We've yet to play our best golf," UMass coach Jack Leaman said. "I'm hoping for a little better in our upcoming matches. I know the guys are capable of better playing, it's just a matter of showing we can."

whipped Providence College 7-0 on Wednesday. They have also crushed Keene State 9-0 and New Hampshire College 4-0.

The Minutewomen, who advanced to the Final Four last season are closing in on 100 wins as a program (Harvard is the only other team to reach that plateau), are tied with California for second place in the national poll. George Mason is first. UMass received three first-place votes by pollsters.

UMASS NOTES: The soccer team is ranked seventh in the Division 1 New England poll, but may move up following its solid week. Connecticut is ranked first, Harvard is second and Yale is third. UMass will play all three of those teams this season (the Harvard and Yale games will be at home). UConn (2-0-3) is ranked ninth in the nation. Clemson (4-0-1) is first. UConn tied Clemson earlier this season.

In the volleyball tournament, UMass could contend with Northeastern and New Haven, the top two teams in the Division II poll this season. UMass is third and Army is fourth. The two Division 1 teams present will prepare the spikers for next season when they move into the tough Atlantic 10 Conference, considered one of the best volleyball leagues in America.

The UMass baseball team in its first fall scrimmage, crushed Springfield College 15-2. Bobby Kostro and Tom Fabian homered for UMass

UM out to prove itself vs. Holy Cross

Tailback George Barnwell will be back starting for the University of Massachusetts on Saturday against Holy Cross at 1:30 p.m.

Defense must stop Fenerty to keep Minutemen in game, injuries mount

By PETER ABRAHAM

Just how good the University of Massachusetts football team is will be decided on Saturday as the Minutemen host powerful Holy Cross at Alumni Stadium.

UMass is 1-1, pounding hapless Morgan State 38-9 before being edged by Richmond 19-14. The Morgan State victory was expected, but Richmond, potentially the best team in Division 1-AA, was expected to blow out the Minutemen. UMass led 14-13 at halftime, only to lose on a halfback option pass.

"This will be a good test for our team, I'm interested to see what happens," said UMass coach Bob Stull. "Holy Cross, in my opinion, is one of the finest 1-AA teams in the country. They are a different team than Richmond in certain aspects. We have to play well to win, and I thing we can do that."

It will also be a different UMass team than the one that faced Richmond. Starting tailback anc co-captain George Barnwell is back, recovered from a shoulder injury suffered against Morgan State. But starting defensive tackle Bruce Strange has been sidelined with a twisted knee. Kickoff and punt returner Andrew Thomas will not dress due to a pulled muscle. Reserve linebacker Dan Sullivan has an eye infection and may not play while backup linebacker Jim Vertucci is expected to play despite a head injury.

"It was nice to have the depth, but now it will be tested," said Stull. "Strange could play, it just takes a while for his knee to recover. Not having Thomas really hurts our return teams. We'll have to adjust."

Mike Kowalski, a 6-5, 240 pound junior, will start for Strange. Kevin Smellie, a 5-11, 175 pound freshman from Canada will return kickoffs with seniors John Crowley and Paul Platek running back punts. Rich Philpott, a 6-1, 215 pound junior, will back up at linebacker.

The UMass defense, quickly becoming one of the best against the run in 1-AA, will be put to the test by Crusader tailback Gill Fenerty. The Holy Cross running back rushed for 230 yards last week against Colgate (a come-from-behind 24-21 Holy Cross victory). The LSU transfer has the Cross career record with 2,542 yards.

"Fenerty is as good a back as we'll face all season," Stull said. "He's tough to stop, but our defense has been tough against the run too."

UMass has allowed only an average of 79 yards a game on the ground shutting down both Morgan State's Alphonso Harris and Richmond's Greg Grooms. The Minutemen have pressured the backfield successfully so far this season, recording four sacks of quarterbacks and 11 running backs sacks (hits for a loss).

Leading the defense has been freshman inside linebacker John McKeown. The 5-11, 215 pounder played scout team fullback as a redshirt last season before being moved to linebacker this spring.

McKeown leads UMass in tackles with 28 (15 primary). He has one pass break-up and three running back sacks.

Field hockey loses its first, to Iowa, 2-0

DURHAM N.H.—The seventh ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team dropped its first decision of the season, 2-0 to the second ranked University of Iowa here yesterday.

The Minutweomen dominated the game, holding the upper hand in territorial advantage. Continually attacking in the Iowa zone, UMass outhustled and out played the Hawkeyes, holding the edge in shots, 21-18, and corners, 11-7.

"We clearly dominated play the entire game. We just couldn't capitalize on our offensive opportunities," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said.

During each half, UMass managed to put the ball past the goalkeeper only to be denied by a pair of defensive gems by the Iowa defense. Both opportunities came off of corners, initiating a scramble in front of the Iowa net.

Iowa finally broke the scoreless tie midway through the second half with one of only three second period shots on net. rossanna Salico socred off of a corner from the top right of the circle on a drive that eluded UMass goalie Lynn Carlson. The Hawkeyes added their second tally ten minutes later on another corner.

"Their goalie kept them in the game," Hixon said. "She really made the difference. I'm sorry we lost but I don't feel badly because it showed me some things the team has to work on. But that's all right early in the season."

Despite the loss, Hixon was particularly pleased with the efforts of her defensive corps, especially the play of senior midfielder Chris Kocot, senior defenseman Megan Donnelly and Carlson. Hixon also cited freshman attacker Ruth Vasapolli as the game's most consistent offensive performer.

"Our deffense played ver well, the whole team did. We just couldn't string the offense together," Hixon said. "It's not very often that you see a team make twao plays like they did in the same game."

UMass, now 3-1, takes on Providence College at 3:30 p.m. this coming Thursday at NOPE field.

UMass Weekend Previews

Women's soccer hosting Rochester

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Correspondent

The second-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team puts its 3-0 record on the line Saturday as the Minutewomen take on the University of Rochester.

In addition to the women's soccer, UMass has a full slate of athletic events on tap as the fall schedule has kicked into its highest gear.

The undefeated volleyball team will face a severe test at the Central Connecticut Tournament as two Division 1 teams and the four best Division 2 teams in the Northeast will be competing with UMass for the title. The Minutewomen are 7-0 and winners of one tournament already this season, the UMass Invitationals last weekend.

"The tourney will let us know where we stand," said UM volleyball coach Elaine Sortino. "We've looked pretty strong so far although there are still plenty of things to work on. This is the type of tournament that will help us grow. Our young players will be tested by some good teams."

The men's soccer team, also streaking with three consecutive wins and a 4-2 record, is in the Iona Tournament at Iona College in New York.

The Minutemen defeated the University of New Hampshire 3-2 in double overtime on Wednesday as senior forward Ferdie Adoboe stole a Wildcat pass and scored the winning goal with a great two-on-one move.

"We're really playing some great soccer," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "Ferdie is coming along and we're getting great defense from our midfielders and defenders. If we keep up our consistency, we'll do very well in this tournament."

The Manny Roberts-coached UMass men's tennis team, 1-1 on the season after losing 5-4 to New Hampshire, will face a tough Boston University team in Boston on Saturday at 1 p.m. The men, playing in their last season as a varsity sport, will play only one more home match this season (Oct. 5 against Vermont).

The women's golf team will host the Hickory Ridge Invitationals on Saturday in other UMass action this weekend.

Women's soccer coach Kalekeni Banda, whose team has outscored opponents 20-0 so far this season and outshot them 77-2,

UMass is back, rocking Holy Cross 27-3, Palazzi hurt

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts football is back.

After three seasons of disappointments, the Minutemen have returned with a vengeance, pounding Holy Cross 27-3 before 13,814 fans Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

"There's a hell of a difference between this team now and this team a year ago," said UMass coach Bob Stull, who took 13 games to rebuild UMass into the Division 1-AA terrors they were just four seasons ago.

"I'm not going to say we're a great team," said Stull. "But I don't think there's a team in our division we aren't capable of beating. 'We've proved a lot today."

The Minutemen, 21, can expect a ranking in the 1-AA Top 20 after Saturday's effort, easily the best game any current UMass student has seen, but the game proved costly as freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi will miss a minimum of six games with a shoulder separation.

Palazzi, who as a freshman has sparked a revitalized UMass offense, was injured with 3:09 left in the third quarter as Holy Cross defensive end Tom Patton buried him after he released a 13-yard touchdown pass to senior flanker John Crowley that put UMass ahead 13-3.

As of Sunday night, Palazzi was diagnosed as having a second degree separation that will not require surgery. He will miss at least six weeks, putting him back in the lineup no earlier than November 9th against Delaware.

Senior Jim Simeone, who Palazzi beat out for the starting job, replaced the freshman and was 1-for-3 for eight yards. He directed two short scoring drives.

An unidentified man inspects damage to a porch that collapsed during a party in Amherst Saturday night, hurling 35 people to the ground and injuring seven, police said.

Seven injured in collapse

3 admitted for back injuries

Seven people were injured at a party Saturday when a porch collapsed at a house at 180 Market Hill Road, plunging about 35 people 12 feet to the ground, Amherst police said.

The injured were transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton by seven ambulances from Amherst and surrounding areas.

Three University of Massachusetts students with back injuries were transferred from Cooley Dickinson to University Health Services, where they were reported in stable condition last night, according to Jessica Tropp, nursing supervisor.

The other victims were treated and released, according to several people at the scene.

Two of the injured who remained hosptialized are Susan Thomas, a junior economics major, and Stacey Levine.

No other information on any of the remaining injured was available last night.

"One side went down, then the other side went down—it took two seconds," said a resident of the house who asked not to be identified. "We had some parents up here after the (UMass) football game, we're just lucky it didn't happen then."

The party had been going for about a half-hour when the porch, on the rear of the house, fell at about 11:30 p.m., strewing people and furniture in the yard and down a hill, eyewitnesses said.

Eyewitnesses estimated between 25 and 50 people were on the porch when it collapsed. Residents of the house said the porch was "obviously rotted," but showed no signs of being unstable.

It's definitely not a good way to end the night or the weekend," one person who asked not to be identified said.

Protesters rally against apartheid

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

It began with a march of 250 from Amherst Common to the University of Massachusetts campus. Then, atop a stage on Metawampe lawn, were the speakers—students, faculty and guests—all with a common message: "Freedom yes, apartheid no, death to apartheid blow by blow," as the marchers put it.

It was "Freedom Friday for South Africa," a day conceived by a Mount Holyoke student to protest the injustices of apartheid. It drew organizers and participants from the entire five college community, as well as some guests—although Mel King, former Boston mayoral candidate and Rainbow Coalition member, did not appear as scheduled, a member of the banned African National Congress was on hand. And though there were sunny skies and summer temperatures, the tone was serious, as were the diatribes against the Reagan administration and other conservatives, whom speakers deemed racist and ignorant of the struggles of South African blacks.

"It is curious that America's democratic commitment seems to dissolve when the people involved happen to be black," said Michael Thelwell, a professor of Afro-American studies at UMass and member of the valley's South African Liberation Committee. He said the Reagan administration is "overtly racist in its behavior and attitudes that should be something of concern to all Americans of all good will."

If Friday's rally had been held in South Africa, Thelwell said, "you would have been dispersed, many heads would have been broken, some of you would have disappeared . . . and you would know (there was) no recourse for you under the process of law."

"This government's posture is the worst example of racist hypocrisy from the American government since I've been in this country. The message is very clear—we don't care how much you suffer, we don't care how much you die," Thelwell said.

Themba Ntinga, a member of the banned ANC, commended the crowd for its solidarity "in our struggle against facism," and called for the dismissal of charges against all students arrested following a sit-in in University Treasurer Robert Brand's office last semester. He also called for the restitution of the ANC and the release of South African student activists as well as those arrested ina SUNY-Albany protest.

Ntinga also called for the establishment of a group to monitor investment portfolios to ensure that future investments in companies operating in South Africa do not occur by organizations that have already divested. Of the five colleges, UMass and Hampshire College have completely divested, while Amherst College has divested $7 million and Mount Holyoke $450,000. Those schools still

Death toll rises

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexicans buried their dead yesterday and prayed there were more living as rescue teams, bolstered by aid from around the world, worked to remove the devastation left by twin earthquakes.

Mayor Ramon Aguirre said 1,641 bodies were recovered and 2,000 more remained trapped under collapsed buildings and were feared dead.

Other officials said 6,000 people were injured in the jolts Thursday and Friday that left the center of the city in shambles.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Dan Lawler said the Mexican government had raised the official death toll to 3,461.

Four Americans have been confirmed killed, Lawler said. The death of a fifth U.S. citizen, in Acapulco, was unrelated to the quake, Lawler said.

Thousands of people, many wearing masks against the smell, passed slowly through makeshift morgues, looking for familiar faces among decomposing bodies.

Authorities, worried about the threat of disease, said bodies unclaimed after 48 hours would be buried in mass graves.

"Most of them are unidentified," said Red Cross Lt. Uri Fridman at the Old Segure baseball park, which was turned into a morgue.

ELBOW-TO-ELBOW — Nearly eighty thousand rock, country and blues fans jammed the field of University of Illinois Memorial Stadium yesterday for Farm Aid, a festival to aid the Nation's farmers. The concert was organized by singer-entertainer Willie Nelson, and featured artists such as Neil Young, Carole King and the band "X."

Burford jailed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Environmental Protection Agency chief Anne M. Burford was charged with public drunkenness after police said she cursed and yelled at authorities booking her husband on a drunken driving charge.

Mrs. Burford was arrested and detained four hours early Saturday at the Arlington County, Va., jail where her husband, Robert Burford, a top Interior Department official, was being booked, said Sheriff James A. Gondles.

Gondles, quoting reports by jail officials, said Sunday that Mrs. Burford was arrested after she allegedly yelled and cursed at a magistrate and desk clerk in the lobby.

The sheriff said Mrs. Burford demanded to be let into the jail offices to see her husband and repeatedly rang a buzzer to gain entrance after being told she could not enter the facility.

Rebels sacked

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Nearly 500 South African troops yesterday ended their weeklong invasion of Marxist Angola after killing 15 guerrillas and capturing 49, the military said.

The strike achieved "large-scale disruption" of the command structure and supply lines of rebels fighting South African rule in South-West Africa, said Maf. Gen. George Meiring.

The Angolan raid provoked widespread condemnation from Western governments. South Africa also was criticized after admitting it had aided anti-Marxist rebels in Mozambique, the region's other former Portuguese colony, in violation of a peace treaty with that country.

Within South Africa, police headquarters reported sporadic anti-apartheid rioting in black townships in the Cape Town area, the eastern Cape Province and near Johannesburg, but no deaths.

The South Africans said they stormed into Angola last Monday to attack an estimated 400 to 800 guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization, or SWAPO.

University of Massachusetts Greek area members help construct a playground in the early morning fog Saturday at the Fort River Elementary School on South East Street in Amherst.

Play area built by Greeks and children opens today

By ALYSSA BRENNAN
Collegian Correspondent

The grand opening of a play area build by Fort River Elementary School children and 400 volunteers from the University of Massachusetts Greek fraternity and sorority system will be held this morning at the elementary school in Amherst.

UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey will attend the ribbon cutting ceremony today, celebrating the completion of the past week's four-day building project.

The construction of an amphitheater and 180 play stations began Thursday while the school children washed tires, sanded wood and helped the students complete the community service project.

"We're glad to be down here," Rich Stanton from Sigma Phi Epsilon said Friday, "Everyone is really getting into it. They (the kids) are really fascinated by our ditch digging abilities."

Duffey arrived on the scene Friday morning to help with the work. The chancellor purchased several boards for the construction after he received the request from a third grade student in April.

The plans for the play area originated last February when architect Bob Leathers met with the school children to organize their ideas. Coordinators Judith Wiephaler and Stephanie Joyce then began to raise funds for the play area, which is valued at over $100,000.

Joyce said the University Greek system and various community businesses donated building materials snd volunteered to build the playground, eliminated approximately $12,000 from the overall cost.

Former CIA officer to appear on panel

Formulation of a formal search committee for a new director of the University of Massachusetts Affirmation Action and Equal Opportunity Office to replace Thelma Griffith-Johnson, who died of cancer in August, will be postponed until early November, Provost Richard O'Brien said Friday.

In a memo expected to be sent today to vice chancellors, deans, directors and department heads, O'Brien said he will be taking time to review the future directions of the office and the type of director it should have before forming the committee.

"I want to talk with people and invite them to share with me their views," O'Brien said. "I want to meet with the people who have a special interest in this office."

Ron J. Sincacore, acting director of the office since October, 1984, when Director Thelma Griffith-Johnson first became ill, said he has submitted to O'Brien, in O'Brien's capacity of executive vice chancellor, a list of the office's priorities "to help him (O'Brien) better understand and to better get a feeling as to what the campus constituencies want," Sinacore said.

"It is important to understand the problems of the office before any decision is made." Sinacore said.

Both men emphasize the involvement of the campus community throughout the search.

"It is critical," Sinacore said, "that we not rush into any issues without first consulting the campus community."

According to Sinacore, there are three ways to find a director: a national or an internal (campus wide) search, or a member of the office staff could be promoted.

The input of the campus community, the Provost and the Affirmative Action Office will help to decide which of these options is best for the office.

"I want this office to be a symbol for the whole campus, showing the way we do things here," O'Brien said.

Refugees decry U.S. military aid

"We are afraid of being assassinated. We cannot go back to our country, so we are here." —Saul, Salvadoran refugee.

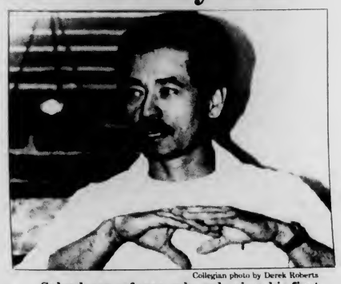
These words are typical testimony from refugees who, despite their constant fear of persecution, spoke last night in the Amherst area as part of the Salvadoran and Guatemalan Caravan for Peace and Justice in Central America that began Sept. 9 in Boston and will end Oct. 9 in Washington, D.C.

Eleven refugees are making their way through the Northeast to communicate the real political situations of their countries.

"We are risking ourselves by being here in this caravan. We believe it is more important, however, to let you know what is happening to thousands of people in our country," Salvadoran refugee Efrain said to an audience of 30 at the Newman Center.

Efrain fled El Salvador in 1980 and entered the U.S. illegally after the army invaded his farm and left four family members dead.

Since 1979, 60,000 people have been killed in El Salvador; another 60,000 have fled the country like Efrain; 5,00 Salvadorans have disappeared.



His compatriot Saul, a former electrical engineering student said, "We would like to see a political solution to our problems. Talk to your Congressperson. You are the ones who have to work, that's why we talk to you and believe in you."

He asked a crowd of 50 people last night in Bangs Community Center to write letters to Congress, asking for the end of U.S. military aid to the Salvadoran government.

The five refugees who came to the Amherst area made three other requests: that people show their support for the Moakley Deconcini bill, which will suspend for two years the deportation of Salvadorans living in the U.S.; that they support the Ted Weiss bill, which provides the same conditions for Guatemalans; and that U.S. citizens demand the end of the extensive bombing of the Salvadoran countryside and killing of the Salvadoran people, which is funded by U.S. military aid.

"The U.S. says there has been progress, but there has only been more and more bombings. They (the Salvadoran government) are killing with North American taxes and the war is escalating. We want you to think about that," Carlos, 39, said to the Newman Center audience.

All the refugees emphasized their neutral political position and their desire to return to their homes and families once the political conflict is solved.

David MacMichael, a former CIA estimates officer who recently returned from the Hague where he has been testifying before the World Court, will be a guest speaker for a special panel discussion on "U.S. Options in Central America: Intervention, Escalation, or Negotiation?", at 8:00 p.m., Monday, Sept. 23 in the Student Union Ballroom.

MacMichael, who had access to "top secret" classified intelligence data coming from Central America, testified last week about arms smuggling. He said there has been no "massive or continuing flood" of arms from Nicaragua to the El Salvadoran insurgents since at least the spring, 1981.

MacMichael replaces Colonel Edward L. King, who was scheduled to participate in the program but is unable to attend. Another addition to the panel discussion is guest speaker W. Bruce Weinrod, director of Foreign Policy and Defense Studies at The Hertiage Foundation in Washington D.C., who will be appearing in lieu of a representative from the U.S. State Department.

The third panelist will be Janet Shenk, executive director of the North American Congress on Latin America.

Moderator for the panel will be Noia Reinhardt, assistant professor of economics at Amith College.

MacMicheal maintains that U.S. support for the contras is part of a larger subordination of the intelligence process to the administration's already formulated policies for Central America. He said he fears that misuse of the intelligence system has led to the pursuit of policies in Central America and will lead to direct U.S. military intervention in the region in the near future. For this reason, he decided to report the information now.

have $15 and $15-20 million respectively invested in such companies.

Smith College's Charles Johnson, associate treasurer, would not give details of that school's portfolio over the phone.

Other speakers at the rally, which drew 300-400 people at its peak, included Stacy Roth, co-president of the UMass student government, undergraduate student Speaker John Ruddock and other student leaders and professors from area colleges.

Roth asked for a moment of silence for those "who've died for the cause of freedom in South Africa." Roth said, "the momentum among the students of our nation is building . . . we must keep the momentum going, apartheid can exist no more."

Get to the answers faster. With the TI-55-II.
What you need to tackle the higher mathematics of a science or engineering curriculum are more functions – more functions than a simple slide-rule calculator has.
Enter the TI-55-II, with 112 powerful functions. You can work faster and more accurately with the TI-55-II, because it's preprogrammed to perform complex calculations – like definite integrals, linear regression and hyperbolics – at the touch of a button. And it can also be programmed to do repetitive problems without re-entering the entire formula.
Included is the Calculator Decision-Making Sourcebook. It makes the process of using the TI-55-II even simpler, and shows you how to use all the power of the calculator.

The game of human rights

Bill Cole

P.W. was open in the corner. I tried getting to him, but I couldn't get around a pick by Pat Buccanan and George Wallace. The ball swung around to him and he launched one of his deadly "martial law" jumpers. P.W. and I have been buddies for years and he and his brothers have always been great shooters. Now, Fate had made us opponents, but I didn't have to watch his shot to know it was going in.

The crowd sank back into their seats as doom set in over their hometown heroes. The white team from Pretoria was not up by one with only 14 seconds left on the clock. Tears were streaming down the face of one of our cheerleaders, a Black girl who'd seen many losses to the Pretorians in the last few years. Up at the top of the stands was my best friend Jerry. He was the only fan in the place cheering (the Pretorians didn't have any fans here). Jumping up and down clappin' his hands, everybody else was looking at him with a combination of pity and disgust. I guess he didn't understand that we were losing.

In the front row sat my girlfriend, Nancy. She was smiling broadly as she brushed some lint from the red Halston that she'd gotten for being secretary of the Student Council. Her eyes, like black holes, called out to me to gaze into their deep emptiness but I couldn't. There were 14 seconds left, and I knew what I had to do . . . sort of.

"Schultzie" inbounded the ball to me and I looked over to the bench. "Should I call timeout?" I asked Coach Tutu. "No! Get 'em before they set up their defense. Take it to the basket!" he yelled back. I crossed midcourt and looked up at the clock. Ten seconds left. Dribbling to the left, I looked inside to our big man, Teddy Kennedy. A little heavier than his brothers, Ted wasn't as good during "crunch time" as John and Bobby had been. Teddy was calling for the ball, but I pivoted and dribbled back toward the top of the key.

"Should I shoot or pass off?" I thought to myself. I backed in on Botha, unsure whether to challenge him or try a fadeaway. Nellie Mandela was open on the left wing looking for a pass. He was a good player inside, but lacked a soft touch. The crowd was roaring now, no doubt buoyed by the thought that we could still win it. I wasn't sure what to do. Coach was shakin' his head—I guess in disbelief that I was so poised.

Then I decided it was time to take action. I faked a drive to the basket and pulled up for a fadeaway. There was a loud buzzing in my ears, probably from the excitement. The Pretoria players were jumping up and down screaming—I guess to try to distract me. I released my shot, but noticed that the clock said no time left—was I too late? The ball bricked off the front rim, falling to the floor like impotent sanctions.

Now the crowd is weeping in despair, my teamates are shaking their heads, and Coach is pulling his hair out by the handfuls. Jerry runs down out of the stands and shakes my hand telling me I'm the greatest. I run over to where Nancy is sitting. She is looking straight ahead with that same broad smile on her face, as if I hadn't just blown the big game! That's why I love her so. She is there for me no matter what, and that's all I need! After all, I gave it my best try, didn't I?

Anyway there is more to life than this silly game of human rights . . . next week is the big hockey game against the Moscow Red Devils!

Inner celebration can be just as fulfilling for some

Jill Lang

I was walking through the Student Union Building last week when I noticed a group of well dressed people milling around the lobby. It took me a few minutes, but when I noticed the sun going and the chairs set up in the ballroom, I realized it was the first night of the holiest time on the Jewish calendar. It was Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, and the beginning of the ten days of atonement.

For a few minutes, I stood and watched the people and then I turned and walked toward the library, which was my original destination. Until that moment, I had forgotten about the holiday, considered it only for a few minutes, but then I left to study and forget again.

I am Jewish and I am proud of my heritage. Both my mother and my grandmother called, that is, they took time from their day to remind me that this weekend was the holiday. Still, I forgot. Still, I am Jewish, and still, I am proud.

A part of me wants to go to services, and wants to celebrate my heritage and religion with others. A part of me is a student and a writer, and that part of me has no time for such things. There is also a part of me that wants to celebrate my heritage each and every day, and most especially on holidays, but this part cannot deal with hypocrisy it sees in attending organized events.

I am content, you see, to celebrate the what and the who I am within myself. As much as I want to go to the high holiday services, I cannot go there in good conscience.

When I was living at home, I went to services with my parents and sometimes with my grandparents. When I moved to Amherst, I still went to services, but only for my first year. I have not been to an organized religious service for several years now, and I do not miss it. I do not feel it is necessary to attend such services in order to celebrate a holiday, festival or cultural experience.

Last week, I thought that what I felt was apathy—and there were those around me who reinforced this feeling in me. I felt guilty for a time, because I was not going to services and I was not celebrating a holiday in the "proper" manner. This year, when I told my grandmother falsely, that "of course I am going to services," she replied, "That's my good Jewish girl."

As I walked toward the library again I felt guilty and got down on myself for being apathetic and lazy. Why wasn't I there with those other people, celebrating the holiday as I had celebrated it so many time before? There are many answers to that question, and I think I am just beginning to find the first ones.

Right now, I think that is all I need to feel secure about the holidays and the way they should be celebrated. It is not the same for me, going to services without my family, but I do not want to go to services and sit through them, feeling like some sort of hypocrite because I was there physically and not spiritually. I would rather not go at all than sit in the face of my heritage, feeling like a hypocrite.

In my own eyes, I am not a bad Jew, and no matter what people tell me about what they think a good Jew should be and should not be, I will still be a good Jew. I live my culture every day. I can never forget what I have been taught about my heritage, and I cannot forget the suffering which has been experienced by Jews before me.

What is important is the inward expression of a celebration, not necessarily an outward one.

Shoplifting affects us all

You are casually browsing through the canned goods aisle in the supermarket when you notice a cloaked figure nonchantly tuck a can of chicken noodle into their voluminous pocket. "A shoplifter!" you realize angrily. As you watch the security guard escort the protesting person to the main office, you feel justice has been done. How can we expect prices to stay low when people shoplift?

Unfortunately, in the UMass dining commons there are no guards, no electric eyes, no sirens. Who would want them and still feel comfortable eating there? However, shoplifting occurs regularly in the DCs; especially during the first three weeks of the semester.

Ten thousand dollars ($10,000) is spent annually to replace trays, plates, dishes, silverware, glasses, coffee mugs, etc.. When you consider the millions of dollars in the UMass budget, $10,000 may not seem like much. What many people don't realize, though, is that the food service department at UMass doesn't receive any aid from the government, unlike other departments. Also, food services employs 1,500 students and feeds 11,000 people.

The meal plan system is based on an absenteeism policy. In other words, an average student "misses" approximately 15 to 17 percent of the semester's meals, and thus the $529 (14-plan) covers only 80 percent of all the meals offered. This sounds like a break—however, costs are rising.

Remember that annual loss of $10,000? Food Services Director of Operation Dick Rossi told me, "Our salaries are pretty much set; if we had that extra $10,000, it would go towards food. Maybe steak two nights a month instead of one." Rossi has 19 years of experience in a food service oriented career. And not only at UMass, but with professional athletes as well. "I believe in variety. We (UMass) comply with the regular dietary requirements, but it's important for everyone to be responsible for their own nutrition," he told me.

The DCs offer a lot of variety. However, they could continue, and even expand, the wide range of food available if less money were needed for replacement costs.

Why the pilferage? Perhaps the vast size of the University creates the illusion that a few missing items won't matter. Some students feel they spend so much on the plan that they need something tangible in return. ((More tangible than unlimited food 3 times daily?) Some students merely don't view taking dishes from the DC's as plain and simple shoplifting. Motives are nebulous. One concrete fact is that we can get an edge on rising costs of education by not indirectly raising the prices ourselves. Every bit of consideration counts!

Area governments and ideology

Something is terribly amiss with the Commuter Area Government. For me, this became apparent when that staff attempted to appoint three "progressive" students as student senators on Sept. 11, although eight commuter senator seats were vacant.

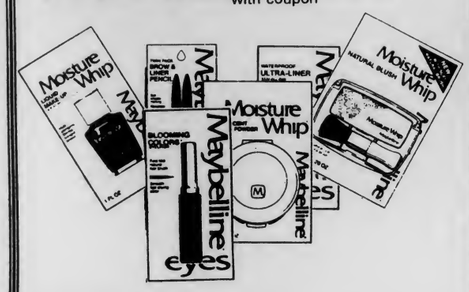
Though these three applicants were unanimously approved by the Commuter Area Governing Board, three other applicants, including myself, were said to needed "further review" to determine whether we were committed to commuter issues and the SGA.

Where was CAG spokesperson David Martin coming from when he informed the SGA that we three need to be interviewed further to insure our commitment? Speaking for myself, a senator for nearly two years and current SGA Budgets Committee Chairman, I would say my committment is readily apparent. Does Martin truly believe I have failed to show my committment to my respective constituency, or to the SGA? I believe there are other motives behind his actions.

I'll be the first to admit that I have a conservative streak within me, especially toward fiscal issues. Could my political leanings have been an underlying reason for my initial rejection? Regrettably, it seems so.

The CAG has once again placed politics before students. It seems leftist "progressivism" is the sole criteria for senatorial appointment. The ultimate loser in this sad state of affairs is the commuter student. Realizing this, the student senate tabled commuter appointments, finally forcing Martin to appoint all those who applied.

However, the opportunity for change is now upon us. We can bring the CAG back to commuter students. If you are anything but left-wing, radical, or "progressive," this may be your only chance to get involved in the SGA or the CAG. If you allow this chance to slip by, you will be in the same situation I was in—without an appointment because you don't agree with the CAG political ideology.



I urge you to pick up nomination papers today and get involved. These are due at 4 p.m. tomorrow in Room 420 of the Student Union Building. The deadline is fast approaching—that is, unless you are a left-wing, radical, i.e. "progressive."

Then get in on the ground floor in our undergraduate officer commissioning program. You could start planning on a career like the men in this ad have. And also have some great advantages like:

- Earning $100 a month during the school year
- As a freshman or sophomore, you could complete your basic training during two six-week summer sessions and earn more than $1100 during each session
- Juniors earn more than $1900 during one ten-week summer session
- You can take free civilian flying lessons
- You're commissioned upon graduation

If you're looking to move up quickly, look into the Marine Corps undergraduate officer commissioning program. You could start off making more than $17,000 a year.

We're looking for a few good men.

ARTS

Dancer is "phenomenal"

TIM WENGERD
Friday, September 13
Kirby Theater

By ANNE D. CHENEY
Collegian Staff

Friday night's performance by Tim Wengerd was presented by Amherst College's Department of Theater and Dance, as the first of two programs to be shown at the Kirby on 'The Art of Solo Dance.' Tim Wengerd is a former principal of the Martha Graham Dance Company; since his departure from Graham he has embarked on a solo career, performing his own works. Friday's concert showed four of these works, choreographed between 1982 and the present.

The good news about the performance is that Wengerd is a phenomenal dancer, with a great deal of energy and stage presence. Also, the lighting—designed by Jody Steiger—was stunningly beautiful in its simplicity. The colors were vibrant but tasteful, and the contrasts created between performer and stage added to the choreography immeasurably.

The bad news is that Wengerd's choreography suffers many of the problems typical of a relatively new choreographer. Having danced many years in the Graham style, he has become so caught up in her technique that he has not yet developed his own style, which would show his personality and ideas more clearly. His two other major problems are an excessive repetitiveness and a tendency to let his pieces go on for too long, when his ideas could better have been shown in a shorter time period and kept the audience's attention throughout.

For all these problems, however, Wengerd does have quirky, interesting ideas that give one a sense of his potential as a choreographer. All in all, the performance wa an enjoyable one, for it was sparked by the excitement and awe elicited by the sight of a master dancer in command of the stage.

Just a few quick notes from Artslines this week . . .

Arts in America: Now and the Next Ten Years is the name of the arts symposium going on at the Fine Arts Center (FAC) at 2 p.m. today . . .

There will also be big goings-on at the FAC on Sunday, with an 8 p.m. performance of the British comedy, "Noises Off . . ."

Aspiring performers, take note: The New World Theater will hold auditions 7-9 p.m., today and tomorrow, in room 2 of the FAC. The Mass. Youth Wind Ensemble will hold auditions as follows: Woodwinds, 3-6:30 p.m. tomorrow; brass, 3-6 p.m., Thursday; and percussion, 6-6:45 p.m., Thursday. Auditions will be held in the FAC, room 251, and should include a prepared solo or etude, and scales of varying articulation. So break a leg.

UMass professor David Sporny will offer a trombone recital at 8 p.m., Thursday, at Bezanson Recital Hall . . .

Portraits from Post-War Germany will be on display at the Hampden Gallery, now through Oct. 4.

Belkin did it to 'em again, rising to the occasion this time with a solo shot. Taking the ball from half field, she evaded a host of Yellow Jacket defenders and drilled a rocket in the far left corner. Her goal came quickly into the half at 38:39 and it would take another half an hour before things were finalized.

The ball, unlike during the first half, was held mainly between the midfield and deep into Yellow Jacket territory. Deep in Yellow Jacket territory was the scene for the capper.

A joint effort, the third goal was one that just had to make it. With Byers thoroughly shell shocked and Yellow Jacket defenders doing little against the home team rush, freshman forward Beth Roundtree pushed one through. Catherine Spence fed a strong pass to Spence, who knocked an easy one past the exhausted Byers, ending the scoring at 8:46.

Tuesday, UMass will host New England rival Brown at Boyden (3 p.m.).

Reid's explanation: 'refusal to be beaten'

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It was taped to the blackboard in the team meeting room, a picture of Holy Cross tailback Gill Fenerty with the heading from Sports Illustrated above it and the words "Gill the Thrill" along the side.

The picture was ripped in half and the holding chairs tossed about the meeting room, evidence of a team with a mission.

Gill "The Thrill" Fenerty and Holy Cross had everything figured out. The fourth straight victory over the University of Massachusetts would be featured in Sports Illustrated and the Crusaders would continue their domination of New England 1-AA football.

Fenerty however, forgot to check with the UMass defense before posing for his pictures and a fired-up group of Minutemen put a chill on The Thrill, leading a 27-3 destruction of the Cross.

"It was a refusal to be beaten," said defensive coordinator Jim Reid. "They were on the goal line and we threw them back. Fenerty got the ball and we pounded him. We're playing defense like we're on fire. It's a great thing to watch."

Coach Reid calls goaline defense a character builder," said tackle Mike Kowalski. "Well, we're showing a lot of character this season. We're playing like we can. UMass is back."

Freshman linebacker John McKeown, the player-of-the-game as voted by the press corps, sacked quarterback Dave Hock in the fourth quarter on a key fourth-and-six, on a blitz he called himself.

"We had called another blitz, one that John's not involved in," explained head coach Bob Stull. "He came up and told us, 'Eagle Blitz, Eagle Blitz,' I saw the look in his eyes and let him go for it."

McKeown buried Hock on the play. As nose guard Mike Dwyer contended with a triple team, McKeown shot the gap and was on the quarterback's shoulder before he had time to turn around.

"We're playing with a lot of heart, we're accomplishing our goals and we're having fun," said McKeown. "This team has come a long way. UMass football is back where it belongs."

The Minutemen entered the game among the nation's leaders in total defense and defense against the run and figure to move up in both categories. A national 1-AA ranking is probable later this week.

"Were they something or what?" asked Reid. "We were all over them. These kids have a lot of guts. The defense is setting the tone."

It's been a long time for this UMass team, three straight losing years aren't easy to live with. They came to the university with high expectations that, until now, weren't achieved.

Eight games remain, a long time, but the University of Massachusetts has posted notice to the rest of Division 1-AA, the Minutemen will not be pushed around anymore. Welcome back, UMass football.

Volleyball rolls on, goes 12-0 at tourney

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

If there existed any doubts about how good the University of Massachusetts volleyball team could be this year, all one would need to do is look at the havoc the Minutewomen wreaked in New Britain, Connecticut over the weekend.

Anchored by a relentless offensive attack, the spikers dominated the field on their way to their second tournament champio)nshiµ in as many weeks. The spikers swept Division II power University of New Haven to capture first place honors at the Central Connecticut Invitational Tournament. The tournament victory raises the Minutewomen's record to a perfect 12-0.

UMass also swept Central Connecticut State University and division one rival Northeastern University, and defeated Lehigh University and the University of Hartford in three games on the road to the championship.

As has been the norm so far this season, the Minutewomen overpowered opponents with tough serving and aggressive blocking, an element that was missing last season. Sophomore middle hitter March Guiliotis and freshman middle hitter Barbara Meehan continually kept enemy hitters at bay. Meehan played a major role in the spiker's victory over New Haven, putting down several key blocks during the course of the match.

Saturday's victories over New Haven and Northeastern, in addition to the spikers unbeaten record, should catapult UMass into the number one ranking in the Northeast poll to be released today. Northeastern and New Haven were ranked ahead of UMass number one and two, respectively, before the tourney. The Minutewomen were ranked third in the poll.

"We were really tired from our three game match with Hartford," said senior co-captain Ann Ringrose. "We had to jump into the Northeastern match right after we were finished with Hartford."

"They (Northeastern) played good defense against us," added Ringrose. "They dug up a lot of our hits. But we served and blocked well and that made the difference."

The schedule doesn't get any easier for the spikers. UMass will lock horns with an upset-minded Holy Cross on Tuesday before prepping for this weekends UMass Classic Volleyball Tournament. Both Northeastern and New Haven should be in attendance and UMass victories over either squad could land the Minutewomen a spot in the Division II national volleyball rankings.

Head coach Elaine Sortino was unavailable for comment at press time.

SPORTS

Defense stars as Minutemen rout HC, 27-3

The injuries aside, the game belonged to the UMass defense. Led by game most-valuable-player John McKeown, the Minutemen held the Crusaders to just 286 yards of total offense and a mere 60 on the ground.

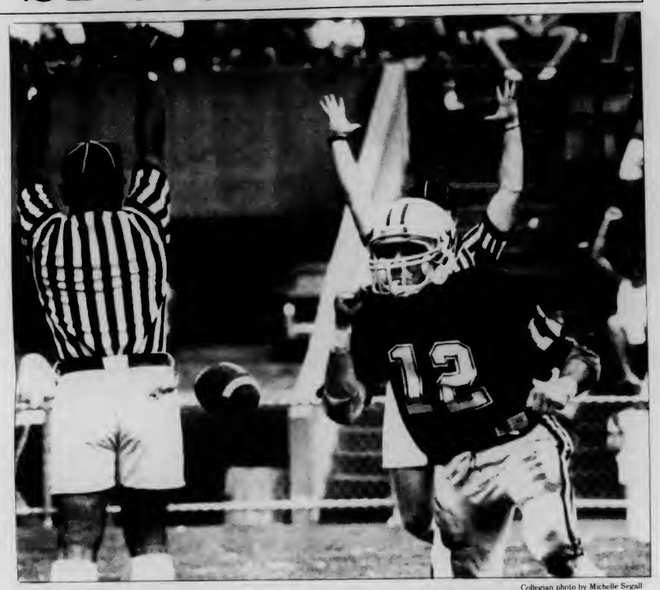
"Our defense, once again, dominated the game," said Stull. "We stuck to our gameplan and just flat out played hard. McKeown is a great player who deserves the recognition, but the entire defensive unit was great."

McKeown, a freshman redshirt at inside linebacker, resided in the Holy Cross backfield. He made eight tackles, recovered two fumbles, broke up a pass and sacked Holy Cross quarterback Dave Hock on a key fourth-and-six on UMass' 11 in the fourth period.

McKeown also played a large role in shutting down Holy Cross all-american tailback Gill Fenerty. Fenerty, with Sports Illustrated waiting to take of his expected romp over the Minutemen, had 15 punishing carries for 55 yards, his lowest total in 15 games dating back to 1983.

Holy Cross, in fact, suffered its worst defeat by a Division 1-AA team since Rick Carter became coach in 1981. It was the fewest points scored by a Holy Cross team in 50 games and the only team a Carter-coached Crusader team has been held without a touchdown. The UMass defense has allowed only one touchdown (that on a halfback option) and help opponents to an average of 72.6 yards rushing a game this season.

The UMass offense (18 first downs, 7-of-18 in third down conversions, 326 yards of offense, over 10 minutes more of possesion time and only one fumble) managed only two field goals in the first half as the Cross defense proved tough under the hot sun.



Freshman Silvio Bonvini booted field goals of 25 and 21 yards and missed ones of 37 and 38 yards as the Crusader defense wouldn't allow UMass into the endzone.

Holy Cross' offense fared little better, being held to six first downs and only 124 yards. Fenerty, with 50 yards, had the bulk of his rushing over before the second half started.

Holy Cross, after a 77-yard drive, narrowed the gap to 6-3 on a 27-yard field goal by Bill Yound with 8:48 to go in the third quarter.

The only Cross score proved to be a key to the UMass victory as the Minutemen defense stiffened when faced with a first-and-ten on its own 10.

On first down, Hock (who replaced starter Dave McCarthy after UMass nose guard Mike Dwyer broke his leg with a first quarter sack) threw incomplete. Second down saw Hock dropped for no gain by linebacker Paqul Mangana ro. On third down, defensive back Duckworth Grange dove to tip away a touchdown pass to flanker Leo Carlin. Three plays inside the ten, no yards.

UMass flanker John Crowley reacts after catching a touchdown pass in Saturday's 27-3 rout of Holy Cross.

UMass took the kickoff and ran three plays before punting. Fenerty gained two before McKeown pressured Hock into an in completion. On third down, defensive tackle Mike Kowalski (starting for the injured Bruce Strange) sacked Hock forcing a fumble that McKeown recovered at the Holy Cross 24.

Palazzi went to work, just missing a scoring pass to Lonny Brock before fullback Al Neri (85 yards) gained one. On third-and-nine, Palazzi, while being hit, completed a nine-yard pass to tailback George Barnwell for a first down.

Barnwell then gained three before Palazzi connected with Crowley for a 13-yard TD toss over the middle. Bonvini's kick put UMass in command, 13-3, with 3:09 left in the third period.

Crowley, who has waited for his chance after two injury-filled seasons, found the middle open all day with six catches for 109 yards as the UM offense looked downfield more.

Fenerty fumbled the kickoff at his own 29 and nine plays later, Ted Barrett scrambled over with a great second effort. A Neri one-yard run completed the scoring after Bob Shelmire interception at the HC 35.

"This game finalizes the comeback," said defensive tackle Ed Sullivan. "We're no longer going to try and hang in with a team, we want to beat everybody we face, and I think we can," (see related story on page 11).

Women's soccer wins 4th, 3-0

By JOHN STALCUP
Collegian Correspondent

On a weekend when it seemed as though no UMass team could lose, the second ranked women's soccer team did its part, defeating the University of Rochester Yellow Jackets, 3-0 Saturday at Boyden Field.

"The girls let them play with the ball too much in the first half," said coack Kalekeni Banda, "but we controlled the ball in the second and it helped."

The story is in the stats. The Minutewomen outshot the visitors 17-2 as Rochester goalie Doreen Byers made 14 saves on the day but could do nothing to get her team into the game as Rochester could come up with only tow shots on goal for the entire contest.

The first and only goal in the opening half came from sophomore Debbie Belkin at 12:28. It was the first of two for the back. It was one of those gasping edge of your seat, bouncing off of everyone, and then finally into the net, types of scores.

Freshman Susan Montagne knocked a curve ball off the head of a Rochester defender. It deflected from there in-and-out of the hands of tender and eventually from Belkin's foot into the goal.

Coach Banda had few reservations about his team and their performance in the first half, but none about the second.

"We're a better team on paper but we really didn't show it until the second half," the coach said. The Massachusetts women kept the ball on the offensive well over 90 percent of the time and allowed no shots on goal.

Men's soccer takes fifth win

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team won its opening round game of the Iona Tournament, beating Manhattan College, 4-1.

The Minutemen, 5-2 after the game, had goals by John Shannon, Mike Bellino, and two from Andy Bing. Assists went to Shannon, F.J. Zwicklbauer (2), Aaron Feigenbaum and Tom Giordano.

UMass goalie Don Donahue played well, making five saves. Manhattan goalie John Kakazan made 13 stops as UMass outshot Manhattan 17-6.

Manhattan's only goal came in the second half as Brian Kanney scored assisted by Andy Pane.

See Tuesday's Collegian for the remainder of the tournament coverage as details were not available at presstime on Sunday.

South African Brutality Racism & Us

"Many of these kids took a terrific beating from the police, who seemed intent on flaying them alive... some where so badly whipped that their shirts were shredded and covered with blood. One girl fell and two hulking policemen just stood over her and whipped her for a full minute... these weren't big kids,perhaps 13, 14, 15 years old. I found it all very disturbing. It's hard to see how singing "We Are The World" warranted thisaction."

Peter Locksmith, White S.A. Businessman Capetown, Sept.4th.

this action years fear daylight Perhaps this white businessman who happened--perhaps for the first time in his life-- to witness typical S. African police behavior towards black children can find relief from his distress in Amherst.

Stephen Erickson of the Collegian could assure him that he Soviet Union is the real issue, and that his distress was "absurd" because "South Africa is capable of changing itself peacfully."

And if Mr. Locksmith's distress at the brutalizing of children in his name persisted, perhaps Ronald Regan and Jerry Falwell could reassure him about the "progress"' they both claim to see in his country

As sickening as the brutality of the Pretoria regime is, the stupid and transparent hypocracy of american conservatives isworse, almost.

Imagine that it is 1938 and Mr. Regan were the American president. "Waal, we uh, Nancy and I just think that his policy of racial purity is abhorrent... Ah but I don't think that we canachieve progress by isolating them.. So if congress votes sanctions against Berlin,I'm gonna veto them".

Falwell: I've just come from Berlin...Ah met with the German Chancellor and he's a good christian man. He assured me that he is making progress... the lord will show him the way..."

Erickson: And a good anticomunist too... The Thire Reich is capable of peaceful change.'

It is shameful to us as Black Americans, that at a time when almost the entire civilized world is united in comdemning the racist excesses of the Pretoria govemment, the American administration persists in defending a regime that ismorrally indefensible.

The crude and unvarnished truth is that the white supremacist regime in S. Africa is, and has long been, the creature and client of the western democracies, particularly Britain, Germany and The Unitd States. Successive American regimes has recognized it, traded with it, vetoed United Nations sanctions against it, sold it weapons and computer systems which were used to enforce the subjugation of the black majority. American business invest there and American Banks have more than once, come to their rescue with revolving lines of credit.

Since 1909 the African National Congress, representing the majority of the population has fought to achieve basic human rights without success. And this has only been possible because the White West has aided and Abetted their oprssors. Apart from Pres. Carter's ban on weapon sales (rescinded by Reagan) no American government has done a single thing to promote the rights of Black people there.

Angry black youths surround a pile of burning rubble in crossroads as violence continued in the Cape Town, South Africa area yesterday.

And now President Reagan seeks to insulate the Botha Government from economic pressure under the guise of constructive engagement. This policy apears hypocritical and racist and certainly is futile and politically foolish. It is foolish because it will not achieve the results Reagan says he wants-- gradual peaceful change. All it can do is encourage Botha to refuse to begin serious negotiations to end apartheid. So the civil unrestwill continue. More young blacks will be mudered by the security forces. The unrest will escalate, almost certainly to the point of open racial warfare with bloody and unpredictable rresults. If Reagan had an ounce of political leadrship or vision he would see that now is the time to organiz the western democracies to pressure Botha to the negotiating table when the results might be still manageable.

Meantime the killing goes on. Thus far the black resistance has been maintained mostly by children. Young black people, boys and girls in their teens and younger, standing naked and unarmed in the teeth of the gas, guns, tanks, whips and clubs of a modern police state. How much more courage can the world demand of our young brothrs and sisters?

How much more suffering? How much more sacrifice?

Seven hundred are dead. Thousands have been wounded, jailed, tortured, and hounded out of the country. And these are children.

They are younger than most of the students here. Reagan's policies only prolong their brutalization and their pain, and in our name. We believe that this is so only because they, like us, are black. And there is a name for that, it is called racism.

On Sept. 17th the black community of Springfield will demonstrate against these policies, we must be there. On Sept. 20th, the students of this university will demonstrate. We must be there. This is only the beginni;ng. We owe this, and much more to our brothers and sisters in South Africa.

A Stake Through the Apartheid Dracula's Heart

Richard A. Viguerie, publisher of the Conservative Digest, uses age-old Communist hysteria to hide his racist support for apartheid. In his Aug. 25 Op-Ed article ('Who Will RuleNext in South Africa?'), Mr. Viguerie predicts that if apartheid is washed away by the African people, 'The real rulers of South would be white and Soviet.' To Mr. Viguerie, Africans are not intelligent enough to understand the meaning of freedom.

To 'prove' his point, Mr. Viguerie goes to great pains to misquote me as the representative of the African National Congress, which is the leading liberation movement in South Africa. In reply to Mr. Viguerie's question if the A.N.C.'s goal was democracy, I said, 'Yes democracy is our goal, but that did not necessarily mean the democracy that is practiced in the United States.

That is, we are not interested in a democracy that protects the Ku Klux Klan, Nazi parties, white citizens' councils, etc. Certainly, in our future free South Africa, the laws protecting freedom of speech and association will not include pro-apartheid propaganda or the broederbond. For this, our people need make no apologies.

The issue in South Africa is facism not Communism. The issue is racism not a Soviet takeover. Our people do not need anyone to tell them who the enemy is, who is killing their children, who has robbed them of their land and cattle, and now condemns them to 13 percent of the most barren land in the country of their birth. Yes, Communists, black and white, are in the ranks of the African National Congress and have been there for over 50 years. If capitalists, black or white, wish to join us and sacrifice their lives as Communists have done, they are welcome. The A.N.C. is not a Communist movement. It is a national liberation movement that includes all sectors of the nation. Capitalists, unfortunately, have chosen to support apartheid because of the obscene profits it guarantees them.

On 'hating whites,' apparently Mr. Viguerie believes the old plantation myths about happy slaves loving kindly old masters. The urban rebellions that racked U.S. cities in the 1960's, 70's and 80'spassed Mr. Viguerie without notice. But yes, I hate racism as surely as Mr. Viguerie claims to hate Communism. I did not grow up reading about racism in books, but rather lived and suffered under that brutal state terrorism called apartheid that continues to repress and suppress millions of African people.

The horror of life under apartheid need not be recounted here. The daily massacring of our people is enough to expose its brutality. But those who continue to advocate maintaing apartheid until the 'democratic' solution can be imposed on the South African people expose their own selfish, antidemocratic, unchristian greed.

The cry of Communism is the last desparate defense of the apartheid Dracula. Its supporters and collaborators no longer feor daylight or the smell of garlic. The only solution is to drive a stake through the heart of the apartheid scourge. The African National Congress and the people of South Africa will not be deterred from this goal.

Freshmen Editorial

A Need for Critical Thought

As freshman, you will have had impressed upon you by the warnings, advice, exhortations, and council of friend, family, and the university that the next four yers are amoung the 'most important formative years of your life'. This is true, but repetition does not increase the quality of its truth. So we shall assume that even the most intransigent amoung you is convinced, and so not repeat it. We shall also assume that by now you are awake of the importance of developing sound and methodical patterns of study. If you aren't aware yet, time will convince you, so you will be spared a lecture on that subject.

What we should like to examine is some of the less obvious implications of your presence here. We shall talk about your future, because the fact that you are students here indicate that you are thinking in terms of the future. (For example, during the next four years you will develop emotionally. This is to say that at least once a year some of you will effect passionate and traumatic entanglements with some member of the other sex and be hurt. The others will not have such entanglements and be even more hurt, but this a part of colleg that everyone knows about and we needn't discuss it.)

We have said that during your period at UMass you will be in a very real way moulding your future. Your achievements here will substantively define the extent of your contribution, and the form of your relationship to the society in which you live. Consequently, it is to be hoped that you will endeavor to receive not only a training, but an education here. If this to be the case, the most important quality that you will need to acquire is the ability to think critically, to discriminate between the worthless and the true. You must seek to achieve standards by which you can impute value.

We hope that you will be constantly examining your environment and the nature of your envolvedness in it, that you will constantly be asking yourself the question: "what is the most personally satisfying and ultimately meaningful role that I, as a young Third World student in America in the year 1985, can have?"

We suggest that you remember, as you come into greater contact with the "money theism" that so characterizes your age, that while the making of a living is important, the making of a life is essential. We live in troubled, exciting, and often bewildering times. Yet, it is well said that,"Life is action and passion, therefore it is required of a man that he share in the action and passion of his time at the peril of being judged not to have lived."

Editorial

The Editor: We are writing to express our concerns regarding the policy which will restrict all functions on this campus to end by 1 A.M.. We would like to make contact with anyone who can help us to resolve this unnecessary action.

We understand that the administration and Public Safety Department are concerned about campus properties being secured effectively during the late hours. In the past, Third World organizations have sponsored several successful major events at the student Union Ballroom and Campus Center Auditorum. They haversecured to the satisfaction of everyone involved. May we also state that no University property has been defaced, the S.U.B. ministore has never been vandalized, the offices above have stand untampered and we have always provided our own security in addition to that required by the University.

As University residents, we are concerned about the safety of students and the security of campus buildings. We do not condone the actions of the person who assaulted the police officer and sincerely hope that they will be punished to the fullest extent of the law.Is it reasonable to condemn so many for the actions of one? Students need to realize that the University Police are the official law enforcement here and that unacceptable behavior will be confronted. Our events are not centered around the comsumption of alcholic beverages nor do we encourage the use of stimulants before, during, or after our functions. We try to promote an enjoyable atmosphere in which everyone is welcome without the occurance of unlawful acts concerning contraband. Violent behavior and vulgar acts will not be tolerated, We will do anything to help the Department of Public Safety secure facilities for our functions.

It is not an accepted practice of the Third World Culture to orrive at parties before midnight, just as it is not the practice of other students to stay out until 4 A.M.. Living in a society where so many diverse cultures must function together, we have to realize and accept diffferences. By restricting our functions to a culturally unrealistic time, you are taking away from what we give to the community in the form of diversity. By forcing us to discontinue one of our social practices you take away from our cultural existence.

The functions affected by this new policy have served as a major source of sellfhelp; is there another organization with such a small membership who can boast revenues of $7,000 for one evening's time? By removing this opportunity to be of self perseverance, you are making us a finiancial and social burden to the university community.

We hope that we have expressed our concerns clearly and that you will dedicate yourself to helping us resolve this problem. We will vehemently continue to protest this action until a satisfactory agreement can be resolved for all parties concerned.

Thank you for your attention and time.

Sincerely,

This column as an expression of its willingness to cooperate with the powers that be, and to show its concern with the welfare of our newest members, will also run an orientation program for freshmen. It is our hope that this guide will supply the freshmen with a clear and accurate perspective from which to view the confusing bustle of campus life.

First let me say WELCOME TO UMASS -THE THINKING MAN'S UNIVERSITY, that is; exposure to the UMASS atmosphere is sure to start you thinking. The first requirement of the successful minutemen is the ability to start in line for extended periods of time. This you will have undoubtedly have discovered. (especially waiting at the Bursars office in Whitmore at the begining of the semester) teach the student fortitude and patience in the face of adversity. It is also intended to show you at an early date just who is in control here.

Registration-also intended to break your spirit. Here the attack is directed towards your feet. You will be made to stand in line til your arches fall, a plan intended to make you 'manageable'. Wear comfortable shoes. This will defeat the entire scheme.

The Administration: This is a phenomenon similor to the obominable snowman of the Himalayas; its sign is everywhere but no one has ever seen it. This mysterious organism is sais to reside somewhere in Orchard Hill between Dickinson Dorm and the Infirmary. Opinion is nature. Some claim that it is benevolent, others abuse and vilify it at every opportunity. The administration has two purposes for existing.

Its primary function is the manipulation of people.

When unrupulous people want you to do something idiotic or useless they say 'the administration says...' I suspect this to be untrue because there has been no conclusive evidence to date that it can speak.The administration is also useful for blaming things on .

Campus Center: -Definately one of the major buildings on campus.The place to go to find out the latest gossip or where the party is, or just to waste time. Fittingly enough, this building is also the home of WMUA Radio and New England largest college daily newspaper'Collegian'. Unfortunately this building was originally by students as a place to meet dates but it has now been converted into a vending place.

NUMMO News: The piece of newsprint you are holding in front of your face. It hardly looks as if it were one of the outstanding college publications in the nation does it? Well it isn't.

OH NO! WHAT ELSE?

Dining Commons: If mom's cooking was your favorite, well you're in for a great surprise. When ordering pizzas never say you're calling from New Africa House...two hours later you may get a hot soda and a cold "College".

R.O.T.C: Here Umass men practice standing in line. Presumably for registration. However the avowed world free for coco-cola.

Greek Letter Organizations:-You join these immediately before flunking out, after which you can prove that you were actually in college by producing your Greek emblem.

Editor Note: We bring this up to date by one short note: study lounges and intended places for students to "beat the books," these ore supposed to bo one of the most advanced structures of its kind. Rumor hath it, however, that it is used to house students.

Asked about the goals of the newspaper for this yeor, the editor speaking for the staff said, "I shall not insult the maturity and competence of the staff by criticizing "journalistic ethics and responsibility" we sort of take those for granted around this office! The staff has agreed that we want to give the campus a paper that will be read not just by minorities but by also, people of goodwill.

As the New York Herald Tribune is fond of saying, "We don'tthink a good newspaper has to be dull." If our more tradition-bound readers chose to pin a pigment to this brand of journalism, we suggest that they need not limit themselves to yellow--pink chartreuse lovender, or crimson are equally acceptable to us . We have planned o few surprises for the campus' and hope that they will be well received. We will not seek controversy for controversy sake, but shon't fail to 'controverse' or to coin words, when the occasion demands."

Nummo News wil be suspending publication until the first Monday in October. In order to serve you better in the journalistic world and in production we will be holding workshops in journalistic writing, photography laying out and more aspects of newspaper production. Who Are We:

Resources for Third World Students

Upon arriving at UMass we find that we ore described as Third World Students, whereas in our home communities we may have been identified along racial and ethnic lines, i.e., Black, Latino, Asian-American, Chicano, Native American. Now it becomes necessary to understand the concept of Third World and how it applies to us as students. "Third World" is an economic and political term defining a group previously colonized in Africa, Asia, and Latin America whose natural resources still support the powerful international capitalist countries, or the "First World."

Being locked into this oppressive system the lands and people of the Third World are exploited and are continously involved in struggles to regain control over their native resources and destinies. This definition broadens when applied to Third World Students. We are residents of the United States who share a common heritage of political and economic exploitation within the boundaries of this nation. We are subject to an educational system that denies even our cultural identities.

Our Early Struggles

During the 1960's, Third World students around the country organized to confront the educational system's inadequacies. Some of the most immediate demands were for more meaningful courses, the hiring or more Third World faculty, an end to discrimination in admissions policies, and funding for Third World student organizations.

Black students at UMass challanged the University on all of these issues and emerged victorios. Students took the building which is now the New Africa House, as a place to focus the activities of the Third World campus community. It is our responsibility as the present generation of Black, Latin and Asian -American students to work towards change in terms of what we are learning, who is teaching us and how well we are prepared to do meaningful work once we graduate.

At present there are numerous Third World student organizations on campus that cover a spectrum of interests: communication and media, journalism, music, theatre, martial arts, political education, sciences, women's issues, graphic arts, fraternaties--essentially, wherever students have skills and knowledge to share. Following is a list of the organizations and a brief description of their functions.

NUMMO NEWS (103 New Africa House; 545-0061,-2) is the Third World community newspaper at UMass, supplying coverage by and about Third World people. The publication acts as a student training and placement organization for reporters, photographers, artists and layout personnel. Although not affiliated, Nummo News is a part of New England's largest daily college newspoper.

Third World Senate Caucus (320 Student Union 5452517) is a group of fifteen students elected annually by the Third World Caucus representing the Third World student body within the Student Senate. The Caucus members are involved in decisions concerning budget allocations, policy making and the general business of the Student Government Organization.

Drum (115 New Africa House; 5450768) is the Black literary magazine at UMass catering to the Third World struggle in the Amherst area and world-wide. Drum is published once each semester and provides an outlet for the literary and artistic talents of the Third World community. Drum has recently been the recipent of national awards for excellence.

Black Mass Communiction Project (402 Student Union; 545-2426) is currently responsible for programming some 30 hours a week of Black and Third World oriented radio prgramminng on the campus radio station, WMUA. BMCP has afforded students a chance to develop skills in editing, newscasts training, production, remate tape recordings, and obtaining a third class radio license. Plans are being made to operate a closed circuit video channel on campus.

Asian-American Student (Student Union; 545-0031) is designed to bring awareness and understanding to one of the least recognized and understood minorities--'the Asian-American'. The organization is active in political and educational areas on campus and in the community.

AHORA (407 Student Union; 545-2479) is the organization and united voice of the UMass Spanish speaking community. Specific purpose of AHORA include recruiting Spanish speaking students to the University,promoting educational programs directed toward careers and job advancement and supporting efforts to encounter language barriers and cultural isolation.

BILINGUAL COLLEGIATE PROGRAM (Wilder Hall; 545-1987) was formed to meet the special needs of the state's Spanish speaking residents who want a post secondary education. The BCP has fostered development of bi-lingual courses. Their efforts have made the entire University community more responswe to the needs of Spanish speaking students on campus.

Malcolm X Center and the CENTER FOR RACIAL UNDERSTANDING (545-2081) offer courses and colloqua in Black Studies, racial awareness and understanding, community outreach, and courses that develop recognition of ethnic and cultural diversity in the Southwest residential area.

BLACK AFFAIRS (113 Campus Center; 545-3500) is, a news service published two times weekly through the daily Collegian--the UMass student newspaper. Black Affairs provides up-to-date reporting on issues and events that affect the Third World campus community.

CCEBMS--Collegiate Committee for the Education of Blacks and other Minority Students (New Africa House; 545-0031) is an advocacy agency which offers academic counseling, career guidance, and tutoral services to Third World students at UMass. Through its autonomous admission ystem, the CCEBMS program can accept many Third World students. Once here, CCEBMS actively assists those students overcome economic and academic problems.

The overall co-ordinating body of the Third World community is the THIRD WORLD STEERING which is compromised of representatives from every Third World organization. The steering World community is the THIRD WORLD STEERING COMMITTE which is compromised of representatives from every Third World organization. The steering Committee meets regurlarly to access the various programs that are offered and to discuss cmmunity related issues. All Third World students are urged to participate on the Steering Committee, for by doing so we develop a strong collective ideology for our entire community.

With your input and voice we can come together as a diverse yet unified group whose ideas become reality and whose lives are enriched. Our very survival depends on your active involvement.

"Lively" Nummo Planned By Staff Editors Say Surprises for Campus

by Chris Allen

With this issue Nummo News starts weekly publication, or so the editors hope. There are plans for 23 issues for the school year, with the usual "special" issues for Homecoming, Commencement and Christmas Also planned for this year are a number of Nummo supplements, about which more will be said at a later date.

In terms of layout and appearance the paper will not differ greatly from last year's except for a greater "flexibility" in policy. Also an increased national advertising schedule is expected to result in a greater quality of pages per issue. This increase is necessitated by a greater decrease in available operating funds as opposed to last year's budget.

The staff hopes to involve the students more in both reading and contributing to the newspaper. All members of the community are at liberty to write letters to the editors, and to contribute whether your contribution orein the form of articles or cartoons. The only stipulation being that the articles be well-written, interesting, and neither libelous, seditious, nor profane. Extensive coverage will also be given to the major campus issues of our college generation: peace and integration. In addition to the columns already mentioned are Sports Porade with Julian Tynes & SGA Business with David D. Moore.

The editors claim that the general tone of the paper will be lively,stimulating and "rather less conventional than in the past." Nummo News, will, as usual make no attenpt to censor, influence, or control the writing of its contributors (except in matters of taste and factuality) and can therefore assume responsibility only for the ideos and sentiments expressed in editorials. If itshould prove possible the editors plan to run debates on subjects of current interest in the pages of Nummo News. In these debates writers will be allowed a certain number of words in which to present their respective cases. This feature is only tentative however, and interested students should contact the editors. (Continued on page 2 col.4)

Nummo News recently; celeurated it's tenth anniversary. With this in mind, it can also be said that Nummo celebrates a rich history of putting prominent news into a unique perspective for the people of color on campus and the surrounding community.

Some of the famous public orators who have been interviewed include: James Baldwin, Betty Shabazz, Ruby Dee, Ossie Davis and many others. This history of production hepls shed a different light on numerous events.

Moreover, despite moments of happiness and pride, which go hand in hand with laudable achievement; there is no paved road to success. This means that there are moments of frustration and other obstacles which slow down productivity. If you are willing to invest some time and your word of commitment, along with serious work to Nummo, you ore truly welcome. We need assistance in the form of writing, editing, art and photography.

SGA Business

with David Moore

Over the summer, SGA related business was conducted in the form of the Coordinating Committee is the legislative body f the undergraduate student senate. Chairs of committees were represented on the Coordinating Committee. During the summer the Coordinating Committee met and decided on matters that the undergraduate student senate normally votes on.

The Coordinating Committee over this summer was for a limited time repreisented by three Third World (T.W.) members - John Ruddock, Marilyn Bau, and yours truly. Importantly during the month of July-August the Coordinating Committee(C.C.) dropped down to just two TW members - John and myself. During this time, we tried to represent the Third World community. There were many struggles waged over the summer months.

During the summer there were a significant amount of members on C.C. who did not want the T.W. community to achieve any resources or funding. Whenever a motion was placed on the agenda concerning the well-being of the T.W. community; mony questions ond angles were used to try to expose the infirmities of the motion or couse. These questions and counter proposals were definitely exceeding the normal amount of questioning for o motion or proposol that did not originate from the Third World community. Examples - Motions placed on agendas for the month of June to obtain funds for the 10th annual Women's Conference that hoppened to be held in Nairobi, Kenya. I did eventually obtain money for two separate groups to go tyo Kenya. One group with members representing The Office of Third World Affairs and the second group representing a woman employed with Continuing Ed. Surprisingly two waivers were given without on argument to grant the Office of Third World Affairs (O.T.W.A.) to hire two Third World members for that office.

Another major conflict was unsuccessfully trying to get Coordinating to obtain funding o typewriter for the Black Mass Communications Office (BMCP). Once ogain questions were osked and countered in o very pointed fashion. Documentotion was produced and criticized in an ottempt to make this proposol seem silly. However, what really bothered me obout the typewriter proposal (which requested $300.00) wos that 10 minutes prior to the typewriter proposal from BMCP; $1000.00 was given to the Women's Caucus and only three questions were osked. Only one of which came from the Budgets Committee. While BMCP suffered through no less than 15 questions.

The primary opposition for Third World transactions olways come from four members of the Budgets Committee.

Tom Seaver gat his 300th win and Phil Niekro is going for his 3000th also. Dwight Goaden became the youngest pitcher ever to get 20 wins in a season.

But, the greastest milestone in this season is Pete Rose and his pursuit of Ty Cobbs. Career hits record. To achieve this a player must have talent, consistency, and longevity. Rose posseses all these qualities. Because of this he has the record too.

While the Baseball World has watched Rose's efforts, they have also watched the three tight pennat races which have developed.

New York fans salivate at the mouth, at the possibility of a subway series between the Mets and the Yankees, however, nothing is guoranteed since neither has clinched their division.

Welcome Back! What a summer its been. When we left last September, I was feeling the heat from everyone's predictions of Thomas Hearns defeat of Marvin Hagler and the L.A. Lakers would win the N.B.A. championship. Well even though I took all summer I got the last laugh, because the Lakers are the N.B.A. champions. Last yeor I predicted the 49ers over the Dolphins; Hearns over Hagler; and the Lakers over anybody. Well, two out of three isn't so bad. Let's toke o current look at the world of sports. In base ball, while the drug trials in Pittsburgh dim the horizon, the National pasttime continues to thrive. This had to be the season of milestones. Rod Carew got his 3,000th hit; Reggie Jackson passed Ted Williams in career H.R.S.

Don Mattingly and Ricky Henderson, with timely assistance from Dave Winfield, Ken Griffey, and Don Baylor. The Yankees are causing the Toronto Bluejays to toss and turn in their sleep.

The Mets are led by pitching. Their main man is 'Dr. K' himself, Dwight (The Heat) Gooden. Gooden may be the most dominant player in Baseball today regordless of position. He leads the majors in strikeouts, is second in winning percentage and is tied for the major league lead in wins and earned run aug. Ron Darling also an excellent pitcher.He would be a stopper on many other teams but is number two on the Mets. With Darryl Strawberry, Keith Hernandez and Gary Carter knocking in the runs the St. Louis Cardinals may end up with 20 game winners, (Joaquin Andujar and John Tudor) two of the top there hitters in the National Leogue (Willie McGee, Tommie Herr) and the stolen base champion Vince Coleman along with second place. Speaking of Tudor, isn't it interesting that the Red Sox has him and gave up on him feeling he would never amount to a good pitcher? Tudor is currently 18-7 with an E.R.A. of 1.87 and nine shut outs.

N.B.A. Outlook: The Knicks ond Pat Ewing inch closer to a contract. Ewing originally asked for o 3 million per year. If Ewing was worth 3 million, what is Larry Bird worth? Magic Johnson? Moses Malone? Akeem? Kareem? Ralph Sampson? etc.

The Celtics may have made a big mistake. For Bill Walton, they gaveuyp Cedric Maxwell (agreeing to pay half of Maxwell's salary) and a first round Pick. Question number 1. Who's going to stick all of the scoring forwards now thot Max is gone? Alex English, Bernard King, Dominique Wilkins, Clark Kelloss and Orlando Woolridge are just afew of the names that come to mind of forwards who seem to love playing the Celtics. Wait till this year! Question number2. Why give up so much? I could understand Walton for Marshallstraight up but the Celtics also went a first round pick and agreed to pay half of Maxwell's salary. For Walton, a man who is injury prone and has not had a truly productive year since the 78-79 season.

Team on the improve: The Indiana Pacers. The Pacers may have the best young talent in the league. With Clark Kellogg, Herb Williams, Wayman Tisdale and Bill Martin in the front court and with a backcourt led by point guard Vern Fleming, super shooter Terrence Stansbury, and reserves Jim Thomas and Dwayne McLain. The Pacers have a talented young nucleus which should push them intocontention for ond NBA playoff spot. Wotch the Pacers. The Pacers ond all of the N.B.A. teams will be profiled in later editions of Nummo Sports talk when Nummo has its N.B.A. Predictions.

BMCP on the Move

by Rhonda Swan and Valerie Green

The turnout for the first meeting of the semester indicates that the Black Mass Communications Project is off to a good start. Approximately fifteen members, both old and new, came out to discuss the policies and goals for the new school year.

Chris Winslow, general manager of BMCP, said that organization is concentrating on three major goals. The first and the most important, is getting a message of solidarity and unification across to the University of Massachusetts campus and the Pioneer Valley as o whole.

He also would like to see the project involved in more academic programs. Although BMCP co-sponsors several events, it is best known for two annual parties; the jeans and tee-shirt and the funk-a-thon. Winslow feels that the University community has so closely associated BMCP with the parties that it has overlooked the other more loftier goals of the project. One plan that the project is looking into is sponsoring educational outreach workshops for young children in the surrounding communities.

BMCP is best known as o promoter of black music. The project accomplishes this in conjunction with WMUA, one of the University's campus radio stations. Which allocates over 30 hours of its own time to BMCP.

For the past two years BMCP has been trying to increase its radio time but for several reasons its request haven't been granted. However, Winslow insists they will continue their effort to gain more air time.

The organization accepts memberships year-round and invites everyone interested to apply.

Plan proposed by Provost to bring up rank

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

In an effort to make the University of Massachusetts the "best in the northeast," the provost has proposed a long-range plan aimed at improving existing academic programs and creating new ones.

Provost Richard O'Brien's plan for shifting 18 faculty positions among the University's nine colleges and creating 42 new positions over the next five years.

The proposal, which will ultimately reach the state Board of Regents of Higher Education for approval, will base the faculty shifts on results from department evaluations and staff needs.

O'Brien said he expects 185 positions to open over the next five years, a result of professor retirements. Those retirements will give the University the opportunity to hire 42 lower salaried assistant professors.

"In the humanities and social sciences, with every three retirements we can hire four new people," said O'Brien. This source of "build in" faculty growth, is what he called "retirement savings."

New faculty will also be added to department the University plans to target as "special programs." These include four new faculty positions in condensed matter physics, five in biotechnology, seven in general education and an undetermined amount in the chemistry department.

"The biggest changes will be subtractions (of faculty) from the humanities and additions to the social sciences," O'Brien said.

The reallocation of faculty positions, is being researched by O'Brien, Director of Academic Budget Joyce Abel and Associate Provost Fern Johnson.

Teaching responsibilities, volume of published works and departmental evaluations are the three main factors determining which colleges will gain the additional staff.

"In the social sciences, the classes are enormous and terribly overcrowded," O'Brien said. Additional faculty will help alleviate the overcrowding in popular classes such as economics and political sciences.

Also, faculty will be added to departments which rank highly among the public institutions in the northeast.

"We're giving ourselves five years to become best in the northeast and then we'll go from there," O'Brien said.

According to O'Brien, the New England state schools, the New York university system, Rutgers University in New Jersey, and Temple University in Philadelphia and several of the public institutions UMass is completing with for high scholastic rank.

O'Brien's proposal has been submitted to the faculty senate's Academic Priorities Council for advice. O'Brien said he expects a reply by mid-November.

Guardian Angels to speak tonight

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

"The Guardian Angels," defenders of public safety on America's meanest streets, take to the Campus Center Auditorium tonight to address civie responsibilty.

Curtis and Lisa Sliwa, founder and national director of the Guardian Angels will speak at 8 p.m. The Angels, created by Curtis Sliwa in 1979 as an effort to combat crime in the cities, now boast a membership of more than 5,000 people.

"Young people are the primary cause behind crime and young people must be the ones to develop solutions," Lisa Sliwa said in a telephone interview.

Sliwa said she and her husband of three years hit the lecture circuit because "our generation must take responsibility for the problems in today's world." Their speech will focus on that responsibility.

"People look to the United States as a role model," Sliwa said, "we can't be a generation of selfishness."

Sliwa said the Angels are often accused of being avigilante group. "The whole idea is to have people work together to prevent crime," she said. "We're trying to break that Sudden Death/Charles Bronson mentality." In seven years of operations, none of the more than 600 citizens' arrests have resulted in injuries, although two-thirds involved weapons.

Angels carry no weapons, but are easily identified by their red berets and white T-shirts emblazoned with a winged eye. Sliwa said the wings signify the group's readiness, "we'll fly to any emergency;" and the eye, their watchfulness. "We're out there watching out for people."

Sliwa said prospective members must be at least 16-year-old, in school or employed. Members are screened, "because the first 50 charter members must have no criminal record," she said.

All members undergo a three-month training program including self-defense methods, legal training and cardio/pulmonary resuscitation. The third month is spent in mock patrols and situation drills. Sliwa said they patrol public parks, streets and subways, generally in groups of eight to ten people. Most Angels are put in two, four hour shifts each week. They also provide escorts for senior citizens and conduct self-defense demonstrations.

The group, which began in New York, now has 57 chapters, including three in Canada, and one in Tijuana, Mexico. A group of senior citizens and conduct self-defense demonstrations.

She said the group occasionally encounters opposition entering new cities, but in Boston, where they were met with the greatest resistance, they are now issued free subway passes.

All Angels work on a volunteer basis, including the Sliwa's.

The event is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and is free to the public.

Former CIA agent raps U.S. policy

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Staff

A former CIA officer, who recently testified before the World Court, called Nicaragua a "laboratory" for United States intervention policies in the Third World last night.

David MacMichael, speaking at the Student Union Ballroom as part of a special panel discussion on U.S. Options in 'Central America: Intervention, Escalation, or Negotiation?' said "There has been much talk about the U.S. military developing the means for developing effective intervention in Third World Countries, I see this happening in Nicaragua.

"Nicaragua is the laboratory of choice.

MacMichael said he does not believe that a U.S. invasion of Nicaragua is imminent or will happen at all.

"Nicaragua serves a purpose for U.S. domestic politics and for U.S. purposes in Central America as a demonstration for U.S. strength and as a demonstration of weakness and indeed folly for those who oppose U.S. direction in the region," he said.

But, he added, "the Sandinistas have surprised a lot of people with their determination and ability," and that "evidence of an arms flow from Nicaragua to El Salvador disappeared after March 1981."

The second speaker, W. Bruce Weinrod, director of Foreign Policy and Defenee studies at the Heritage Foundation in Washington D.C., called Nicaragua a "model evolving towards totalitarianism."

"There is evidence that Nicaragua has trained people to destabilize Costa Rica and Honduras," he said.

Rescuers find 26 people alive in collapsed schools

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Rescue workers said yesterday they tunneled into the ruins of a governmental technical school and found 26 survivors of Mexico's two killer earthquake. They said more people might be alive under the debris.

At a collapsed apartment building, a German shepherd rescue dog named Bobby sniffed and pawed at a spot in the ruins. An hour's digging freed 20-month-old Patricia Aguirres, dehydrated but otherwise unhurt despite being entombed since the quakes Thursday and Friday.

Police and the attorney general's office said the death toll in Mexico City stood at 2,822 on Monday and the president's office said about 100 people were killed elsewhere in Mexico. Police said 4,180 people were missing.

The State Department said in Washington that 3,461 were known dead throughout the area struck by the quakes, including five Americans. There was no immediate explanation of teh discrepancy. The State Department said it based its figure on information from Mexican authorities.

Mexico's federal health department said at least 11,000 people were injured by the quakes, which smashed the heart of this city of 18 million people. The numbe of people left homeless was estimated at 300,000.

President Reagan's wife, Nancy, came on a brief mission of inspection and sympathy bringing a U.S. government check for $1 million to help in relief efforts.

She toured the city for 3 ½ hours, visiting survivors at refugee centers and a Red Vross hospital in the company of Paloma Cordero de la Madris, wife of President Miguel de la Madrid.

Reagan fights unfair trade

WASHINGTON, (AP) — President Reagan, trying to stave off legislation to protect battered American industries from cheap imports, outlines a refurbished trade policy yesterday that is designed to combat unfair trade practices abroad and open foreign markets to U.S. goods.

"I will not stand by and watch American businesses fail because of unfair trading practices abroad," Reagan pledged in a speech to lawmakers and business leaders invited to the White House to hear his announcement. "I will not stand by and watch American workers lose their jobs because other nations do not play by the rules."

But Reagan, who has said quotas or tariffs to protect more expensive domestic products from foreign competition would lead to economic disaster, promised to veto measures "that I believe will harm economic growth, cause loss of jobs and diminish international trade."

A senior administration official, briefing reporters on condition he not be identified, said the money would be used to compete with nations that not only provide low-cost loans to help foreign buyers acquire selected goods but sometimes even pay foreign buyers directly for choosing certain products. The official named France as one of the countries engaging in such practices.

FarmAid concert short of goal

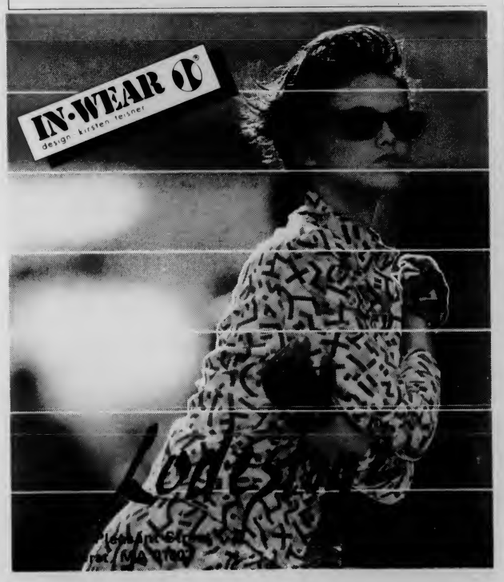
CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — At $9 million so far, proceed from the all-star FarmAid benefit concert appeared to be running short of the goal yesterday but organizers said they would be happy if the event triggered new interest in farmers' problems.

By the time the 14-hour concert ended and 50 stars of country, rock and blues had left the stage early yesterday, FarmAid had raised more than $9 million. That was way below singer Willie Nelson's prediction of raising $50 million.

Nelson, who organized Sunday's show, said FarmAid received about $4 million from corporate donations and ticket sales, and roughly $5 million in pledges from television viewers and radio listeners.

But tabulation of the pledges was imcomplete.

"We don't know yet how much we raised," said spokeswoman Linda Lounsberry for the Howard Bloom Agency of New York, which handled promotion and publicity for the event.



The FarmAid money will be used for cash grants to needy farmers, legal aid, counseling and job training, a nationwide information hotline and a campaign to increase awareness of farm problems.

"Your can spend it quick or spend it right," Nelson told reporters. "So we're not going to rush into anything."

Group formed to help homeless

By JOSEPH R. TIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

Many University of Massachusetts student seeking housing are left to wander the Amherst and Northampton area without a place to live, according to the founders of a group for homeless students.

"Many of these students are forced to sleep in deserted buses and cars, on benches and couches on campus and even in cornfields," said Joel Stanley, a homeless student who is forming the tenatively titled group, "Students Coping and Surviving," to help aid such emergency cases.

According to Stanley, several homeless students are older, foreign, have families, and may be "somewhat environmentally and culturally disconnected" in Amherst.

"They're often unfamiliar with the territory and what comes with it," Stanley said. "And they definitely don't have the economic capacity to pay the rent demanded by local slumlords."

Ernie Westscott, director of the Amherst Survival Center, an organization which helps homeless students, said many students are astounded when they find that they must pay first and last month's rent and a security deposit. "It takes $1000 just to move in," Westcott said.

Many of these students come from poverty-level systems in society, and they don't prepare in advance for the total income it takes to attend a university, according to Wescott.

"They try to attend school when they really can't afford it because they need to educate and better themselves in order to escape the system," Westcott said. "But they're trapped."

Westcott said many of the people coming through Amherst Survival Center are students, married and with families.

"It's virtually impossible to estimate the number of homeless students," Westscott said. "They float from place to place. We could have eight to ten in a day and then not see any for a month, but it is definitely a growing problem," he said.

Stanley, 38, who has been homeless off-and-on for the past three years, claims the Off-Campus Housing Office (OCHO) is no help. Westscott also said that UMass is not equipped to handle the problem of homeless students.

"They (OCHO) say they have around 4,000 listings for housing. What they have is a large number of old, expired listings," Stanley said.

OCHO director JoAnne Levenson said the office was not designed as a survival center. "We weren't created to be a shelter for the homeless," Levenson said. "It's an economic problem and it calls for an economic solution," she added.

108 students in swing spaces

It has been three weeks since the beginning of school and there are still 11 sophomore men looking for dormitory rooms and 108 students living in temporary swing spaces, a housing official reported.

"Right now we are moving women out of swing spaces," said Thea Costine, assistant housing assignment coordinator. The housing office receives notice of two or three vancancies every day and fills them accordingly.

"There are some people going off campus and to fraternities and sororities as a result of vacancies there and others are withdrawing from school," Costine said.

The Housing Office expects that some of the students currently living in swing spaces will stay in those rooms if this year's housing problem follows last year's pattern.

Costine said students who are living in temporary assignments are receiving refunds of about 60 cents a day.

Swing spaces include study lounges and rooms which have been converted to bedrooms. Approximately 440 students were without housing at the beginning of the semester, some as a result of late acceptance or late payment of University bills.

Porch collapse investigated

Two students, injured in Saturday night's porch collapse, remain hospitalized at the University Health Services.

Stacey Levine, 21, with neck and back injuries and Susan Thomas, 20, with back injuries, remain in stable condition according to a health services spokeswoman.

The porch, which collapsed during a party, plunged about 35 people 12 feet to the ground, Amherst police said. One of those on the porch, Kimberly Sherman, 20, said "it was very scary," and that the porch fell "pretty much without any warning."

Sherman, who injured her ankle during the fall, was treated and released at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton. A total of nine people were treated for injuries.

Chester Penza, Amherst building inspector, said the porch's wooden structual supports were deteriorated and may have contributed to the collapse. Penza said that the collapse is still under investigation.

According to the Daily Hampshire Gazette, the house at 180 Market Hill Road in North Amherst belongs to Louis and Jean Mudge of Chicago. They rent the house to students.

Yesterday morning, Jean Mudge told the Gazette she is "not free to talk," but she said she and her husband may travel here later this week to investigate the accident.

Yom Kippur: a day of atonement for Jews

Tomorrow is Yom Kippur, which for Jewish people is a day of atonement and a time for forgiveness for sins committed before God and against one another.

"Yom Kippur means 'day of atonement' (in Hebrew)," UMass Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said. "It's a time to help us look at how we've been living our lives and how we can live better."

Yom Kippur marks the end of a 10-day period called Tshuvah which "sort of means repentence, but not simply feeling sorry for something," Perlmutter said.

The holiday is celebrated by much introspection, player and fasting, Perlmutter said. He added that many students will be fasting from tonight through tomorrow evening.

Perlmutter said the fasting is "to help us let the oppressed go free, to share our bread with the hungry, and to bring the homeless into our home."

All holiday services are free and open to the public. The first service will be held at 7 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Ballroom. A second service will be at 10 a.m. tomorrow in the ballroom. A discussion of the Book of Jonah will take place at 3 p.m. tomorrow in the S.U.B. The closing (Neilah) service will be at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Janet Shenk, executive director of the North American Congress on Latin America, the third panelist, focused her talk on El Salvador.

"We must not confuse elected governments with rule of law with democracy," she said, referring to the regime of Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Shenk asserted that the judiciary is controlled by right wing forces, and that not one military officer has been convicted of murder despite the rise of death-squad murders in the first six months of 1985.

Youth found outside Campus Center

A 15-year-old boy was placed in protective custody Sunday morning after University of Massachusetts police found him lying outside on the steps of the Campus Center. Police said the youth had been drinking heavily and was uncooperative when they found him.

An Amherst ambulance was called to the scene and he was examined. He was put into protective custody and was later turned over to his family, police said.

A small fire was reported yesterday morning in the Whitmore Administration building. A heavy duty extension cord caught on fire because of a defective plug in the cord, officials reported. The Amherst Fire Department was called to the scene. Damages totaled approximately $100.

In other police reports:

Two incidents of indecent exposure were reported Saturday afternoon in the Orchard Hill residential area. Both reports were received in a one-hour period. Police said they believe the incidents were unrelated because the descriptions of the two men did not match each other.

A 1977 Fiat received $300 in damages when it was struck on Thatcher Avenue by a state van driven by a 19-year-old student.

Eleven minors were charged with being in possessions of alcohol in separate incidents this weekend. Police said they will be summoned in court this week.

Chief engineer attributes her success to hard work

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Attributing her success to hard work and flexibility, the chief engineer at the University of Massachusetts power plant says women shouldn't shy away from what's been called a "man's job."

Hermine Randall was hired by the university in 1982 after a stint with firefighting and an office job, which she said didn't fulfill her desire to learn about technical things. As chief engineer, she is responsible for personnel supervision, and ensuring that all technical operations are running smoothly at the plant.

"I kept studying and went to school to get more licenses," she said, pointing out that this studying was what enabled Randall to gain the practical experience which helped her reach the point she is at now.

"I don't see why women can't do it," Randall said, commenting that many women mayh be intimidated by the large equipment and working conditions which include being in close vicinity of a blazing fire sitting inside a furnace.

However, she said she believes the reason that there are low number of women in engineering fields is because "there is too little knowledge about how to go about getting these jobs."

Randall points out that all engineers must be able to stand hot and cold temperatures and "fit through some pretty tight spots," adding, "you must be able to work a sixteen hour shift or more without notice . . . My job takes time, dedication and the freedom to be able to do this."

Changing careers at age 47, when all her children were fully grown, Randall said women "have to be free," which will make it easier for them to "go where the jobs are."

Contrary to popular belief, Randall said she thinks that opportunities for women in this field are "wide open."

Randall said that she feels no negative or sexist feelings among those working for her—a group comprised mostly of men. And says she is sure they respect her as much as they would if she were a man. "I don't think it's caused any problems at all," she said.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

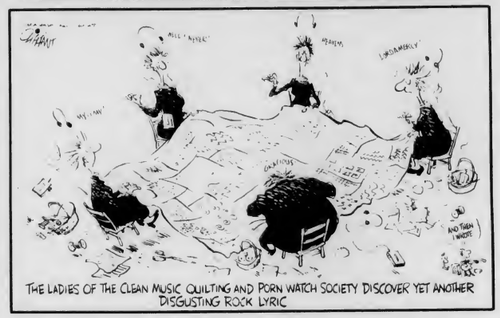
Who decides our rights?

Marianne Metaxas

There is a rising conservative momentum behind a group who willfully scorns our democratic values of free speech and free expression. Led by Susan Baker, wife of Treasury Secretary James Baker, and Tipper Gore, wife of Senator Albert Gore, the Parents Music Resource Center seeks to rate rock 'n' roll albums on the basis of sexually-explicit, violent, or narcotic lyric content. These influential Washington wives have received considerable publicity in the form of a People magazine cover, a Good Morning America interview, and even a Congressional hearing.

The PMRC objects to such songs as Sheena Easton's "Sugar Walls" and Modonna's "Like a Virgin." In addition to censoring lyrics, they also seek to remove offensive album covers from public view. This issue is not new, as it brings to mind past attempts at rock censorship. On the Ed Sullivan Show, Elvis Presley was not allowed to be shown below the waist, and the Rolling Stones were forced to sing the words Let's Spend Some Time Together instead of Let's Spend The Night Together.

The first problem here is that rating lyrics is ineffective. The recording industry releases approximately 25,000 songs a year. Rating every single song is impossible. In a classic boomerang effect, kids will buy those albums with the worst ratings because people love to taste forbidden fruit. Secondly, government does not belong in this area of public behavior. Congress should spend its time worrying about more important things than rock 'n' roll.



Also, these women do not understand how a free economy in a free society works. Trying to impose behavior from above usually fails, as was seen in the repeal of Prohibition and in the government's helpless fight against drug abuse. Musicians will stop producing "offensive" songs only when the public stops buying them. If the demand is there, the supply will be too. That's capitalism.

Singer Pat Boone explains that rating music is "healthy censorship." The most important issue here is that of censorship. Guaranteed in the First Amendment is our right to free expression. Implicit with that is our right to choose whatever we want to hear. When our right to choice is gone, our society is no longer free. But who has the right to decide choice? Who has the right to decide which morals and values are the best?

Some people may say that raising such a fuss over such a small issue isn't worth the trouble. But I don't think it's such a small issue, and it's definitely worth the trouble. The recording industry offered to place a sticker on albums warning parents of explicit lyrics, but that wasn't good enough for the PMRC, proving the old adage that if you give them an inch, they'll take a mile. The line between a democratic society and a totalitarian one is very fine indeed. If we allow censorship to begin, where will it end?

It is absolutely true that the most dangerous thing in the world is neither an army nor a bomb, but rather a tiny idea. Yet even the most dangerous idea has a right to be heard.

Choice and consequence

Rusty Denton

In physics, there is an axiom that states that every action has an equal and opposite reaction. Most people seem to assume, consciously or not, that the same should hold true for moral situations; that every choice should have an equal and opposite consequence. There are disparate views on how to apply this to abortion.

The pro-life movement says that whilee sex takes only a few minutes, it is like deciding to jump off Lover's Leap. Once you do, there is no turning back. Therefore, instead of reducing pregnancy to the level of a few minutes' pleasure, they exalt the sexual act to the level of a creative and holy union. The pro-choice line replies that nine months of pregnancy far outweighs a few minutes of sexual freedom. Sex is a natural funtion, a trivial choice, they say, so that pregnancy is also trivial, and may be terminated at will like an unwanted growth.

One flaw in the pro-choice logic is that a pregnancy, unlike many tissues, can be induced at will (and often is). Nobody can induce tonsils, and very few would want to induce warts or tumors. To say that a pregnancy is just a nuisance growth is like saying that sex is carcinogenic. Furthermore, the last several thousand years have yielded only one type of tissue construct which is able to achieve its own citizenchip in nine months. It is a pseudo-scientific argement to compare a fetus ta an unhealthy tissue.

However, tissue type is not the real issue. What concerns most of the pro-choice camp is the freedom to make sexual choices without obligation. "After all," they argue, "the medical technology is there to prevent women from suffering an unwanted pregnancy." What this really means is that they want morality to be liberated by the level of technology available. Technology is not a panacea. It doesn't cure a guilty conscience, and sometimes it doesn't cure diseases.

Until recently, reckless sexuality was fearless because technology could always cure venereal disease. Now there is AIDS, and some researchers say it mutates too quickly to be eradicated by medical means. Nevertheless, there will always be those who hope. Pinning morals on technology is an evolutionary argument in some ways, because it implies that morals evolve with the advancement of society. I think many abortion rights advocates would agree with that statement.

Not all right-to-lifers will agree with my reply, but I contend that the pro-choice argument is with God. Who is challenged by "evolutionary morality," if not God? Who is reported to have made the body so that a woman is constrained in pregnancy for nine months? Who but God is cited as the basis for the sanctity of the family? Abortion assumes that children are a product of chance, are a curse if too numerous, and that everybody has to look out for him/herself. The Bible states that children are a precious and pre-determined gift, and that there can never be too many. It states that even unexpected pregnancy is a small price to pay for their existence, and that God will provide for the needs of those who trust in Him.

The biblical position is out of step with American views on abortion, population control and family life. It is not hard to see why pro-choice advocates are fighting it tooth and nail. It is also not hard to see why pro-lifers exalt the act of sex, instead of trivializing the pregnancy.

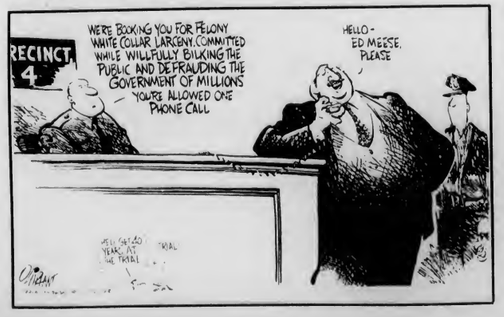
Attorney General Meese

Rob Skelton

Last July, Ed Meese's Justice Department filed a "friend of the court" brief with the Supreme Court seeking to overturn the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion. The New York Times recently devoted an article to that Court's refusal to consider such a motion. These actions typify the antics of our politicized Attorney General, and provide an incident with which we can recall a few other facts about the man and his job.

The Attorney General oversees the law-enforcement arm of the U.S. government. While Meese was busy in front of the TV cameras overseeing the eradication of the domestic marijuana crop, his co-horts were elsewhere quietly processing about 2,000 felony counts in which E.F. Hutton just as quietly whispered "guilty."

And, while Meese pressed belligerent for Congressional approval of some of his lackeys, Jackie Presser of the Teamsters Union was escaping investigation of massive wrongdoing and graft within his organization.



There's much more. Meese, if you recall, was the public figure who ended up in the frying pan after suggesting that there were no "hungry people in America." He has also labeled the American Civil Liberties Union a "criminal lobby."

By toeing the conservative line and trying to outlaw abortion, Meese is adding to criminal ranks the masses of poor people who would ostensibly be most affected by a lack of legal choices. Not ironically, Meese has been instrumental in the Reagan administration's campaign to cut legal aid to the poor.

Meese also seeks, with Reagan, to reverse many long-standing civil rights policies, notably in a similarly failed "friend of the court" brief. Additionally, Meese has pushed for tax exemptions for schools which practice racial discrimination.

No one would choose to come to the defense of Ed Meese. That he occupies the highest law-enforcement post in the US only attests to his 18-year relationship with his political mentor Mr. Reagan, an equally affable and bumbling politician whose equally questionable ways place them in the same politically irresponsible league.

Rob Skelton is the assistant editorial editor.

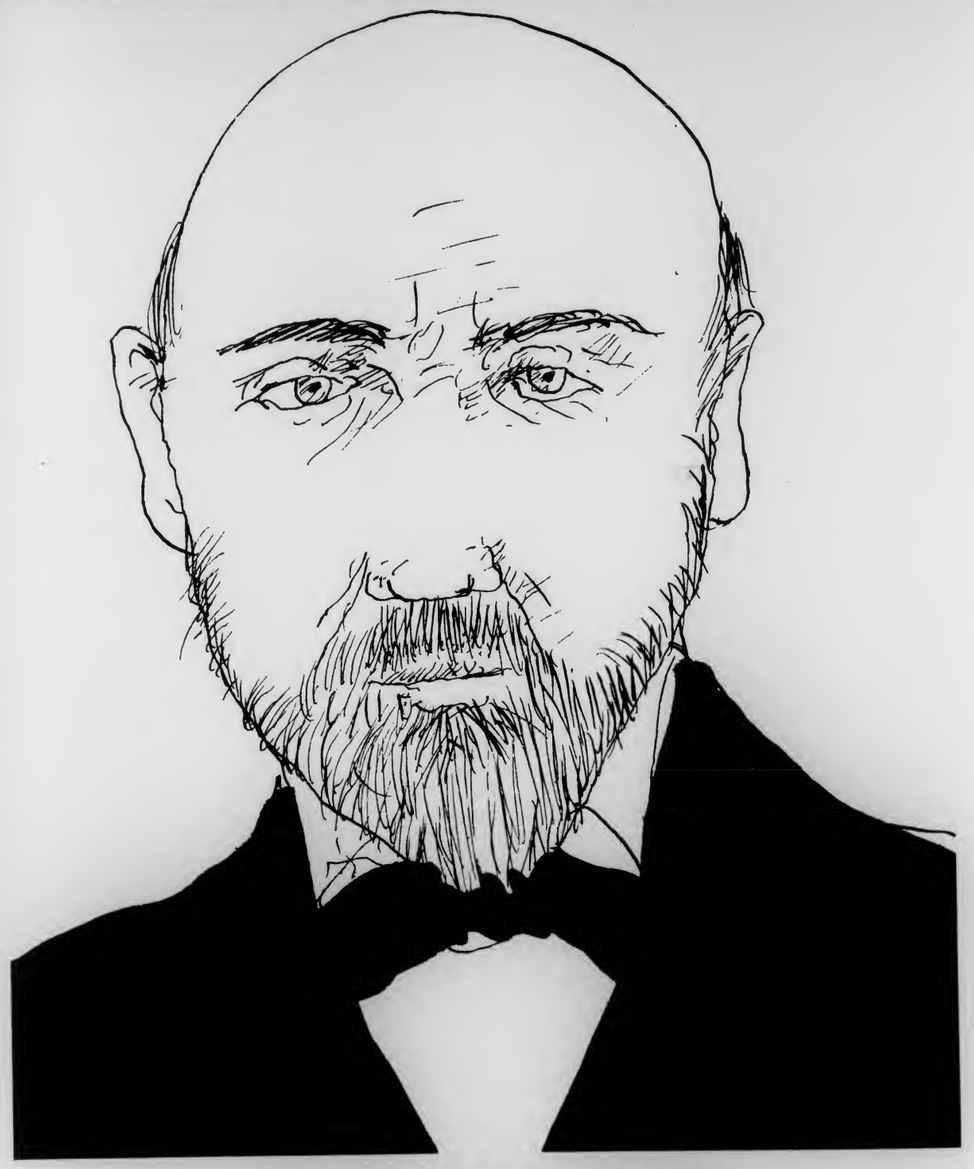
Sexual harassment article was both inaccurate and misleading

I am writing in response to the article on campus sexual harassment that appeared in the Collegian on Sept. 12. Some of the information included in the article was inaccurate and misleading.



I did not state that few people on campus report sexual harassment, but said that the number of people filing formal grievances is still quite low. Many people do report sexual harassment or discuss it with others but do not decide to file an informal or formal complaint. People often are afraid to do this because of fear of repercussions or retaliation by the harasser, who may be a supervisor or a teacher.

I also want to make clear that the Everywomen's Center offers numerous services to women who have been sexually harassed, including counseling, advocacy, information, and referral. A support group is beginning on Oct. 23 for women who have experienced sexual harassment on the job or in school.

The last inaccuracy I need to correct is that a person filing a formal grievance within the University appears in fron of a three person hearing panel, not thirteen, and can have two advisors with him or her at this time. The grievances procedure is currently being revised, and I want to stress that there are appropriate courses of action to take both inside and outside the University if you are experiencing sexual harassment.

UNITED TECHNOLOGIES IS LOOKING FOR ANOTHER DAIMLER.

Daimler didn't need to invent the wheel. Wheels were around already. All he did was make the first practical internal combustion engine, put wheels under it, and change the way people get from place to place.

United Technologies could use a Daimler or two. We need some people who can take what we already have — aircraft engines, helicopters, air conditioning, elevators, silicon wafers, and so on — and teach them some different tricks.

You have the kind of training we need. If you also have the kind of inventive vision, perseverance, and talent that may someday make you a household word, you're what we're looking for. And we're what you're looking for. A worldwide group of companies where 25,000 engineers already work, and there's nothing in the entire galaxy to limit how far you can grow.

Anti-apartheid violence continues in South Africa

Thousands may be moved

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A government commission on yesterday proposed a plan that would forcibly uproot about 42,000 people, most of them black.

In another development yesterday, the daughter of jailed black leader Nelson Mandela, the head of the African National Congress guerrilla organization, said he will be allowed an examination by a family physician. Government doctors have told Mandela he needs surgery for a swollen prostate and internal cysts.

The Prisons Departments had no cement on the statement by Zenani Mandela Dlamini, 23, that her 67-year-old father will be checked by family-appointed black doctors.

But the move appeared to be a concession from the government after Mrs. Dlamini and Mandela's wife, Winnie, demanded the second opinion on Sept. 11.

The Commission for Cooperation and Development proposed proclaiming about 28,000 acres of the Zulu tribal homeland in Natal province part of "white" South Africa, and buying up some 152,000 acres of the homeland. The plan, immediately condemned by many leading whites in Natal, would uproot about 42,000 peoples.

Parliamentarian Ray Swart of the Progressive Federal Party, which opposes apartheid, said the plan was "hell-bent on the apartheid road." Swart said the proposals show the government wants "entrenchment of the apartheid policy."

In anti-apartheid unrest early Monday and late Sunday, police said a black policeman was killed by a black mob, and police gunfire killed a black man among a crowd stoning a police vehicle.

Anniversary celebrated with series of events

By LISA RIDDICK
Collegian Correspondent

Last year, Governor Michael Dukakis proclaimed the first week in October as Bilingual Education Week. During the next week, the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) will celebrate its eleventh anniversary with a series of programs and events.

The first program will be a panel discussion on Vietnamese culture to be held on Sept. 28 at 3:30 p.m. in the Campus Center room 165.

The Student Union Art Gallery will have a collection of photographs from Vietnam to be followed by a reception on Sept. 29 at 11 a.m.

On October 1, there will be a career night with professionals speaking about such different fields as engineering, science, and law enforcement.

The drop-out rate of Hispanics will be the topic of a panel discussion to be held on October 2 at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center room 163.

The celebration will conclude with a dance sponsored by AHORA, a Latin Student organization which helps bilingual students towards career and job placement, will be held in the Student Union Ballroom at 9:30 p.m. on October 4.

The Bilingual Collegiate Program was founded by Benjamin Rodriguez in October of 1974. The program serves as a resource center for students who have a problem or need someone to talk to.

"Another point of the Bilingual Collegiate Program is to help students maintain their cultures, because once they are in this country for one or two years, they start to lose their culture and their heritage which is a very important part of their life," said Lucy Nguyen, one of the directors of the program.

This year, there are about 500 students, including 170 freshmen, in the program.

Bilingual students aren't the only ones who can benefit from the program. Asian students are helped as well.

This year, BCP is working on planning a Cambodian New Year celebration following the success of the Vietnamese New Year which they sponsored last year.

The purpose of the celebration is to educate the public on Cambodia and other countries in South East Asia.

Announcements

The current situation in South Africa will be the topic of a film, and lecture program to be sponsored by the Commuter Area Government on Thursday, September 26 at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 101 at the University of Massachusetts.

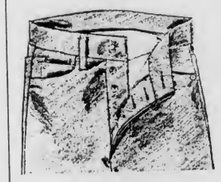
Themba Vilakazi, the Boston representative of the African National Congress, will address the most recent South African history with an emphasis on U.E. sanctions, divestment, and the future of Black South Africa.

The lecture will be preceded by the film Spear of the Nation. The film analyzes the economic and ideological foundations of apartheid, revealing South Africa's strategic role, the interests of imperialism and the many forces at work there.

The program is open to the public.

The Goodwin Memorial A.M.E. Zion Church presents their First Annual Homecoming Banquet at the Northampton Hilton Inn on Saturday, September 28.

The banquet will begin at 6:30 p.m. and includes cocktails, dinner, entertainment, music, and dancing. Dinner will be boneless breast of chicken.



Tickets are $17.00 per person. For more information contact Marvin Brown at 256-8865, Willie Ruffin at 586-5558, or Fred Atchinson at 665-4045.

Smith College will be hosting a five-college mixer for freshmen at 7:30 p.m. on Oct. 3 in Lily Hall to be followed at 9 p.m. by a dance at the Thursday Night Club with a live D.J. from Rack-O-Disc.

"Ten" is intriguing

TEN
University Gallery

By PATRICIA NYLANDER
Collegian Correspondent

Are your nerves already switching from low to high gear, with talks of exams and papers? Do yourself a favor, and give yourself an artful and relaxing experience. Drop by the University Gallery's TEN exhibit, showing now through October 25, located in the Fine Arts Center (FAC).

TEN is a presentation of recent work by 25 artists who have previously had one-person exhibits during the past ten years at the University Gallery. The TEN exhibit includes Amherst artist George Trakas' permanent outdoor Isle of View sculpture (lying adjacent to the FAC) which contributes to this exhibit's celebration of the gallery's first decade.

Since 1975 the gallery has hosed the work of contemporary artists primarily of national significance, and no matter whether you're a contemporary art fan or not, TEN is intriguing. Even if you can't figure out what the artist's theme is, you'll have to appreciate the imagaination involved with the variety of media artists Jackie Ferrrara, Alice Aycock, Robert Smithson and Vitto Acconci use in their sculpture.

"People visiting the gallery want to reach out and touch the pieces," said Brenna Pradell, an exhibit guard. From Smithson's heaping of rock salt to Aycock's composition of spinning steel blades (which I can only describe as appearing dangerous), the sculpture in TEN commands attention.

Especially fun is Vitto Acconci's piece entitled, Stretched Facade. It reminded me of Spanish artist Gaudi's "melting" facades of Barcelona. Judge for yourself.

Photography and painting are also well represented by TEN, off to the side Gallery rooms. Definitely check out Chester Michalick's Las Vegas series of seductive and vivid color photographs. Contrast them to the eerie, stark quality Frank Gohlke's black and white composition lends to his subject, Mt. Saint Helens. And don't leave until you'be seen Al Souza's wax transfer pieces; very original and witty.

Two favorite works were Luccio Pozzi's The Beach and Gregory Gillespie's Self-Portrait paintings. Pozzi's Beach is made exciting by the artist's use of bold, sharp and cool colors; it puts one in a Rio de Janiero state of mind. Just as compelling is Gillespie's self-portrait, full of clever details. HINT: Look at the bottom left corner and at the calendar.

"The turnout has been marvelous," said Gallery Curator Betsy Siersma, adding that the exhibit has "received many good comments" from its visitors.

The University Gallery is open to the public Tuesday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m.

this year. Senior co-captain Amy Robinson can also score from the midfield.

Sophomore midfielder Carolyn Michael leads the team in scoring with three goals, six assists for 12 points while forward Monica Seta has 10 points (four goals, two assists). Forward Beth Roundtree has been hot in the last two games, a 7-0 win over Providence and a 3-0 win over Rochester, with three goals.

Bowsher and Watson have scored one goal each this year and haven't played in two games due to bruised knees Freshman Susan Cooper is also out indefinitely with symptoms of mononucleois.

Bowsher hasn't practices since she played against Providence back on Sept. 18. Decisions on Bowsher and Watson playing will be made today.

"We don't want to take any chances," Banda said in reference to players coming back before they are healed. "It's still early in the season."

In goal, freshman Jan Holland is expected to get the starting nod over fellow frosh Carla DeSantis. UMass hasn't given up a goal all year and the Minutewomen have outscored its opponents by a 23-0 margin. UMass has also outshot its opponents by a 94-4 margin through four games.

In goal for Brown will be junior Kathy Kostic, who shutout UMass last year. Massachusetts hasn't beaten the Bruins since 1983 (3-1) and has never won in Providence but still leads the series by a 4-3 count.

"Brown is always tough," Banda said. "It's never an easy game with them."

UMass will have to continue to capitalize on their service, as they have all season long, to take care of Holy Cross. The Crusaders, coached by former Sortino assistant Al Morel, lost to the spikers in three straight last season, but supplied their own brand of court domination, pushing the spikers to the limit in each of the three games.

Volleyball Hits: In the Minutewomen's victory over Division I for Lehigh Universiyt, UMass nearly suffered their first defeat of the season.

"We were down a match point at 14-15 in the third game, but pulled it out," said Sortino. "That's the closest we've come to losing a match all season."

Both Northeastern and New Haven will be at this weekend's UMass Classic Volleyball Tournament. Other teams scheduled to appear are C.W. Post, who finished fifth in the CCSU tourney, Division I Cornell University and local rival Springfield College.

Sports Notices

The weekly University of Massachusetts football luncheon will be held this afternoon at noon at Justin Ryan's.

The gathering will feature head coach Bob Stull and members of his staff. Meet the coach and hear his thoughts on Saturday's game at Harvard. The cost of the lunch is $4.

Cheerleaders: Male cheerleaders are needed by the UMass squad. Come to practice on Lower Boyden Field on Monday, Wednesday or Friday at 3:45 p.m.

Wrestling Club: There will be a screening of potential coaches on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in Campus Center Room 165. Any interested wrestlers are encouraged to attend.

Men's golf is second

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team took second place in a five team match at Holden Hills in Worcester last week.

The men, with a 332, tied Assumption for second but were awarded the place because UM's fifth man scored lower than Assumption's.

Host Worcester State, with a 318, won the meet. For UMass, Brian Fitzgerald and Bill Conley were lower with 82. Joe Petrin, Tim Smith and Al Vorce each had an 84.

Westfield State, who beat UMass earlier this year, was fourth and Mass Martime was fifth.

"We're playing better," said UM coach Jack Leaman. "Things are looking up."

No. 2 booters host Brown in key game

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

This afternoon's matchup between the second ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team and seventh ranked Brown will be the year's first real test for the undefeated Minutewomen, who face the prospect of facing the Bruins without two of their top players.

Sophomore all-American Kristen Bowsher and senior co-captain Jamie Watson have sat out UMass' last two games and are tentative for today's 3 p.m. game at Boyden Field.

The 4-0 Minutewomen face a tough challenge in Brown, who was the number one ranked team in the nation at the end of last season. The Bruins went 13-1-1 last year and that included a 1-0 win over UMass in Providence.

"Brown is Brown," head coach Kalekeni Banda said. "We have to jump on top of them right away. We have to play good defense and mistake-free soccer.

"Brown is known for capitalizing on mistakes." It was a defensive lapse with under five minutes to go in the first half that gave the Bruins the goal that beat UMass last year.

One of the keys will be the abilty of the UMass forwards to play good defense and not let the Bruins, 3-0 on the year, roam at will.

"If the fowards start playing better defense, it catches on," Banda said. "We have to deny them the ball. If we let them dribble around it'll put too much pressure on the back."

UMass will have to look out for freshman Theresa Hirschaur who has scored seven of the Bruins 14 goals

McKeown setting the tone

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

A year ago, John McKeown was a scout team fullback taking hits from the starting defense while being redshirted his first year at the University of Massachusetts.

This, year, McKeown, a 5-11, 215 pounder from Biddeford, ME is dishing out the hits as a starting inside linebacker for the Minutemen.

The UMass defense has allowed a stingy 72.6 yards-a-game rushing, an average of two yards-a-carry. In three games, the defense has let up one touchdown, a halfback option pulled off by Richmond. One of the reasons for this domination has been the play of McKeown.

One of three new starters of defense, McKeown has been handed the responsibility of calling the defensive signals for UMass. He's also prone to calling his own number on blitzes, a strategy that has produced good results.

During Saturday's 27-3 rout of Holy Cross, the UMass defense was faced with a key fourth-and-six at its own 10. The coaches called one blitz, not involving McKeown. The freshman raced up to head coach Bob Stull, asking for an Eagle blitz, one that puts him in a direct path to the quarterback if run correctly.

"John had that look in his eyes, so we called the play," said Stull. "You saw the results."

McKeown, taking advantage of a triple team on big nose guard Mike Dwyer, shot though the gap and buried Crusader quarterback Dave Hock before he had time to turn around.

Two fumble recoveries and a host of tackles earned McKeown his second straight berth on the ECAC weekly all-star team. On the season, McKeown has 36 tackles to lead UMass, a sack, four running back sacks, two fumble rec overies and two pass break-ups.

"It's a good feeling to come in and contribute," said McKeown. "I think we can even play better. UMass has had troubles the past few years, now we're back on top."

With freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi out for six games with a separated shoulder, the pressure increases on the UM defense.

"We realize that we have to keep the other teams from scoring, it's a matter of pride with us," McKeown said. "We want to be one of the nation's leaders against the rush and in total defense. The schedule we play is a tough one, but I think we can handle it."

"John's a tough kid, and a hell of a player," said defensive coordinator Jim Reid. "He's the type of player that can set an example by his play. He's quick, reads the play well and reacts fast. That's what good linebackers do."

"It's happening pretty quickly, but it's a great feeling," said McKeown. "UMass football is back, and I'm glad I'm here to be a part of it."

So are Minutemen fans, because football is fun again at the University of Massachusetts, thanks in part to John McKeown.

Minuteman Mutterings: Statistically, UMass has looked good. On the offensive side Palazzi was 27 for-54 for 313 yards. Jim Simeone, his replacement, is two-of-seven for 13 yards. Freshman Bill Shaughnessy will back-up Simeone. Fullback Al Neri is averaging four yards-a-carry. Flanker John Crowley has caught seven passes for 127 yards, a 17.6 average. On defense, UMass opponents have yet to score in the second and fourth periods and have only nine points in the third period. Per 100 yards, UMass opponents have averaged only 2.4 points (compared to UM's 7.9)

Changes: Vito Perrone will start at inside linebacker with McKeown on Saturday, Mike Kowalski will start for the still-injured Bruce Strange (knee), Andrew Thomas is back at kickoff and punt returner and Carlos Silva will miss at least one week at cornerback with a badly sprained ankle.

Undefeated volleyball travels to Holy Cross, Sortino wary

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The unbeaten University of Massachusetts volleyball team travels to Worcester today to take on the Crusaders of Holy Cross. The Minutewomen, currently ranked third in the Northeast, are sporting a 12-0 record and are fresh off their second consecutive tournament championship, after capturing the Central Connecticut Invitational over the weekend.

Head coach Elaine Sortino expects today's match to be just as difficult as the spikers victories over Northeastern University and the University of New Haven last weekend.

"It's going to be tough, there's no two ways about it," said Sortino. "They have a couple of outstanding players on that team and they will be ready for us. We will definitely have our hands full."

By beating both New Haven and Northeastern, the Minutewomen are almost assured of the top spot in this weeks Northeast volleyball poll and could also find themselves ranked in the Division II Top Twenty. Both polls were announced last night but were not available at press time.

However, Sortino doesn't pay much attention to the rankings.

"Rankings are nice, but they really don't mean too much so early in the season," said Sortino. "The only thing that really matters is that we continue to play as well as we are."

Minutemen split tourney

The University of Massachusetts slipped to 5-3 on the season, losing the second game of the Iona Tournament to the host team, 2-1 on Sunday night.

UMass, a 4-1 winner over Manhattan in the opening round of the tourney, played a scoreless tie with the Gaels until the 60 minute mark of the second half when Iona scored.

Iona scored again on a penalty kick with five minutes left in the game. Goalie Don Donahue originally saved the kick, but the officials ruled he moved early, giving Iona another chance.

UMass' lone goal came with a minute left in the game as Brian Sullivan scored assited by tourney most-valuable-player Andy Bing (two goals and two assists in two games).

"We're really happy to be 5-3 at this point," said UMass coach Jeff Gettler. "We're playing good soccer this season. We've come together well."

UMass starts a six-game homestand on Wednesday against Providence College at 3 p.m.

Deans form new policy on cheating

By AARON SCHACTER
Collegian Correspondent

The undergraduate deans council is developing a policy which will set a uniform, standard penalty for cheating, plagiarising, and other academic infractions at the University of Massachusetts.

The new academic honesty policy, which still must be approved by the deans council and the faculty senate, is a result of various complaints directed to the ombudsman's office.

Ombudsman Howard Gadlin handled 15 disputed infraction allegations in his office last year, but said that was no indication of the total problem, since there were many cases which did not go to his office.

"At present, there is no consistent policy for punishing academic infractions and handling allegations of infractions," Gadlin said. "The different departmetns and schools each have different ways of dealing with cheating. Independent instructors vary in their response to cheating. One professor might give you a zero on a test while another will fail you."

The new policy aims to define all types of cheating and plagiarism. It gives examples of each and outlines how cases will be handled. A board will be established to hear cases and to set punishments.

The deans council researched how other schools, including Smith College University of Maryland and the University of Michigan handled the problem. It discuss-

Collins laments gay rights loss

Fear of AIDS the cause

By JOHN YONCE
and GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

A local politician and some University of Massachusetts staff members expressed dissatisfaction yesterday over Monday's defeat of a gay rights bill in the Massachusetts House.

Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, who voted for the bill, echoed the sentiments of other proponents who blamed the fear of AIDS (Aquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) for the bill's defeat.

"A lot of representatives voice a very real concern about AIDS and its transmission," Collins said. "It turned the debate into a sometimes hysterical one."

The bill, which if passed would have banned discrimination in employment, housing, credit and public accomondations based on "sexual orientation," was defeated 88-65 and removed from the 1985 House agenda.

Collins, who has either co-sponsored or supported the bill every year since 1972, explained that his disappointment was twofold.

"The state needs to marshal its forces against AIDS, not fear it," he said. "Part of the debate featured a sense of retribution against citizens who are homosexuals."

Also, Collins said he was concerned with the civil rights of homosexuals. "A society which feels secure in its sexuality as a whole should have nothing to fear from a minority sexual orientation. This is a primary issue of civil rights," he said.

Gerry Scoppetuello, a staff assistant at the Studeatn Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, said he "was not surprised by the bill's defeat, but I'm still disappointed. The unfounded hysteria about AIDS was completely to blame for the bill's rejection," he said.

Bob Brigham, a member of the Lesbian Bisexual Gay Alliance, also didn't expect the bill to pass. "I'm not surprised, but unfortunately there's a lot of paranoia in the House," he said.

Local representatives were split on their voting. While Collins and Willilam Nagle, D-Northampton, voted for the bill, Carmen Buell, D-Greenfield, and William Carey, D-Easthampton, both voted against the bill.

Guardian Angels talk on crime

Angels say job isn't easy, cities resist their presence

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Curtis and Lisa Sliwa, founders and national directors of the Guardian Angels, are living proof that individuals can make a difference.

Curtis Sliwa was a manger at a McDonalds in "the armpit of the cesspool of New York," when in 1979 he founded the Guardian Angels in an effort to combat crime in that city. Six years later, the Angels boast a membership of more than 5,000 members in over 57 cities.

Speaking to an audience of more than 500 people last night at the University of Massachusetts, the Sliwas stressed the importance of taking risks. "You must not fear, despite the barriers," Curtis, 31, said. "If you even show fear society will create barriers."

Lisa, 27, said the Angels met with resistance when entering new cities, but that the Angels "Have made a committement to community members not to be pushed out by punks, police or politicians."

"The inner-city is not the sole creator of crime, Lisa said. "It seems like the national past time is 'let's see what we can get away with.'

"The criminal mentality is selfish, squeezing everything out of every opportunity," she said.

Today's role models, derived from sports and entertainment, are deficient in the examples they set, Lisa said. "People are starving and we're supposed to worry if Brooke (Shields) is a virgin?"

"We've made it cool for young people to help others," she said. "You don't have to sacrifice your lifestyle or career, we can make a change within the framework of our lives.

"Our presence gives people some kind of hope," Lisa said. "We serve as positive role models."

Curtis created the Angels as a method in which citizens could fight back within the confines of the law. "Our grandparents struggled to create a future for their children's children," he said. "We are those children. How can we justify that we have made them prisoner's in their own homes?"

Lisa and Curtis Sliwa

All social change has come as a result of organizing, Curtis said, not waiting for political action. "Politicians are the last to move," he said. "We need more of us to get out there and roll up our sleeves."

The criminal justice system gives jsutice only to criminals, Curtis said. "When lawyers walk into a courtroom they don't see the victims, they see a chess board. A joust awith the district attorney."

"The Guardian Angels are a racial and ethnic cross section of America," Curtis said. "We go out without the benefits of weapons and keep the peace."

Lisa said future plans for the Angels include increasing their capacity to respond to emergencies and developing a network of contacts. "We'd like to be the Red Cross of crime," she said.

Pro-choice fear Supreme Court

By SANDRA DIAS
Collegian Correspondent

Local pro-choice advocates fear the destruction of current abortion legislation with President Ronald Reagan's opportunity to appoint conservative Supreme Court justices sometime within the remainder of his term.

According to University of Massachusetts political science porfessor Sheldon Goldman, a leading scholar on judicial nominations, it can be expected that Reagan will make at least one additional appointment to the Supreme Court.

Goldman said Reagan is "looking for someone who is committed to overturning the Roe v. Wade decision (a 1973 case legalizing abortion). He said the ultimate result would be a ruling defining "the fetus as a person under the 14th amendment."

Although Goldman said he is "doubtful" the court would find favor in outlawing birth control, calling such a position "far-out and off-the-wall," he did say anti-choice legislation could open up new doors for thos looking to outlaw contraception.

"It would be a terrible blow to women's rights. It is telling them they no longer have control of themselves or their bodies," he said.

Eastern 727 averts crash

Helicopter moves into path of take-off

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eastern Airlines' 5 p.m. shuttle flight to New York was aborted at takeoff yesterday when the pilot hit his brakes because he feared collision with a helicopter, authorities said. The plane, carrying 175 passengers, skidded to a stop 50 feet from the Potomac River.

An FAA spokesman, Stephen Hayes, said Flight 1500 came to rest on a section of the runway overrun which had been competed only last December to provide pilots with more room to abort a takeoff. The safety area was built following the crash into the Potomac of an Air Florida flight in 1982.

Cecil Wynn, who fishes in the area, said, "I've been coming out here for four years and I've never seen anything like this. I guess that's why they extended that runway. It's a good thing they did, because otherwise he would have been a gonner."

"The airline pilot was just about at top speed," said witness Andy Sawicki. "I thought he was going into the water. He zig-zagged when he left the runway. I guess he was trying to stay on land as long as he could."

Sawicki said he saw the helicopter flying toward the Boeing 727's takeoff trajectory.

The National Transportation Safety Board will investigate the incident, said spokesman Ira Furman.

"It lifted a few feet off the ground, then the pilot pulled back on the throttle somewhat dramtically," said Andrew Ellis, 32, a passenger. "The pilot turned the plane, I guess in an effort to slow down."

After the plane came to rest, "Everyone at the same time burst into applause and eveyone was thrilled with the pilot," Ellis said.

Mexicans digging out of rubble

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Thousands fled the city yesterday, fearing disease from polluted water and decaying bodies. Others watched rescuers pull survivors from earthquake debris that had imprisoned them for days, praying to see relatives.

Workers dug and listened on ultra-sound equipment, specially trained dogs sniffed and pawed in the desperate effort to find the estimated 1,500 people still buried before it is too late.

Cheers are raised for every victory, when someone who thought his trap was his grave is pulled to safety.

The latest official count put the death toll at 3,000 from the two major earthquakes that struck the heart of the city last Thursday and Friday.

The city government said 7,100 people were injured and 600 remained in hospitals.

An estimated 300,000 are homeless, and only about half found temporary shelter. The others huddle in parks and streets, or have left the city to seek help from friends and relatives outside the capital.

Health officials said there was no severe threat of epidemic from contaminated water and decaying bodies that either are caught in the rubble or awaiting burial. They advised residents of the city to boil drinking water.

Health workers fumigated badly damaged buildings and devastated areas to stop any spread of disease from the corpses underneath.

Survivors visited Roman Catholic churches, lighting candles for the dead, many of whom are being buried in mass graves.

"Star Wars" gives U.S. no edge

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's "Star Wars" missile defense program could "substantially increase" America's safety under certain conditions, but it will never be able to protect the entire country from nuclear attack, science advisers to Congress concluded yesterday.

A study by the Office of Technology Assessment said the United States would need "great technical success" in its research program along with a change in the Soviet Union's strategy to also emphasize defense rather than offense.

A companion OTA study raised new questions about U.S. anti-satellite, or ASAT, weapons and cautioned that while this country may lead now in a technology field related to Star Wars, the Soviets are likely to catch up.

"What this means is that after spending billions and billions of dollars, we could find that we have bought ourselves greater instability than the world has ever confronted in the atomic age," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

The 324-page study of the Star Wars program, which is known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, was done at the request of Aspin's panel and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Release of the report comes in the midst of a debate over the place of the high-tech missile-interception program in the nuclear balance between the two superpowers.

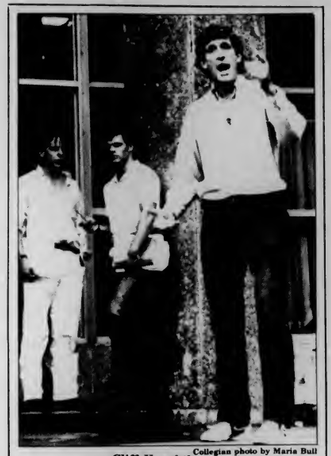
Harvard boasts highest number of executives



NEW YORK (AP)—More top business executives have degrees from Harvard University than any other school, Standard & Poor's Corp. said yesterday.

The university heads the list with 5,156 undergraduate and graduate degrees combined granted to executives, the business information company said.

In far second place was New York University, with 2,522 degrees.

The top four schools—Harvard, New York University, Yale and Columbia—held the smae ranking as in the last survey conducted in 1982, S&P said.

The University of Michigan, which was in fifth place, fell to sixth, while the University of Pennsylvania moved up one position to fifth, it said.

The speaker leaned his head and riveted his attention towards the woman who fired a question at him from the Student union steps. Then he turned to face the gathering crowd and awith a thrust of his arm began to answer her question on abortion point by point, speaking clearly and forcefully into the microphone as if he anticipated the question.

Cliff Knechtle is a traveling religious speaker who has appeared on more than 100 college campuses across the United States. He speaks about his faith in Jesus Christ and answers questions from often skeptical college studetns.

He began his informal speeches on Monday and will continue his impromtu question and answer sessions tomorrow. Knechtle is on staff waith Inter Varsity Christian Fellowship, which ia also a Christian student group on campus.

"Today I touched on issues of God's care for us, what real faith is, and who is Jesus Christ," Knectle said. He answered questions on such issues as abortion, homosexuality and the validity of the Bible.

Stopping in betweeen classes and on lunch breaks, students gathered in a crowd of more than 100 people to listen to Knechtle explain what it means to have a personal relationship with Christ.

"Jesus Christ offers salvation and moral power to turn from evil and do what is right."Knechtle said. "Jesus Christ is trustworthy by evidence of his life, teaching and resurrection, which is historical evidence, not pyschological experience."

Knectle said the most frequent asked question is, "Does God care for me?" although it is usually masked behind other questions like, "Is God a loving God or a cosmic muscle flexing in outer space?"

Senior John Schortmann said he thought Knechtle was a much better speaker than the cross-toting evangelist who appeared on campus last week. "The guy with the cross was obnoxious. This guy has a lot of good things to say," Schortmann said.

"People need to have intellectual curiousity or spiritual thirst before they will realize the emptiness of their own crutches," Knechtle said. "Jesus Christ is able tof ill that spiritual thirst that we as human beings have."

UMass hopes videotape attracts new applicants

A videotape will soon be released about the University of Massachusetts for high school students who may be perspective applicants to the University.

The 10-minute video is not a substitute for the University's informational brochure or a visit to the campus. "They should all work together," Greg Rourke, vice president of LRN Viewbank Video Distributors, said.

"It gives an excellent feel for the University and its diversity," said Juan Caban, associate director for freshman admissions and coordinator of the Video Visitation Program.

The University will distribute the new video to schoold which have the highest number of college applicants. 'We hope it will interest students who may not have considered the University in the past," Caban said.

The video is still in the drafting stages and will be produced by Images Presentation. The final cost is unknown, but it is scheduled to be realeased in a month, Caban said.

The video distributors have also produced tapes about the five college area and information on how perspective students should fill out a University application. The videotapes can be rented for $4 to $12.

Thrust of constitution discussed as senate waits for approval

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

As the proposed Student Government Association's Constitution comes up for review during the next three weeks by area governments and Undergraduate student senators, many are expressing guarded optimism about the document while emphasizing the importance of passing it.

The final draft of the constitution, which was presented to senators at lasdt week's senate meeting, will be tabled automatically for three weeks. During this time, the constitution is reviewed by the seven area governments, four of which must approve of it. AFter the area government approval, the document will be voted on three weeks from tonight by the full senate before being sent to University Trustees.

The proposed constitutiuon will give students "the power to state policy on any question that pertains to students," said John Ruddock, senate speaker. It also "clarifies the role fo the student governance body to other campus governance bodies and makes clear the authority of the SGA to create and to approve expenditures of the SATG (Student Activity Trust Fund)."

Predicting the opposition the document may face from the Trustees, Ruddock said, "students are going to have to unify on this."

Dani Burgess, senate co-president and a member of the constitution task force set up three years ago to draft the document, said the constitutuion "guarantees us (students) an integral role on many levels that have to do with many aspects of the University.

Burgess is optimistic because having a proposed final draft of the document shows that the students "finally came to a decision with the administreation." Burgess added that the draft is a balance between the two groups and "as the balance stands now it's good because it guarnatees (protects) a lot of aspects of the SGA."

Ruddock, Burgess and many senators who have reviewed the draft said the student bill of rights section is a key section of the doccument. However, this is where Ruddock and Burgess, both of whom have spent extensive time on the draft, are concerned with trustee opposition.

"The trustee general counsel feels there are rights specified within the bill of rights that are merely a reinstatement of (U.S.) constitutional rights," Ruddock said. Because of this perceived overlapping, he said, the trustees may oppose the rights section.

Expressing the importance of the student rights, Bill Collins, a senator, said "students should understand that the SGA has been fighting a long time for control over student monies and control over their lives, but the administration is chipping away at student power." He added, "students should recognize that and stand up against it."

Senate Finance Committee Chair Jordan Rosner pointed at an important provision of power in the draft. Article V, section 2D states the senate should have the power to create, develop and approve the SATF budget request...

"It gives us a lot of power," Rosner said. "It gives the SGA the power to oversee the SAO (Student Activity Office) and all the other groups. The power to tell them instead of making a recommendation," he said.

"Budgetary autonomy is key for student empowerment," Burgess said.

Students to gain power

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Two key areas of the Student Government Association's proposed constitution include Undergraduate Student Senate budgetary power and a student bill of rights.

The budgetary power lets the senate create, develop and approve the SATF (Student Activity Fee) budget request. That provision has never been included in a SGA constitution. The power, article V, section 2D, would allow the senate to write up the budget and control the money that it receives through the $96 annual activity fee.

The activity fee provides money for the SGA to provide services, activities, and advocacy to the student community.

The stipulation of this senate power states the request "shall be reviewed by the vice-chancellor for student affairs, the campus budge directors, the chancellor, and the president before submission to the board of trustees for approval."

Although this may seem an infringement of complete student control, in all previous documents administrative input has even been greater, especially with issues dealing with student fiscal control.

The student bill of rights, if passed will mean that for the first time, there will be an officially recognized set of rights drafted and created for students. Some of the rights in summary are:

- •all students shall be guaranteed equal protection under University policy.
- •all students shall be guaranteed the right to receive and express ideas, opinions, or facts.
- •all students shall be guaranteed the right of Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity policies.
- •all students shall be guaranteed the right to privacy and security of personal effects.
- •students shall not be made to suffer any University penalty, except through established procedures which guarnatee due process.
- •There are several other rights granted in the section, including a section on procedural rights which is located at the end of the the document.

Pedestrians cause tractor to squash car

A tractor backed over the hood of a 1983 Oldsmobile and caused $900 in damages Monday morning at the corner of Commonwealth Avenue and Campus Center Way, University of Massachusetts police said.

The tractor was backing up to make room for crossing pedestrians and backed over the hood of the car which was stopped at a stop sign. There were no injuries and the dirve of the tractor was cited for failure to use care in backing, police said.

In other police reports:

- •A University staff member lost his balance and fell off his bicycle after he was forced off the sidewalk near the Campus Center Pond Monday afternoon. A truck was driving on the sidewalk and forced the man off the walk onto the ground. His bicycle and briefcase were slightly damaged. He was not injured, police said.
- •A tractor trailer truck received $100 in damages when it backed into and knocked over a light pole Monday afternoon on Campus Center Way. The amount of damage to the light pole is not known, police said.
- •A state van was vandalized in the parking lot north of Baker House on Monday. It received $350 in damages. The windshield of the van was smashed, police said.
- •A bicycle valued at $272 was stolen from a bick rack near Cance House Monday night. The bike was locked and the cable was cut, police said.

Woman ROTC member given fair chance at UMass

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Although small in numbers, women involved in the University of Massachusetts ROTC program are working hard to make their presence known.

Third-year cadet Betsy Lizotte said, "Women in the program have to work twice as hardas the males to prove themselves." However, she added, "Once we have shown the men that we are capable of keeping up with them, the walls break down and the men view us more as equals."

"I joined (ROTC) because I felt a loyalty to my country and wanted to do something extra."

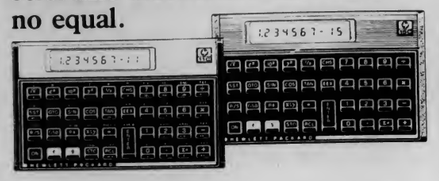
—Woman cadet

In the ROTC program there are certain areas that women are not allowed to participate in. "Women are not allowed to participate in the more combat-orietned programs," Lizotte said. "This doesn't really bother me because I don't think that anyone really wants to go into combat and kill people."

Major James Mahony said there are approximately 54 women, out of 230 ROTC members presently enrolled inthe program.

Women can be turned off from the program because ROTC traditionally has been a male-dominated organization, Lizotte said. Women involved are often called "hemen" but this is understandable, she said, because not many people realize the reasons why women enter the Army.

"I joined because I felt loyal to my country, and wanted to do something extra for it," Lizotte said. "Women should not be intimidated. They should go into ROTC with a professional attitude and work hard, that way they will be able to get the most out of the program.



First semester cadet Brian Madigan said, "I totally agree with women in the ROTC program. The women work harder than they really need to because they are viewed as equals by the officers as well as fellow male cadets."

Lizotte said that when she first entered three years ago she felt ignored by many of the men in the program, however, through the course of training the men grewa to except me as an equal.

"The thing that helped me become established was keeping physically fit. The men have more respect for the women when they are in physically good condition," she said.

The mind is also developed in the program, Lizotte said. "Each cadet must take office training class which is another place for competition to occur between men and women."

Put What You've Learned in College to the Ultimate Test.

The National Security Agency's Professional Qualification Test.

NSA's Professional Qualification Test (PQT) could be the most important test you ever take. Ultimately, it could qualify you for an exciting, challenging career with the National Security Agency.

NSA is responsible for analyzing foreign communications, safeguarding our government's vital communications and securing government computer systems. This unique three-fold mission keeps NSA on the cutting edge of technology and makes its work important enough to be a matter of national security.

Intrigued? Then take the PQT. It's an aptitude test for a broad range of career fields at NSA. If you qualify, you'll be contacted by an NSA representative to schedule an interview. At that time, we'll tell you about some of the exciting roles you could play in data systems, language, information science, communications and management.

So what are you waiting for? Pick up a PQT bulletin at your placement office, or write directly to NSA for a copy. The four hour test is given Saturday, October 26, 1985. There's no registration fee, but your registration form must be received no later than October 11.

If you're a graduate with a Bachelors or Masters degree in Electronic Engineering, Computer Science or a Slavic, Near Eastern or Asian language, you don't have to take the test. To schedule an interview with NSA, just contact your placement office.

Taking the PQT could be the most intelligent thing you do.

Register by October 11 to take NSA's Professional Qualification Test.

Graduate senate endorses unionization of employees

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate passed a motion last night endorsing a unionization effort by some professional employees whose job classifications were changed after a study wans conducted by the University.

The job and wage classification study, conducted by Olney Associates of Boston, resulted in the University's reqriting job descriptions of staff who are paid out of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF).

Some professional employees said that they are being hindered in their duties, some of which often place them in oppositon to the University, because they are now answerable to administration officials and not students.

"part of my job involves being in conflict with the University, and now that I am answerable to administrators, it compromises me in my job," said Jerry Scoppetuollo, who works for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Tom Coish, who is a professional in the Legal Services Office (LSO), added that he is answerable to an adminstrator in the Students Activities Office who has told the LSO professionals that he disagrees with the policy of the Board of Trustees which endorses the right of the LSO to sue the University.

"The LSO's major power is the power to sue the University, and yet we are answerable to an administration official who has already said he is agianst our having that power," Coish said.

"This shift of power (to the administrators) has taken place almost invisibly, and awe're trying to make it more visible so that students can decide if they want these employees answerable to them, since the SATF money belongs to the students," said Steve Hung who is helping the professionals in their unionization efforts.

Hunt, who is from the Office of Professional Employees International Union, is critical of the results of the Olney study.

"SOmetimes an organization uses a study like this to do what it wanted to do for a long time before," Hunt said.

Steam tunnel repairs delay opening of circle

By EILEEN MCDONOUGH
Collegian Correspondent

The Campus Center circle, which has been closed to traffic since May due to a structurally unsounded steam tunnel under the road, will tentatively reopen in September 1986.

Construction to rebuild the tunnel is expected to begin next summer, Physical Plant Operations Supervisor Peter Vozniak said. "The circle will hopefully be opened by next September," he said.

Wozniak estimated the final cost to be approximately $200,000 and is currently in the "process of getting funding for next summer," from the Dept. of Capital Planning and OPerations.

Last spring, the section of the tunnel extending alongside the Campus Center garage was excavated after a routine maintenance check indicated possible structural damage.

Wozniak attributed the trouble to "spalling," a process in which moisture seeps into the concrete causing flaking and erosion. As a result of "spalling," moisture penetrated to steel reinforcements which subsequently rusted, expanded, and then broke out of their concrete encasements. Evidence of spalling was found inside and outside of the tunnel.

Wozniak said the tunnel's age (approximately 40 years old) was a greater contributing factor to the tunnel's deterioration than the heavy traffic of the Campus Center circle.

Another section of the tunnel located between Goessman and Hasrouk laboratories, has also been chained off due to the erosion of an underlying steam tunnel.

Construction did not begin this fall due to the approaching cold weather and the inconvenience it would present to reroute Campus Center garage traffic and pedestrian traffic.

All buses servicing UMass have been rerouted to the Haigis Mall.

Ideology is senate's

In contrast to Jordan Rosner's position stated in his Sept. 23 letter to the Collegian, I feel that it is the senate which is operating with a peculiar ideology and not the Commuter Area Government.

The idea of an area government appointing those people who reflect that body's interests is not objectionable. What is objectionable is that the senate accepts the appointments of on-campus senators with no argument and then attempts to contravene the constitutional authority of the CAG Governing Board to make senate appointments.

An incident that took place at last week's senate meeting clearly shows that some on campus residents and "conservatives" will flout the democratic process to serve their own peculiar political ends. In that meeting, the president of the Southwest Area Government in one breath questioned the CAG Governing Board's qualifications to make appointment to the senate, and in the next breath attempted to make these appointments himself! Tell me, since when does someone from Southwest have the right to supercede the appointing authority of the democratically elected governing body of another area?

Also, I feel obligated to correct some of Rosner's misstatements of facts. The policy of the Governing Board is to interview each senate applicant unless her/his written application is deemed to show an outstanding enough comprehension of off campus students' issues to warrant a waiver of said interview. In the case of the three applicants Rosner alludes to, although he and one of the others had "good" applications. None of the three applicants even mentioned issues which are specific to off campus students, i.e. bus service, rental rates, the authority fee, etc. The three applicants who did address commuter issues were chosen, while the remaining five students (which included two "progressives"), were scheduled for interviews.

It is clear that Rosner's intentions are not so much to provide representation for off campus students but to incite a "conservative" student takeover of the CAG through the use of Jerry Falwell-esque red-baiting rhetoric. As teh Commuter AReа Government Spokesperson, I urge all off campus students, whether they be radical-left, radical-right, middle-of-the-road, or just concerned, to join the CAG in its struggle to improve bus service, pass rent control legislation, and serve the interests of the off campus student population.

Commuter Area Government

Spiritually celebrating

In reference to Jill Lang's Sept. 23 article, "Inner celebration can be just as fulfilling for some," I agree. It is important for one to remember their heritage and to have an "inward expression of a celebration." Nobody has the right to call you a "bad Jew" for not going to services, since nobody yet knows what encompasses a "good Jew."

Unfortunately, I do not see your point, Jill, about not wanting to go to services because you would feel you were deceiving yourself. Does going to the library on Rosh Hashanah makes you feel the holiday more spiritually? You said you would rather not go at all than sit in the face of your heritage feeling like a hypocrite. So, instead, you avoided your heritage on one of its holiest days.

You see, there are many options that one has on a Jewish holiday in Amherst. Not only are there Hillel service, but brunches and break the fasts, as well as the activities of the Jewish communities in Amherst and Northampton. Who says you must celebrate as a group? A quiet day with a friend, remembering the holy day, is better than not celebrating it at all.

I believe, Jill, instead of feeling that "inward expression of a celebration," you avoided it totally.

Faulty Affirmative Action

Stephen Erickson

As set forth in the Bill of Rights and the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Civil Rights are designed to protect the individual from a tyranny of the majority, regardless of race, sex, or national origin. Martin Luther King realized the need to be "color blind" when, at his famous speech from the Lincoln Memorial, he told of his dream that one day people would "not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character."

The kind of legislation advocated for Civil Rights groups today, however, does not serve to protect the individual regardless of race, but employs racial discrimination as a criterion for preferential treatment. Regretfully, it appears that the very fundamental and central idea that flesh tone says little about a person has been lost, even perverted, by the leadership of today's Civil Rights movement.

Racial quotas and other forms of racial discrimination are employed throughout our society in the form of "Affirmative Action." Such quotas are applied across the board to every member of a racial, ethnic, or sexual group that is generally believed to be disadvantaged. The philosophy of protecting, and in this case promoting, groups as opposed to individuals is funamentally flawed, as generalizations about groups (i.e. women are physically weaker than men, blacks are raised in ghettos, Hispianics are lazy), can by definition only apply to a portion of the group. It is the individual that needs protection, and it is the individual that is cheated in today's "Affirmative Action" programs.

As an illustration of this, let us suppose that a black man and a white man are applying for the same open position in a manufacturing company. The white man, in this particular instance, appears more qualified for the position, but due to "Affirmative Action" quotas, the black man is hired. The white man has therefore been deprived of employment on the basis of his skin color, and thus, his Civil Rights have been violated. This is blatent racism, pure and simple. There is really no such thing as reverse discrimination, only discrimination.

Although not the rule, it is possible that is this case the white man is from a more disadvantaged background than the black man. If the white were from an impoverished and broken home, for example, and the black from a middle class family, then the general premise that guides "Affirmative Action," that black people are more disadvantaged than white people, would be incorrect in this case. Therefore, the white man not only has been discriminated against, but also the disadvantaged has not been served.

In addition, racism against blacks might be further fueled by "Affirmative Action." As a consequence of the more qualified white applicant's rejection, his racial prejudice against blacks, if he had one, may be now intensified.

Today's acknowledged Civil Rights leaders don't seem to realize the problems and tragic contradictions in their policies. The fact is that when Civil Rights cease to protect, and in fact hurt the individual, then they are no longer Civil Rights, but Civil Wrongs. Racism stops only when we cease to be black, yellow, and white people, but look at ourselves and each other as individuals, deserving of equal opportunity, respect and dignity.

ANC sympathies diversified

At the risk of being termed a "self-righteous leftist," I simply must respond to Peter Dow's specious assertions published in the Sept. 19 Collegian.

Dow's basic premise seems to be that responsible people should not support the goals of the African National Congress, because some ANC members are communist sympathizers. This is like saying that we should not drink milk because some milk drinkers are alcoholics. Dow quickly compounds the absurdity of his argument by characterizing Nelson Mandela as a "noted terrorist". Poor old Nelson! That unfortunate gentleman has been imprisoned for over 20 years, much of that time in solitary confinement, and has had scant opportunity to "terrorize" anybody at all.

Dow states that 30 mayors, 17 people, Bartholomew Hlapane, et. al., were murdered in particularly grisly fashion "by ANC extrmists." These are serious charges indeed, yet no a shred of evidence or even the name of one convicted murderer is offered. Of course, we reject murder and other acts of violence under normal conditions. However, I must point out that if the American colonists of the 1770s had practiced total non-violence, we might all be British subjects today. The difference between "terrorists" and "patriot" depends largely on whose side you're on.

If the ANC is dominated by the Communist Party, (and 10 our of 22 members does not constitute domination) we may regretfully attribute it to the fact that western governments have for years ignored the incredible suffering of millions of Zulu, Bantu, Xhosa, and Kung people. I suggest that our former policy of "constructive engagement" should have meant engagement with such groups as SWAPO, Inkatha, and the ANC.

Dow closes his bizarre remarks with the even more bizarre prediction of a "massive bloodbath" to come should the ANC come to power. Similar predictions failed to materialize in Zimbabwe during black majority takeover. In fact, black South Africans have behaved for the most part with remarkable restraint in the face of disenfranchisement, oppression, torture, and murder.

Majority rule in South Africa is as certain as tomorrow's sunrise, and it is our actions now that will determine how we are viewed by the new powers then.

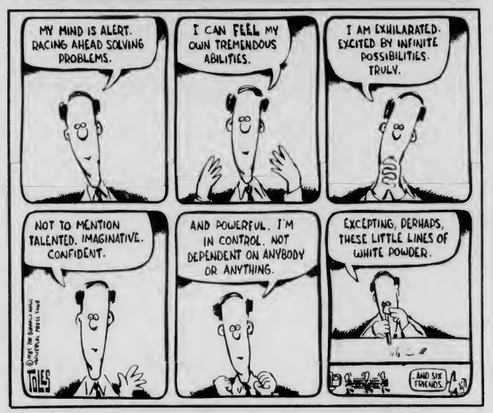
Sexual harassment clarification

The article on the current University Sexual Harassment Policy printed on Sept. 12 was in error as to the number of persons that review a formal complaint. As the policy now stands, if a formal complaint is filed by the complainant, then the parties involved come before a three member Hearing Board. These three persons are selected from the 13 member Sexual Harassment Hearing Panel.



The article also failed to clearly state that it is the complainant's choice whether to process his or her complaint through the formal procedure or the informal procedure. The complainant has the choice of forum. The article did not clearly point this out.

The current University Harassment Policy is presently under revision. If anyone has a question concerning the policy or the procedures, please feel free to contact the Office of Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity at 545-3464.

Responsibility of freedom

David Valade

Apathy is one of the greatest problems in our modern political society. Most people, when analyzing this statement, would claim that people just don't care anymore. Is this the whole answer? Do people really not care about what happens in the world, in the country, in our surroundings, and in our lives?

Much of the problem of apathy lies in a sense of powerlessness in our society. Every four years we vote for a president, each six years for senators, and every other year for federal representatives. Other than this, little input is given to governmental affairs by the average person. The only real political power used by many is their vote.

Almost as many don't vote because of their belief that it doesn't matter: One vote won't make a difference. Even those who do vote don't perceive it as making a major difference in the scheme of political events.

This sense of powerlessness goes even further. As students in such a large, bureaucratized university, we are often no more than a number. To many professors we are usually just another face in the crowd. Much of this will remain the same when we graduate. In the work place we will have almost no sense of power. The boss and corporate dictates become a way of life. Our economic life is the same. We are offered only what Madison Avenue executives feel is marketable.

So what can be done? Many people would answer that nothing can be done, and accept a fate determined by powers beyond their reach. Those that answer nothing have given up any hope of personal freedom. A death before its time is conceded. Some believe there is something that can be done, but aren't sure what it is. They go on accepting in quiet acquiesence. Very few believe there is an alternative, that we are not powerless in the face of system that would have us believe so.

Who are we? Often we term ourselves radical. Different labels are used. Marxist, leftist, and anarchist are a few. Whatever the label, a common bond of non-acceptance brings us together. Our tactics vary, but most ogten they are non-violent. They range from boycotts, strikes, and sit-ins to civil disobedience. All of these are aimed at saying,"No, we don't agree, so we are making a political statement of resistance."

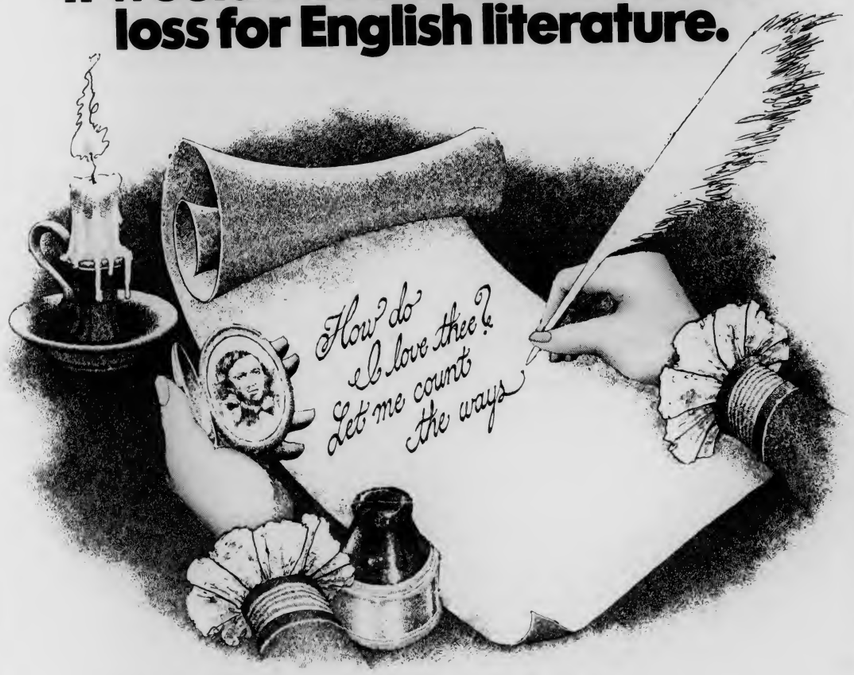
The key is to resist, to not accept what you know is wrong. The buses in Montgomery, Alabama were desegregated through a boycott. Increased civil rights for blacks came through demonstrations and other acts of civil disobedience. These same tactics freed India from the British and ended the Vietnam War.

The workers' strikes by Solidarity almost toppled the Polish government. In 1968, the Soviet Union invaded Czechoslovakia and had to negotiate with the ousted powers because of worker strikes and general civilian disobedience. People will tell you that these are leftover tactics from the 60s and don't work anymore. They are wrong. They are the only effective political power we have in this system.

So what can be done? Say no when we know something is wrong. It is our responsibility to resist. But most of all, think. Mother Jones, "an orator, union organizer, and hell-raiser" said "Sit down and read. Educate yourself for the coming conflicts." Somehow we will have power. Only then can we be free.

David Valade is a UMass student.

DC theft not excessively high



"Shoplifting affects us all" may have brought an effect on the accused of the dining commons. However, Laurie Francis' Sept. 23 letter was stained with discrepancies. $10,000 was quoted as the annual replacement cost for pilfered dishes, silverware, glasses, etc. Based on $529 per semester for two semsters for 11,000 people, (according to Francis' letter) over $11.6 million is generated in meal plan sales annually. This reveals that the $10,000 figure is not excessively high. One need not be a math major to simply divide $10,000 by $11.6 million and find that .08% (less than one tenth of one percent) is realized for replacement costs for the school's food service operation.

Having worked in restaurants for four years, I can also testify that supplies can be pilfered throughout the entire system, from the serving line to the dishwasher. Anyone who puts a plate in their hand has a chance to put it in their pocket.

Finally, Director of Operations Dick Rossi remarked that steak might be available "two nights a month instead of one" if we were to eliminate the $10,000 cost incurred by students purloining goods. The 91 cents realized annually per student would hardly serve an extra steak to us a month. I am not an expert on the cost of beef, but I don't believe that eight steaks can be purchased for 91 cents.

Spectrum

By BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

Political art is not unique to our century: Governments, both secular and religious, have glorified themselves through art ever since the first pot of ink was mixed. It is only relatively recently however—within the last few centuries—that artists have protested political injustice through their work. The Fall 1985 issue of Spectrum, which will be distributed throughout this week, is a strikingly moving collection of critical art by UMass students.

Subtitled "Color in the Gaps," the latest issue of Spectrum claims its theme to be "The Third World and a New World." This, however, is too limited a delineation. The works are concerned with poverty, angst and injustice both foreign and domestic. Pieces dealing with Africa, India and Central America are interspersed with pieces dealing with similar discontent in our own country, in Holyoke and in New York. Are the editors suggesting that there is a third world contained within the U.S., Inner City evolved to Inner Country? Obviously.

Whether set in Nicaragua or UMass, the pieces are always lucid and generally well-executed. Hoy-Cheong Wong's Captive! is a lovely painting styled after Gaugin, demonstrating black exploitation in South Africa. A similar work, less straightforward but just as powerful, is Peter Luchetti's charcoal, Apartheid Allegory.

The photography is uniformly beautifl and wonderfully reproduced. Karen Krieger's Massai Woman and Steve Hart's Massai Warrior intoxicate the viewer with their dazzling use of color. Steve Hart's presence is distinct throughout the magazine, and his images are always piercing.

Of a more erratic quality is the writing. Lisa S. Arrastia has several terrific works, probably the best of which is a poem, Avenues, which depicts though dialogue and very sparse description a daily commute to Harlem. MaryAnn Ryan's poem, In the News, about a gas leak in Bhopal is tense and terrifying, and Charles F. Carroll's South African Chant has the rythmically excalating intensity of the genre he is emulating. There are, however,

Mayhem overtakes the Ramones

THE RAMONES
Agora Ballrooom, Hartford
Fri. Sept. 20

By ADAM BRIGHTMAN
Collegian Staff

A war was raged Friday night in Hartford. The Ramones were the unhappy participants. Agora Ballroom security personnel played a hearty game of choke the slam-dancer, as the beefy, young lads frequently darted on stage to nab members of the audience who tried to jump back into the crowd.

Concert Review

After a hilarious, thrashing set of surf-punk and trash-metal tunes by local heroes the Pajama Slave Dancers, (featuring such titles as "Scoutmasters from Hell" and a rhythm guitarist with a plastic rodent nibbling upon his ear), the stage was set for The Ramones. Punk rock blared out from the speakers. Crowds of safety-pinned, spiky-haired youths filed in alongside blue-jeaned heavy metallers, packing the place.

Now leave this scene and return to the late seventies. Picture yourself in a small, hot, crowded club, in the inner city somewhere, probably New York. The crowd is restless and has the look of people beyond the fringe of clean living. The stage has been dark for a few minutes, suddenly four dark figures in leather and torn jeans take their places.

The muscle-faced hass player, Dee Dee, pipes out the immortal phrase, "ONE-TWOTHREEFOUR!" Instantly bare-bones rock-and-roll chokes everyone in the place. People are dancing like a bunch of pogo sticks, as the band reels off song after song, most not much more than a minute in length.

On the surface the sound, the lyrics, the singing, the playing are all seemingly inane and juvenile. Yet, there is something quite obvious underneath the meatheads' from Queens dumb face. There is a wit so deep and real that can't be denied, expecially in the greatest ode to apathy ever, "I Don't Care."

They have touched emotions others, who were too busy twisting knobs in a studio or jamming, have glossed over. They are the living proof that less is almost always more, leveling the earth with an adrenaline-fueled backbeat, a tuneless singer, and endless streams of three-chords rockers. With a simple line like, "I'm Against It," the Ramones manage the greates putdown of punk nihilists anywhere.

Now come back to last Friday night. The Ramones have been on the road for ten years and have changed their format slightly. Singer Joey, (who is beginning to look more and more like a mop-topped Frankenstein) now grunts and bellows select lines of songs, apparently bored with his old habit of droning the lyrics completely. Guitarists Johnny and Dee Dee now stand upon the speaker stacks—a stunning effect.

The battle raging between slamming enthusiasts, doing backflips on the heads of the crowd, and muscle-bound security people dragging away anyone they could catch from the front of the stage. Perhaps this could be seen as a simple attempt to keep the peace, but it seemingly went deeper than that. It became a battle of egos. Who was going to take control? Would it have been possible?

The one sure thing about this show was that the Ramones were the victims. Confusion took over enthusiasm as security people pushed passed band members, dragging slam-dancers away by the neck. Many of the songs still worked well, recapturing some of the verve that once made them America's greates rock band, but as audience and strongmen wrestled for control, the Ramones ended their show with Joey slamming his microphone down in disgust.

Ramones guitarist Johnny in rehearsal.

ARTS

Symposium stresses American art forms

By SUE IZZO
Collegian Staff

Three to four hundred people of all ages were present at the Rand Theater on Monday to attend the Art Symposium, celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Fine Arts Center and the 20th anniversary of the National Endowment of the Arts. Entitled Art in America: Now and the Next Ten Years, the aim of this symposium was to look back on the accomplishments that the arts and the humanities have made within these last 20 years and to look ahead to what can be done in order to continue this progression in paving new roads and breaking new ground in the arts.

A panel representing all areas of the arts as well as a representative of the National Endowment of the Arts, spoke for two and a half hours debating, questioning, and theorizing on the role of art and its place in the lives of Americans. Some found that there were uniquely nationalistic art forms, such as musical theater and jazz, within our society, yet others seemed to feel that, while such American art forms did exist, the desire to recognize and support them left much in the hands of the artists themselves.

Martin Puryear, a leading American abstract sculptor, felt that the United States has far surpassed Europe in the visual arts, saying that once American art stopped imitating European ideals and began reflecting its own lifestyle, we were able to overcome the area long-dominated by Europeans.

And how can we continue to build our credibility in the world of arts, prforming as well as visual? Jazz musician Max Roach noted the need for American orchestras to begin to feature more American compositions and conductors instead of relying on the standard European music.

Another answer to this question is the need to educate the audience. The entire panel seemed to agree that an all-around education in the liberal arts rather than a specialized education needs to be reinstated if there is going to be an informed audience once again. Gunther Schuller, musician and composer, gave facts by stating that even though art is available for the public, public television is only viewed by 3 percent of the population and there are only 15 public stations in the nation. All panelists felt that once our nation becomes "art literate," the percentage will increase and the nation, will begin to recognize the importance of our nationalistic art forms.

On the whole, the speeches by the panel were centered on the need for Americans to become involved in arts. ✱ many less successful works which are didactic and sterile.

While Guy LeBlanc is consistently stimulating in his painting, A Time and a Place for Everything stresses what is obvious and demeans his work. There are two paintings by Yohar Ralph which are just wretched. And Evie Pace, who demonstrated the effectiveness of her photography in Cabbage Town and Clermont Hotel, also presents us with the cliched senselessness of The Art of Smashing T.V.

Most of the works in Spectrum are excessively preachy and turgid. Although these can be justified by the importance of their message, one wishes that the pieces would show more restraint, more subtlty. Jamie Gamble's photograph showing Nicaraguan youths wearing American t-shirts (one reads, "Jimmy Carter for President") clustered around a singing soldier is much more effective than Yadira Betances' bombastic article, Nicaragua News.

Steve Hart's photography is among the striking work in Spectrum.

Jazz guitarist Remler an "exceptional talent"

"Catwalk (Concord Jazz)
Emily Remler

By GLENN SIEGEL
Collegian Correspondent

Jazz record sales in this country accounted for only 2 ercent of the total number of records sold in 1983, down om 4 percent in 1982. Even the uncommon record ex- cutive who has a sincere desire not to pur commercial demands on the music, cannot afford to keep too many jazz artists in the spotlight.

Artists such as Dizzy Gillespie and Ella Fitzgerald, performers who have been to the White House (re: "Big House"), have assured places in the jazz firmament. Surrounding this inncer circle is a concentric group, including Wynton Marsalis and Pat Metheny, waho are industry, however, is not well-lit. Many good musicians will not get adequate exposure, their audiences will never find them.

One talented musician in this shadowy world is guitarist Emily Remler. At age 28, this thoroughly accomplished guitarist and composer has a breadth of style land depth of soul to become "famous" (not an unmixed blessing). However, her priorities are in order. As Nat Hentoff has said about Remler: "This is more than exceptional talent; this is someone who from the top of the first chorus, lets you know who she is." The Afro-American tradition in which she works is nothing if not about "telling your story."

Record Review

Catwalk is her forth and most recent release on the Concord Record label. The seven sides that make up the lp are all Remler originals, and in the hands of trumpeter John D'earth, bassist Eddie Gomez, jpercussionist Bob Moses and EMily Remler, they are woven into distinct and colorful tapestries.

"Antonio" is a bit of funkiness in a Latin groove that exposes Remler's rock roots. In the equally upbeat "Mozambique," Gomez and Remler lay down an insistent, almost hypnotic phrase that keeps returning in between some straight ahead swinging. Although Remler taught herself rock guitar before enrolling at the Berklee School of Music to study jazz, she can improvise in ballad and moody tempos with a subtle probing that is, as the saying goes "rare in an artist her age." On "Five Years" (in which D'earth plays an enchanted muted trumpet throughout), Remlet has faith her audience can hear the beauty in things ambiguous and unresolved.

The tight changes, sensitive accompaniment and dynamic interplay you will hear throughout this date could only have been produced by musicians who are not only well-versed on their instruments, but possessed of great listening skills as well. This quartet did not meet each other at the recording studio—they have been playing together for some time.

talented and appealing enough to pull the spoltight their way (with assistance). This small corner of the recording Talent is only one of the many variables involved in predicting public recognition. In Emily Remler's case, even at this early juncture in her musical adyssey, it is abundantly clear that variable won't be a barrier.

Curtis becomes director

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondent

Director of the 4-H program, Otis Curtis.

Otis Curtis, a former extension specialist for the Volunteer and Natural Resources programs of Stockbridge, has been named director of the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service 4-H program.

"The Extension Service is a cooperative effort of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the land grant univeristy of each state, and the local county government," Curtis said. The program which started as an agricultural program has developed into areas such as water resouce management, home economics, community development and 4-H. The 4-H program is the youth branch of the extension service with the 4-H's being the head, heart, health and hands.

As director, Curtis is responsible for the statewide 4-H program, which operates out of 13 county offices, with one to five agents in each office. These agents run programs at the county and local levels.

The service was originally formed to "extend what had been taught to local communities," Curtis said. The service was primarily for farmers who could not take the time to attend the land grant universities that had been created for them.

The eExtension Service differs from undergraduate and continuing education because it focuses on "immediate decision making" Curtis said.

Eighty-five thousand youths between the ages og nine and 19 participate in the Massachusetts 4-H program, along with 5,000 volunteers. Curtis will "see that the staff members are effecient in recruiting volunteers and training them." He said he wants the 4-H program to "become better at making the most most of our volunteer staff."

In addition to direction the 4-H program, Curtis is working on his doctorate in education. He said he plans to do his dissertation on volunteers and volunteer education. Fifteen years ago, he said, people volunteered because they "wanted to help." Now, "people volunteer as a re-entry into the working world and for the experience that waill help them get a job."

People get involved initially out of interest for a cause, but stick around because of personal realtionships they've developed, Curtis said.

ed ways of applying the findings tot the University. Gadlin drafted a proposal last spring using the information from the council.

"Sometimes students didn't know they were doing anything wrong" Gadlin said. "So the new policy is meant to be educational as well as a procedure for handling cases of dishonesty."

Gadlin gave no estimate as to when the new policy will go into effect.

Family service center planned by group

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondent

The isolation involved in raising a child in Amherst will be alleviated somewhat next year if all goes according to plans of the steering committee for a new family center in town.

The center is "intended to be a place where children and adults can spend time together," Marie Hartwell-Walker, a member of the committee, said. Hartwell-Walker said she first thought of the center in 1976, but the plans were "put on a back burner" while she raised her family of three children.

The steering committee was formed last year.

The center will have six rooms, three for children and three for adults. The children's section will be separated into a room each for infants, toddlers, and pre-schoolers. The center will oprate from October to May, when playgrounds aren't open because, "the best toy for kids is another kid," Hartwell-Walker said.

The adult rooms will serve varying functions. One will be open to children with a parent and another will be off-limits to kids and will serve as a quiet room for studying or reading. A third room will be a classroom for parental education, nutrition, exercise, and yoga.

One main goal of the center, Hartwaell said, is to "nurture the people who have to do all the nurturing," and to help parents "get some space for themselves."

The center will not be a baby-sitting service, since the adult has to remain at the center with the child. But the parent will be able to be with other adults and interact with his or her child in a different situation.

$20,000 is needed for the center to open next year. Two-thirds of the money will go toward staff, who will be "fully qualified, early childhood specialists.

Although there is no specific location set for the center yet, Hartwell-Walker said that it would be "central and on the bus route." The committee is looking for space to accomodate approximately 100 adults and 100 children.

In spite of a seemingly undemocratic selection process, Goldman maintains the overall democratic form of government is good. "It is dangerous to change the rules in fear of an unhappy outcome. In such a system, you hope the rights of minorities are protected."

However, Goldman noted, "Those who are opposed to abortion look at the fetus as a minority. They believe that it has rights as well.

Ellen Story, staff member at the Family Planning Center in Northampton, also forsees that women's rights and freedoms will suffer under Reagan's power to appoint judges to the highest court.

Story said people should see this as something of "universal concern and one people can unite around. It is not just a women's issue or a liberal issue, it is a human issue. It is something that cuts across many lines. There are many men who are vociferous supporters of the right to abortion and many women who are conservative on fiscal and economic issues, but believe that abortion needs to be a legalized procedure."

In terms of health, "women will get abortions if they are legal or not. It is necessary to have them performed by qualified physicians in a clean environment," she said.

"They do some really nice things," Pincince said. "We just don't have the speed they do up front. As a whole, they were the fastest I've ever seen them.

"It would have been a major upset for us to win," he added.

But for the Bruins, who face top-ranked George Mason on Saturday, there was to be no upset. The win, the 99h in UM's women's varsity program, goes down as a win in the Massachusetts books.

SOCCER NOTES—Massachusetts has outscored its opponents by a 29-0 margin...UMass will be the second team in the country to win 100 games if they beat Vermont in Burlington, VT., on Saturday. Harvard was the first team to do it.

Men's soccer hosting PC

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team starts a six-game homestand today as it faced Providence College on Boyden Field.

The Minutemen, 5-3 after splitting two games this past weekend at the Iona College Tournament in New York, host the Friars at 3 p.m.

UMass defeated Providence 2-1 last season. This season midfielder Andy Bing has been playing well as of late. Bing (the most valuable player at the Iona tourney) has two goals and two assists in his last two games.

UMass will play host to a series of New England rivals starting today as Vermont, Yale, Rhode Island, Northeastern, Hartford and St. Joseph's invade Boyden Field over the next few weeks.

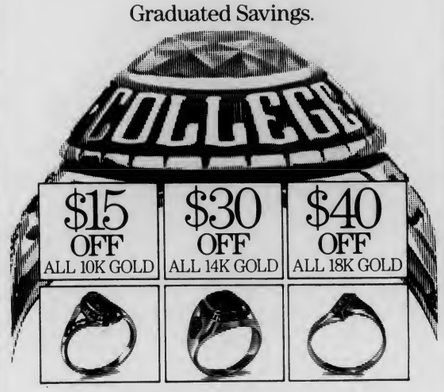
UMass is 2-0 at home this season, beating both Fairfield and Dartmouth.

Water polo favored

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's water polo team will square off against six other New England teams in the UMass Fall Water Polo Tourney on Friday and Saturday.

The Minutemen are heavily favored to win the whole tourney after coming off a split in their four game competition two weeks ago at Brown University.



The competition for this weekend's tournament consists of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, the United States Coast Guard Academy, Rhode Island, Trinity, Hamilton, and Amherst College. The only two teams that could pose a threat to UMass's chances of winning the whole thing are Amherst College, and Trinity College. These two teams have recruited several players since last season, but should still not be a factor in the Minutemen's odds on victory.

The first game will be at 5:00 on Friday and even though UMass will be without Kentucky transfer John Turner due to a groin injury, Coach Russ Yarworth remains optimistic.

"Sure we'll miss John, but I feel that with Bill Feeeny (high scorer in the Brown tourney), and Mike Hoover we will be just fine considering the competition."

Soccer crushes Brown

Women win, 6-0 for fifth straight shutout, are 2nd

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Brown University's women's soccer coach Phil Pincince knew why his seventh ranked Bruins had been run down 6-0 by a speedy second ranked University of Massachusetts squad, yesterday, at Boyden Field.

"They're an outstanding team," he said. "They are playing more like a team. Last year, they were playing more as individual's and that's a big key."

The undefeated Minutewomen registered their fifth straight shutout, dominating their slower opponents, passing almost at will and beating Brown by its biggest margin ever as UMass sophomore Monica Seta scored two goals in front of 150 rain-soaked but hearty fans.

"I didn't expect it (such a high score)," UMass coach Kalekeni Banda said, "but not to say that I didn't think we were capable of it."

Pincinine said, "We knew that they were much faster than us. We tried to slow them down in the first half. Maybe I made the mistake of trying to open it up in the second half."

Massachusetts, who has outshot its opponents 110-6 through five games, was tentative in the early going and although they dominated play, UMass only led 1-0 at the half.

"I just told them (the UM players) go out and burn them," Banda said, "move the ball up field quickly. They (Brown) like to pack in the middle of the field. If we took our time, it would give them a chance to recover."

So UMass, 5-0, ran and ran and ran. The forwards ran, the midfielders ran and the fullbacks ran. THe fullbacks, senior co-captain Sue Bird and sophomores Chris Schmitt and Debbie Belkin anchored a tough UMass defense and helped spark the offense.

Each had a few runs upfield at the goal. Schmitt gave UMass the 1-0 lead with 10:40 to go in the first half. The sophomore brought the ball over the 50-yard-line to the top of the penalty area and lofted a shot that just sailed under the cross-bar.

"That's the way he (Banda) wants us to play," Bird said. "He wants us to play from the back and bring the ball up. The other team doesn't expect fullbacks to play offense."

Nor do other teams expect forwards to play good defense. The fleet UMass forwards, notably Cathy Spence, Cathy Cassady, Beth Roundtree and Seta, kept the ball in the Brown end by stopping Bruin advances.

It was only 1-0 at the half but UMass added on to that quickly with Seta scoring with 3:50 gone in the second half with a nice high shot into the corner of the net for the 2-0 lead.

Twelve minutes later, Seta scored her sixth of the year off a Carolyn Micheel corner kick. Seta took the ball, in a crowd, and hit it past Bruin goalie Sue Caples. 3-0, UMass.

With 18:40 to go, the Minutewomen displayed the pretty passing that carried them all day. Cassady drove to the goal from the left, passed the ball out to Sandy Stripp, who passed it over to Kristen Bowsher near the right corner of the goal.

Bowsher, who has been nursing a bruised kneww, popped it home for the 4-0 lead. The sophomore all-American saw limited time and was slowed down by the knee.

It was the one-touch, two-touch passing that enabled UMass to pass the ball well. "We played one-touch, two-touch," Bird said. "That's the way to play. None of this dribbling bit. That's how you get the ball taken away."

And that's how the Bruins, who suffered their worst defeat in four years, got the ball taken away.

UMass made it 5-0 when Spence crossed a pass to Michele Powers standing alone in front of the Bruin goal. With Caples way out-of-position, Powers headed it, missed the shot and kicked in the rebound.

Cassedy lofted a nice cross from the right side to Micheel who headed the ball into the left corner for the sixth gcal of the game. It was Micheel's fourth goal of the year.

UM football hits Top 20 in 1-AA poll

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Only two New England football teams are ranked nationally this week- and the University of Massachusetts is one of them. The Minutemen are ranked 17th in the latest Divison 1-AA poll. AT 2-1, UMass is in the weekly rankings for the first time since 1981. Rhode Island (2-1) is the only other Yankee Conference or New England team to be ranked. The Rams are 15th.

The University of Richmond, tight 19-14 victors over UMass earlier this season, is ranked first in the poll at 3-0. Nevada-Reno, Marshall, Grambling, Middle-Tennessee, Arkansas State, William and Mary, Delaware State, Murray State and Idaho State round out the top 10.

"Rankings don't mean much, HOly Cross was fifth and we pounded them," said UMass defensive coordinator Jim Reid. "But they sure do feel nice."

Holy Cross, after a 27-3 beating from UMass on Saturday, dropped out of the poll. The Minutemen, with 18 points, were just a point behind 16th ranked Appalachian State. The second ten included Lamar, ILlinois State, Mississippi Valley State, Delaware, Rhode Island, Appalachian State, UMass, Furman, West Carolina and Louisiana Tech.

After two straight 3-8 seasons, quality footballis back at UMass. The Minutemen face a tough Harvard team (47-17 winners over Columbia last week) in Cambridge on Saturday.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Freshman quarterback Dave Palazzi was named Yankee Conference and ECAC Rookie-of-the-Week. Freshman inside linebacker John McKeown was named to the weekly ECAC All-Star team for the second consecutive week. In national defensive standings, the Minutemen are 12th against the rush (72.6 yards-per-game), 13th in scoring defense (10.1 points-per-game) and 20th in total defense (264 yards-per-game).

The Minutemen are averaging 12,866 fans over two hame games. The Boston Globe interviewed head coach Bob Stull for a Friday feature story. UMass has played Harvard 17 times, all at Harvard. The Crimson hold a 10-6-1 series lead, but only a 7-6-1 edge in the last 14 meetings.

Holy Cross Coach Rick Carter on UMass' defense: They are very strong, they come up to the ball well. We couldn't get the ball in or come up with the big play. They have a very good team now.

UMass beat Harvard 21-7 in 1983 (the last meeting between the two teams). The Minutemen, one of tawo teams to beat Harvard that season, scored three first quarter touchdowns, one on a Frank Fay run, another on a Jim-to-Bob Simeone touchdown pass and the third on a Rod Turre-interception return. . .12,000 are expected for Saturday's game. . .former UMass player Mike McEvilly works for the Holy Cross radio network.

Cross country takes opener at Yale

UMass' depth defeats Elis and Boston College

By PHIL SAYLES
Collegian Correspondent

Bolstered by an impressive display of depth in its season opener, the University of Massachusetts men's cross country team won a three-team meet at Yale last week, defeating both the Elis and Boston College.

UMass, placing five of the first nine finishers, was low with 30 points. Yale had 45 and a strong Boston College team was third (and last) with 50 points.

"Our depth came through the way we hoped it would," said Minuteman coach Ken O'Brien.

UMass was paced by senior John Panaccione who picked up where he left off last season, taking third with a time of 26:21.

Boston College junior Joe Rocha was first with a 26:10. Rocha's teammate, John Clopeck, was second with a 26.11.

"John ran an outstanding race considering the hot and humid conditions," noted O'Brien, who also pointed out the hilly course, "was extremely tough" to run on.

Placing fifth was sophomore senstation Bill Stewart of UMass. Stewart, despite coming off a bad cold the previous week, turned in a time of 27:01. After Stewart, Jan Novak and John Lorenzini were sixth and seventh respectively.

Rich Dows ninth place finish rounded out the top finishers for the Minutemen.

"This was a very big win for us," said O'Brien. "Boston College was ranked 11th nationally last year and I think the team now knows it can compete with anyone."

UMass will have a big test on Saturday when it faces powerful Georgetown University and Ivy League standout Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire.

The team will then have twao week soff before running against Northeastern, Lowell, Keene State and UConn at Boston's Franklin Park on October 12.

Evacuation possible as hurricane nears

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

A decision will be made this morning whether to evacuate the University of Massachusetts campus today as Hurricane Gloria hovers ominously near the Eastern seaboard.

National Weather Service forecasters said Gloria, packing winds of up to nearly 150 mph, could reach southern New England tomorrow.

While resident assistants contacted in the Orchard Hill and Central residential areas last night had no knowledge of the evacuation, callers informed the Collegian and WMUA radio of the possible evacuation plan. The students, who had been present at or gotten word of a housing staff meeting in the Dwight-Johnson-Leach cluster in the Northeast Residential Area, said the Decision would be made by noon today.

If the evacuation occurs, area busses will be rented by the school to send students to their homes across the state.

At a meeting yesterday afternoon attended by representatives from every building and department on campus, Operations Director for the Physical Plant, Peter Wozniak, outlined a possible plan of action should the hurricane strike. The plans are preliminary precaution, and are contingent upon severe weather. A final decision may be reached later today.

"There is a strong possibility Gloria will hit," Wozniak said. If power is lost the top priorities will be the Physical Plant and the University of Health Center, he said. Excess coal will be delivered to maintain steam levels at the power plant. Heat damage may occur during a power loss because steam vents will be turned on, he said.

If the University lost power, it would also lose air-conditioning. "Consider how this will affect research," Wozniak said, citing chemicals which could react at room temperatures.

Building elevators, with the exception of the Southwest towers, Graduate Research Center and the Tower Library, may be shut off today to prevent the possibility of someone getting stuck.

Wozniak said it was possible that entrances to low-lying building and building frequently flooded will be sandbagged.

Thomas McGuire, head meterologist for the National Weather Service in Boston, suggests that people stay tuned to a television or radio.

In an Associated Press report, McGuire said that Gloria was tracing the route of the "Great Hurricane" that bashed New England on Sept. 21 1938, killing 600 hundred people and leaving $500 million in damage in its wake.

"It's certainly a very powerful storm," McGuire said of Gloria. "This things is coming here already with a track record of holding together for thousands of miles."

McGuire said that forecasters like to give residents 36 hours to plan for a hurricane, but that may not be possible with Gloria because it is moving so fast.

"This is a powerhouse of a storm" he said.

If a hurricane warning is announced, Gloria is expected in the area within 24 hours.

Three of the top selling magazines on campus and at schools across the nation.

Cosmo ranked first at universities

Cosmopolitan is the most popular magazine at the University of Massachusetts and across the nation's universities, said the manager of the University Store.

According the The Chronicle of Higher Education, the best-selling magazines in college bookstores are: 1. Cosmopolitan, 2. People, 3. Glamour, 4. Vogue, 6. Newsweek, 7. Penthouse, 8. Time, 9. Gentleman's Quarterly, 10. Madmoiselle.

The list from the University Story differs slightly; Cosmopolitan is still the first followed by: 2. Madmoiselle, 3. Glamour, 4. Gentleman's Quarterly, 5. Vogue, 6. Harper's Bazaar, 7. Seventeen, 8. Time, 9. Sports illustrated, 10. Newsweek and People sell equally well, Winthrop Cummings, manager of the University Store said.

"Computer magazines have just skyrocketed, but they haven't hit the top 10 yet," Cummings said. "There is more interest n fitness magazines, body building types."

"The most popular magazines are fashion, but that has never changed since the beginning of the magazine business," he said.

Students also buy magazines for supplemental learning. Business Week is read frequently by those in the school of management, said Cummings.

Possibly because of the attempts by women's groups last semester to ban what they considered to he pornography on campus last semester, "Playboy is old hat," Cummings said in response to the Chronicle of Education poll.

UMass targeted by group requiring outside "observers"

By DON LIPPER
Collegian Staff

Accuracy in Academia, a conservative group formed by the Washington-based Accuracy in Media, has targeted the University of Massachusetts as one of the colleges requiring monitoring by students or outside "observers."

This conservative organization was formed to "combat the dissemination of misinformation" in colleges and universities across the country. Les Csorba III, the executive director of Accuracy in Academia, said the group is not trying to perpetuate a conservative ideology.

"We are looking for misinformation in the classroom, whether it's coming from the left, right or center. It just so happens to be that all our information is that the threat is coming from the left," Csorba said.

Csorba siad there is a "tremendous anti-America bias on campuses." He is asking students in classrooms to record professors' statements and send them to AIA, which will determine their correctness, and the professors will then be asked to acknbowledge alleged errors. If they don't, the statements will be published in a monthly newletter. According to the Association of University Professors, Csorba is especially encouraging "mature adults," particularly senior citizens, to enroll in courses in order to serve as volunteer auditors for AIA.

Csorba said his group has recieved a lot of letters about UMass. "More than most schools. Apparently, from what we've heard, the economics department doesn't always provide a balanced view."

UMass economics Professor Samuel Bowles, according to Csorba, is a example of "someone who may use his position to promote an ideology. He's a Marxist." Csorba said Bowles is the leader of a "radical teaching group" that's making a "major effort" to push radical economics at UMass.

Bowles said he believes AIA's desire to "infiltrate the University classroom is an attempt at thought control by the right but it will fail because most people in the University, students, faculty, and others aren't interested in joining their attack on academic freedom."

"The judgement of who is competent to teach is made by scholars in one's field," Bowles said. "The judgement is often imperfect but it is a far better system than turning over the classroom to politically motivated self-styled guardians of 'accuracy' I would be interested in Mr. Csorba's view of economics but I don't feel he's qualified to judge whether shat I teach is accurate or not."

Bowles concluded, "I think the American people are fed up with McCarthyism and will not be more enthusiastic about Neo-McCarthyism.

Ku Klux Klan members charged with violations

WASHINGTON (AP) - Culminating a two-year investigation, the Justice Department announced yesterday the indictment of nine Ku Klux Klan members on charges they conspired to violate the rights of blacks and whites who were living or socializing together.

The indictment, stemming from an investigation of racial violence in North Carolina duringf 1982, also charged the nine defendants with committing perjury before a federal grand jury by denying any knowledge or involvement in a series of cross burnings.

"While I cannot comment on this indictment pending trial, I want to emphasize that the Department of Justice...gives high prioritdy to investigating every allegation of racial violence, whether Klan-related or not," said Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds.

In a statement, Reynolds said, "We will seek indictments in every case where credible evidence is developed and suspects identified." Since 1979, he said, the department has prosecuted more than 150 people, including at least 84 KKK members, in racial violence cases.

The 20-count indictment, charging acts of violence in Alexander and Iredall counties, N.C., actually was returned by a federal grand jury in Asheville, N.C., on Tuesday. But the document remained sealed until yesterday, when federal agents began making arrests, the department said.

Among those indicted were Jerry Douglas Suits, identified as the titan, or leader, of the Wight Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in Iredall County; and his wife, Mary Vestal Suits, said to be queen kleagle, or leader, of the women's unit of the Klan.

Environmental effects to be studied on GWEN tower coming to Barre

BARRE (AP) — An environmental impact study on a low-frequency emergency broadcast tower in the Air Force is considering building near the Barre Falls Dam is expected to be completed in a week, according to Air Force officials.

Air Force officials were closely questioned about the effect the installation could have on the Quabbin Reservoir at a public hearing here Tuesday night attended by more than 200 residents.

The Air Force had originally sought to build the tower on a cow pasture in Amherst, but began studying the Barre site after encountering stiff opposition from local officials and peace groups in the college town.

"Saturday night specials" least desired by criminals

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Street criminals are more likely to use large, well made guns instead of the smaller "Saturday night specials," according to a study done by a University of Massachusetts Sociology Professor for the U.S. Justice Department.

The study, authored by James D. Wright, entitled The Armed Criminal in America: A Survey of Incarcerated Felons, was released yesterday by the National Institute of Justice, the principle branch of the U.S. Justice Department, in Washington D.C.

"The report stresses the descriptive intentions of armed crime, it doesn't contain any theory and it doesn't test gun control," Wright said.

"The research began by sending out 75 page surveys to criminals who've committed felonies. There were 1,874 respondents all of whom were males in prisons throughour 10 states in the country," said Wright.

As a "comparison group," 40 percent of those surveyed were classified as "unarmed criminals," or men who had never committed any crime while armed with a weapon, Wright said.

The first finding of the research was that five out of six guns obtained by criminals are by "off the record transactions."

"Criminals rarely use customary retail channels to obtain handguns," Wright said. "An emmence number of firearms are stolen, then 'aquired by the criminal through swaps and trades, cash purchasing and other off-the-wall forms of transaction. In the survey, an estimated 40 to 70 percent of hand guns used in crimes were stolen by either the user or thorough other channels.

According to a brief write up of the report by Wright, "35-50 millions handguns currently possessed by legitimate private owners represent a potentially rich source for criminal handgun acquisition." Therefore if a gun control policy was to be installed the issue of firearm theft would need to be addressed."

The most surprising findings that the report had to offer, according to Wright, was the fact that smaller handguns or "Saturday night specials" were preferred less by more serious criminals.

"Approximately 1/3 to 1/2 of the guns confiscated by police are the so called "Saturday night specials," meaning the rest of the guns are larger, well made guns," said Wright, "serious criminals prefer serious equipment."

Another finding in the study was that most of the men who were carrying guns did so for their own protection and actually had no intention of committing a crime.

Wright said "many of these men live on the street. The best way for them to feel safe is by carrying a firearm. About 60 percent of guns were obtained for the purpose of self protection."

The report also noted that "about two-fifths of the sample had at some time in their careers encountered an armed victim, and an equal percentage had decided not to commit a crime because they suspected their victim was armed."

The proposal for the report was submitted by Wright and his collegues to the National Institute of Justice in 1981. "After funding of $387,000 was granted to us, work on the project really got under way in 1982," Wright said.

Blue Wall converted into the Campus coffee house

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Because alcohol cannot be served on campus, the Blue Wall has been renamed the Campus Center Coffee House, its kegs of beer have been replaced by coffee makers and the longest bar in the east coast now holds trays of baked goods.

The idea of converting the Blue Wall into a coffee house was made three years ago, according to Alex Zucker, the chairman of the Board of Governors. "With the rise of the legal Drinking age (from 20 to 21) there were not enough (legally aged) among the population to warrant three bars on Campus," he said.

Because the Blue Wall had been losing money in recent years, it was the logical choice to be shut down, said Zucker. After making a profit of $13 thousand in 1983, it lost $30 thousand in 1984 and $37 thousand in 1985, he said.

William D. Ellmore, the Campus Center Beverage Manager, disagrees with Zucker over the reason for the conversion. "The decision was made when the campus shut out alcohol," he said. "The rise in the legal drinking age had more to do with it than the loss of revenue."

Since the Coffee House opened at the start of the semester, busines has not been tremendous, according to Ellmore. "It has been slow but it has been growing steady each night. People are starting to know where and what we are as a facility."

Competition from the Hatch for coffee-drinkers customers on campus does not worry Ellmore. The coffee in the Hatch is not comparable with what the Coffee House has to offer, said Ellmore. "We offer gourmet coffee blends, freshly ground in front of the customer," he said. In addition, expresso and cuppucino are also available. "The people who have come in have enjoyed our products, and I have seen many of them return."

The Coffee House is open Tuesday through Sunday, from 4 p.m. to 11, and entertainment is available such as a comedy night on Tuesdays and free movies on Wednesdays. "We are also trying to get live Coffee House entertainment for Friday nights, such as singles, duets, and easy listening type of Music entertainment," he said.

Local women rap sexism and religion

By LISA DIMEO
Collegian Correspondent

Some local women in the church community hope to change the traditional sexism now holding them back from gaining more integral religious positions.

A report by the National Council of Bishops released last week acknowledged that the Catholic Church of the United States needs to affirm the rights of women by addressing birth control and sexual issues and make positions of authority more accessible to them. In November the organization will hold a conference addressing these issues.

According to some church women, discrimination against women exists in many religions but is most pervasive in the Roman Catholic Church where women are denied the right to be ordained into priesthood.

"There is no scriptual reason why women can't be ordained," Said Sister Mildred Marengo of the Newman Center. Marengo explained that contrary to popular belief, she finds the reasons for the women's lack of leadership lies "predominantly in tradition."

According to Marengo, sensitivity to the issue is more open today and because women recognize women as legitimate leaders in the church, it is likely progress can be made.

"Women represent better than half the church," she said, adding that as long as women "challenge and question" their role in the church, "(she) thinks their voice will be heard."

Marengo acknowledged that other religions are further advanced than the Catholic Church interms of the number of hierarchal positions that women have filled. But because the Catholic Church is "more entrenched" in tradition, progress has been slower.

Rev. Esther Hargis, a Baptist minister and member of the United Christian Foundation critisizes organized religion for not being supportive of women who wish to achieve positions in the church hierarchy.

"A mistake the church made is to limit the ministry to men. The ministry needs a balance of men and women," she said.

Hargis points out women have made key contributions to the church which should be recognized, saying they bring a different perspective to the church.

Theological interpretation and sexism have both been factors which have led to the limiting roles of women in organized religion, said Hargis.

"The church interprets some segments of scripture as though women can't be leaders, but the heart of scripture doesn't really limit women," she said. "Also, since our society is dominated by men, sexism still plays a big part."

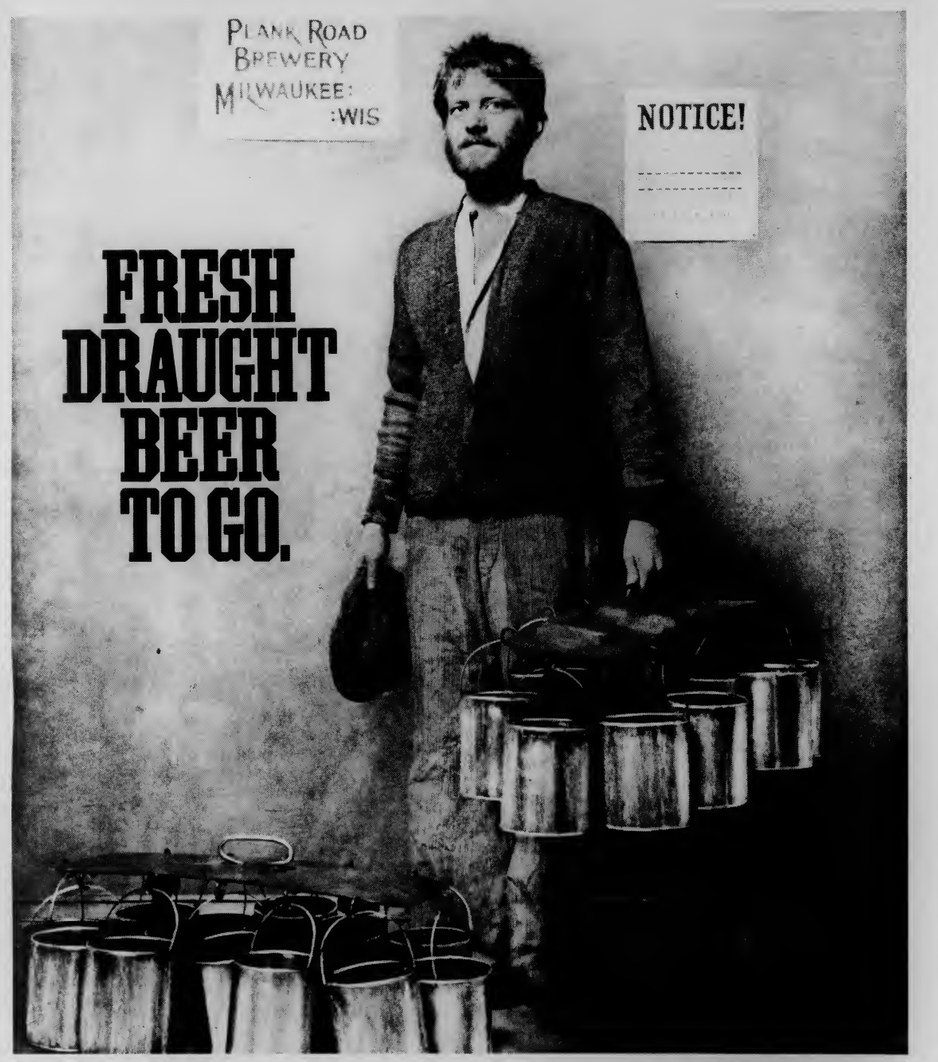
The National Conference of Catholic Bishops will continue to assure that women will be given a greater role in the church, according to the Rev. Joseph Quigley at the University of Massachusetts.

However, Quigley did note that Pope John Paul II gives no indication that women will be ordained during his pontification.

UMass student senate hopes to complete agenda

The University of Massacusetts Undergraduate Student Senate, which did not meet last night because of Yom Kippur, hopes to complete its agenda by spending less time on new business tonight.

Senate Speaker John Ruddock said because of "excessive and redundant debate" among senators in the last two senate meetings, business has not been completed.



"Although the senate is a deliberative assembly, many people have used the senate as a platform to promote their own agenda," Ruddock said. "I'd like to get through the entire agenda."

Motions including the length of terms of senate officers and the removal of affirmative action and student coordinator from the coordinating committee have not been reviewed because of this "excessive debate."

A special presentation on the Rape Task Force will be presented at the start of tonight's meeting. It is presented by the Department of Public Safety, Health Services and the Everywomen's Center. Information about available services,procedures and an exploration of the larger issues of rape will be discussed.

"The best thing about this workshop is that is gets important information out," said Christine Alibrandi, a student coordinator for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. "Men have to take responsibility to educate other men," she added.

Ask most beer drinkers and they'll likely agree: nothing tastes better than beer from a keg.

Ever since the days young men delivered bucketfuls to your door, keg beer has always been fresher. That's because it isn't cooked to preserve it like most bottled and canned beers.

Well, now we've found a way to deliver the same fresh draft taste in a bottle. A beer specially cold-filtered instead of cooked, so it tastes like it was drawn straight from the keg.

Suspects in bombing

PARIS (AP) — Prime Minister Laurent Fabius yesterday blamed former Defense Minister Charles Hernu and the former secret service chief for the bombing of a Greenpeace ship Rainbow Warrior.

Fabius said it was difficult to determine who specifically gave the order to sink the ship July 10 at its berth in Auckland, New Zealand, because "there was no written order." He said he questioned Hernu and secret service chief Adm. Pierre Lacoste yesterday afternoon.

"My conviction is that both of them acted under the impulse of their own idea of what was in the interest of our country," he said. "My conviction is that it is at their level where the responsibility lies."

Lacoste was fired last week for refusing to answer questions about the sinking, and Hernu, who ha ultimate responsibilty for the secret service, resigned.

Speaking during his weekly television appearance, Fabius said, "In a democracy like ours, the responsibility for this kind of decision is borne by the civilian authorities — that is to say the minister Hernu."

Some news reports have said military subordinates carried out the attack either because they misinterpreted orders or because some right-wing elements in the army wanted to embarrass the Socialist government.

The Rainbow Warrior was preparing to lead a protest flotilla to France's South Pacific testing grounds for nuclear weapons.

One theory holds that Hernu gave an oral order to Lacoste to "take care of" the Greenpeace protest, and Lacoste interpreted it as an instruction to sink the ship.

A Greenpeace photographer was killed in the bombing.

Earlier yesterday, the government named army chief of staff Gen. Rene Imbot to replace Lacoste as head of the General Directorate for External Security, France's secret service.

The Cabinet ordered Imbot, 60, a Foreign Legion veteran to clean up the agency and report fully on its role in the bombing.

Among those people exposed to AIDS virus confidentiality is becoming a growing concern

(AP) — Somewhere, their names are on a list. For the hundreds of thousands of people who have been exposed to the AIDS virus but may never develop the disease, confidentiality is becoming a growing concern.

"I don't have to point out the implications if you label somebody as having had an AIDS-positive test," said Dr. Mabel Stevenson, director of the Red Cross blood bank in West Virginia. "You can guess what the reaction of the public will be."

It starts with a frightening letter from a local blood band, notifying a donor that routine screening discovered exposure to the virus that causes the deadly disease.

The national Centers for Disease Control estimate that 500,000 to 1 million people fall into this category, but only 5 percent to 20 percent will actually contract the disease.

The stigma surrounding AIDS can hurl the lives of even the healthy into chaos if their exposure to the virus becomes known. What if their employers find out? What if the information is made public?

Keeping the names of AIDS victims and those who gave been exposed to the virus secret is a major concern of blood banks and state health departments.

Hopes for movement of remaining hostages

A roving church diplomat, credited with a key role in the freeing of Rev. Benjamin Weir after 16 months in captivity in Lebanon, is appealing to the captors for a meeting about their other six American hostages.

"The situation is not deadlocked," says Terry Waite, a special envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury. "There is room for movement. We believe there are ways of loosening the situation."

Waite, 46, a tall, astutely articulate Englishman and veteran church negotiator, was assigned to the case a year ago by the Most Rev. Robert Runcie, spiritual leader of the world-wide Anglican Communion.

Proposed graduate program considered in neuroscience

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

A proposed graduate program in neuroscience and behavior will become the third such program at public universities in the northeast if it is passed by the Board of Regents this year.

Staffed by members of five departments at the University of Massachusetts, the program will probably begin training 12 students next semester, said Vincent Dethier, chairman of the program and professor of zoology.

"The neuroscience and behavior program's curriculum is built entirely out of existing courses," said Katherine Fite, professor of psychology. "And the faculty will retain affiliation with their original department."

Of the 23 professors who will participate in the doctorate program, 13 are from the psychology department. Professors from the departments of zoology, computer and information sciences (COINS), biochemistry and microbiology will also staff the program.

"We will begin this fall as an experimental program before all final approval," Fite said. The program has already been approved by the board of trustees.

Funding hasnot been requested by the program's sponsors but Fite said the faculty involved in the program hope that they will be considered for additional faculty in the future.

"Everything to do with human performance and intelligence relates ultimately to the nervous system," said Dethier. The neuroscience and behavior program will be involved in nervous system research and will also use computers to study artifical intelligence.

There has already been a number of inquiries about applying to the program but Dethier said the criteria for admittance has not been set. He said the number of students who will participate in the program will depend on how much financial assistance and teaching assistant position can be provided.

"We hope to apply for training grants in the future to support students in the program," Fite said.

Currently there are 39 programs in the country which offer doctorate degree in neuroscience and behavior. One of the major goals of having such a program according to the proposal, is to attract graduate students and high quality faculty to the University.

Staff's long distance phone calls reviewed to ensure accountability

By JIM PATRIQUIN
Collegian Correspondent

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Government Association began reviewing records of long-distance phone calls made by the professional staff of the Student Activities Office Sept. 18.

Joe Sparks, co-chair of the Rents and Fees Committee, said the reviewing of the phone records is part of an effort "to ensure accountability in all the trust funds paid for by students."

Student Activities Office Director Randy Donant said, "I don't know what he's looking for. We're within our budget; I don't go over everyone's phone calls.

"As far as I'm concerned, there have been no improprieties with phone use," Donant said.

On June 25, Sparks requested of Donant the date, time, cost and destination of each call, along with the name of the caller from June 1 to the present.

Donant formally acknowledged Spark's request but said he would not release the records until UMass Attorney Sid Meyers verified the legal propriety of Sparks' request.

After unsuccessful verbal inquiries to Donant, Sparks requested that Chancellor Joseph Duffey make sure he received the records.

Sparks then appealed a inaction of Donant to reveal the records to the supervisor of public records to the office of the secretary of state.

Donant then notified Sparks the date, time, cost and geographic destination of each call along with the name of the caller would be released once the expenses of providing them was paid.

Donant intended to release the destinations of the phone calls and not the actual phone numbers.

In a letter to Myers, the supervisor of public records said, "Public records, or any

Support group in Amherst aims for positive choices

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Support groups, perhaps by virtue of their name, are places where people discuss their problems, learning how to better deal with what it is infringing on their life. However, a new support group in Amherst hopes to make problems women have become "non-problems."

"A lot of people want to play victim because they think they'll get acknowledgement and support, and they will get that acknowledgement and support but things won't change with that attitude. It can only prevent someone from moving in a positive direction," said Betty Swain, M.A. counseling, facilitator of the group.

According to Swain, the group is an ongoing one, "for women wanting to consider other positive choices. She is interested in providing women with "the willingness to get over those things which put up barriers in our lives" and the realization that the "definition of power, is the ability to act and move."

Swain, who once ran a Boston-based support group called "Wider Opportunities for Women," said women have many excuses for why they don't have what they want in their lives. "Things like lacking self-confidence is just a reason for not moving. When you end up really looking at yourself, you discover you have a lot of reasons."

Though she maintains support as a concept is a very positive thing, Swain said she hopes her group can ultimately teach women to act without such support because, "some days you're going to wake up and you'll have to do it alone. There is not always a support group to turn to."

Women find it easy to "play the victim," Swain said, because "It's easier to keep bad experiences than to take risks to find more positive ones because the known is always safer than the unknown."

"You can't keep asking yourself 'why don't I have love or why am I depressed?' You have to see yourself at the source of everything. You have to realize you're standing at it and your manifesting it."

Swain stresses is is not a position in business or society which makes one powerful but really it's the ability to "move" and to make individual choices. This kind of power is what most people want in their lives, though they may not realize or verbalize it, Swain said.

"The first thing you have to do is stop being a pain and go out there and play," she said, adding, "Life is really a diamond mine, and a lot of people think it's only a pile of dirt."

The group meets at 7-9 p.m. on Tuesdays at Thornes Market in Northampton and from 7-9 on Thursday at the Bangs Community Center in Amherst. There is a $3 charge. All university and community women are encouraged to attend.

segregable portion thereof, are subject to mandatory disclosure upon request," with some exemptions. The exemptions in the case of a municipal phone bills are calls to unlisted numbers and calls not made at public expense.

The letter from the supervisor of public records was instrumental in determining exactly what is accessible to the public, Donant said.

Currently, Sparks is reviewing the phone records in the Student Activities Office with Mark DeNyse, Suzanne Gauger, Aram Hamparian, H.E. Kelly and Kelly McCormack, who are volunteers from the rents and fees committee.

"I expected this to take one or two days. Combativeness from Randy Donant stretched it out. It is my suspicion that he has something to hide," Sparks said.

"If we find any wrongdoing, we'll take it to the proper authority."

High cost of intervention

Joe Shartrand

U.S. intervention in Nicaragua is becoming inevitable. The Reagan administration is foolhardily supporting every hostile Honduras action as justifiable defense. Reagan believes that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega is part of that infamous "evil empire" that must be wiped off the face of the earth. He does not realize, or does not care, that the cost of aggravating world tensions and the loss of human life, will be too high.

If a war is begun, there will be sophisticated nuclear, chemical, and conventional weaponry at the disposal of both countries. Without a twinge of guilt, both sides will use them. Terrorism, as Daniel Ortega threatened, might be exported to the U.S. homeland and many innocent civilians will die. In Nicaragua, innocent civilians will be eradicated by the thousands in order to insure a surrender. Acres of wild-life that forgotten casualty of war, will be destroyed and forever lost. The disadvantages of a war far outweigh the vague, or non-existent, threat to the security of our border.

War would destroy many Americans a well as Nicaraguans, yet no one says "no" to Reagan's sable-rattling. Even though Congress believed that there was no reason for overthrowing the Sandinista regime and refused aid to the contras; it quickly reversed its decision when Ortega made an ill-timed trip to Moscow even though it was common knowledge that Ortega had communist sympathies.

Reagan's biggest accomplishment during his years in office has been to build the military establishment to dizzying heights. With all this hardware collecting dust in the Pentagon, something has to be done with it. Fighting communism in our own back yard is as good a cause as any and seems to be the one that Reagan will use. Yet no one says "no" to this craziness.

Ortega has threatened, as politicans will do, that Nicaragua will not fall to a capitalist regime. Reagan has countered that communism must be stopped dead in its tracks. Both men are a little dangerous and a little crazy. Both will allow events to get out of hand and then refuse to give in. Eventually, this will lead to a war that cannot be lost no matter what the cost. The U.S. has already sent in supplies, money, and advisers and perhaps, as we get more and more involved, American troops. Reagan has been drooling at the chance to invade Nicaragua and unless he hears different from the American public, that's just what he'll do.

In a national emergency, such as a war in Nicaragua, there will be a draft. If money, supplies and advisers fail, Reagan or maybe some future president, will ship our sons, brothers, and selves, overseas like cattle. Our lives would be wasted while the so-called leaders in both countries thrash out their differences or refuse to give in. But, there are two choices that we will always have in response to this insanity: we can either quietly be herded to our deaths, or when Ortega and Reagan declare war, we finally show some sense and tell them to settle it among themselves, without our help.

Joe Shartrand is a UMass student.

Letters
Apathy, radicals, and power

David Valade in his Wednesday column raised an interesting point. This self defined "radical" exposed some very disturbing policies.

His point concerning "a sense of powerlessness in our society" showed peculiar distaste for one person one vote. Valade's oligarchal argements supercede any sound feelings of powerlessness. If one's vote did have great weight then we would not be considered a democracy.

"The key is to resist" Valade states his intentions with "somehow we will have power" I now must ask, Valade and who else? Moreover how will Valade and his comrades grasp this power? And, perhaps more importantly, what will Valade do with this 'power' once he gets (and we all know that Valade will get it)?

"Only then can we be free" No truer words have been spoken. In fact until Valade puts an end to his utterly useless streams of consciousness theories, we shall all be prisoners of diseased logic.

Commitment is the key

Peter Dow

As the eyes of UMass and the nation still focus on events in South Africa, the situation in Central America continues to change, in many ways for the worse. The United States seems to have lost much of its resolve, for instance, in its policy toward Nicaragua. It is again time to focus attention on the most important foreign policy issue facing America, and to reaffirm our commitment to bringing freedom and democracy to the Nicaraguan people.

Our support for the freedom fighters in Nicaragua is the key to achieving this goal; such moral, political, and military assistance is both in the interests of the people of Nicaragua and in the interests of the United States. First of all, Nicaraguans have suffered long enough under a Sandinista regime which ignores the rights of its citizens and breaks its promises made to the Organization of American States (OAS) in 1979. The rejection of FSLN tactics and policies by the Nicaraguan people has directly led to a large increase in the forces of the contras in the last few months.

The Sandinistas took power in 1979 with the mandate that they establish a democratic society which would respect individual freedom. This has not happened. The Sandinistas have consolidated their power in Nicaragua, and claim any opponents to be "counter-revolutionary." The FSLN has established Sandinista Defense Committees (CDS), which train neighbors to spy on each other and report any "counter-revolutionary" activity to the government. The FSLN has also seized control of all media except for La Prensa, which is subject to heavy government censorship. The Catholic Church, led by Cardinal Obanda y Bravo, has been subjected to numerous attacks led by Sandinista mobs.

Nicaraguan farmers, the group supposed to benefit the most from revolutionary changes, are forced to either join state-run cooperatives or to sell their harvest to the Sandinistas at government dictated prices, far below the price the farmers could obtain in an open market. As a result, many farmers and other residents in northern and eastern Nicaragua are now the most ardent supporters of the contras, precisely because of the Sandinistas' anti-individualistic and anti-free market actions.

If it is indeed our moral duty to intervene on the side of anti-apartheid forces in South Africa, then it is certainly our duty to assist the rebels who are fighting a consolidating totalitarian and expansionist power in Nicaragua. This view is also held by the three Central American countries most affected by the Sandinistas' expansionist policies; Honduras, El Salvador, and Costa Rica.

On Sept. 4 the foreign ministers of each country jointly issued a communique blasting Nicaragua for formenting much of the conflict in Central America and obstructing the Contadora peace efforts (Nicaragua) has refuesed to discontinue or apologise for many incursions into Honduran or Costa Rica territory, including the killing of two Costa Rican Civil Guards in the border town of Las Crulitas on May 31, promises made to the OAS; the Sandinistas must begin peace talks with opposition groups to bring peace to the OAS; the Sandinistas must begin peace talks with opposition groups to bring peace to the area; the Sandinista armed forces represent a threat to regional security (the FSLN has the largest military in Central America); and finally that foreign military advisors (Cubans, Libyans, and Soviets) have aggravated the East-West confrontation in Central America.

It is obvious that Costa Rica, El Salvador, and Honduras all realize the grave threat that Nicaragua presents not only to themselves but ultimately to the United States. But why is there so much opposition to the assistance of groups which promote democratic capitalism and U.S. intercepts? American leftists provide their answer; to avoid "another Vietnam." Yet the only true way to avoid another Vietnam in Nicaragua is to provide aid now to the contras who are determined to fight their own war, without U.S. troop assistance. El Salvador, Costa Rica, and Honduras certainly realize the true danger that Nicaragua represent; it is now up to the U.S. to listen to our Central American allies and do everything within our power to ensure their security, our strategic interests, and the freedom of the Nicaraguan people

Pagoda tangible reality

Becky Lockwood

There's a problem with peace in Leverett (not to mention the rest of the world). Fortunately, to solve the problem in Leverett requires no knowledge of political science, foreign diplomacy, or even the Reagan administration. All that is needed in Leverett is commitment and bodies—it's a pretty simple solution; willing, interested people would resolve the "peace question" for that community. You see, some people are tryinng to realize a dream in Leverett. North America's first Peace Pagoda is being constructed there, board-by-board. The builders, including a Buddhist order and volunteers, are trying to meet an Oct. 5 deadline for completion, but they need more help.

Recently, different groups of UMass students have been participating without prior knowledge of carpentry or architecture. The commonality among this diverse group of volunteers and Buddhist monks, is their neet to contribute, somehow, to "peace" in a world seemingly hostile to that gentle concept. Unlike struggling for a nuclear freeze, or the elimination of the draft, or war tax resistance, the Peace Pagoda represents an immediate and tangible victory in a violence-crazed world. Participants in the project can actually see and touch the progress of the pagoda. Perhaps because the Leverett project is a materialization of a common spiritual desire, the Pagoda transcends political and religious affiliations, attracting people from all walks of life. In additon to sharing in and celebrating their "peace" goal, volunteers also share their meals and living space. Food and housing is provided, for an unlimited amount of time, by the Buddhist order to anyone who is volunteering.

The Peace Pagoda is more than just a beautiful idea however, it is a beautiful reality. The actualization of what is generally considered a spirtual concern, like peace, is an encouraging and astounding achievement. More people are needed though, if the project is to meet its Oct. 5th deadline for completion. Students from UMass will be working in Leverett this weekend, so if you're interested in helping, contact the UMass Peacemakers, fourth floor Student Union Building, 5-2789. Remember, you can make a difference in the struggle for peace, a concrete difference, so to speak, by participating in the North America Peace Pagoda project.

Empowerment in voting

Roth/Burgess

Student empowerment—what's that got to do with me? Students are in a unique position since we, the students, are the reason UMass exists—us—all of us. We obviously have a vested interest in the University, how it is run, how much it costs and, how it can serve all of our needs.

UMass Amherst is a great place to be, the education one can create here is almost endless. It is truly a special period in our lives.

One of the major factors that makes UMass so great is that students here have significant influence on how the University is run—thus making it more responsive to student desires, ideas and needs. This structured influence is what is commonly referred to as student empowerment.

A few of the unique aspects of our campus are: entirely student newspapers (such as the Valley Women's Voice, NUMMO News and the UMass Daily Collegian, a Student Government Association administered Student Activities Trust Fund—equivelent to $1.6 million annually, a student produced and prepared Course and Teacher Evaluation guide, a Legal Services Office staffed by four full time attorneys to serve student, free of charge, with the institutionalized ability to sue the University when and if the need arises (a right that only six Universities enjoy), a Campus Center Board of Governors, full South African divestment, a research and advocacy agency staffed by students and professionals (SCERA) entirely student run businesses such as People's Market and the UMass Bike Coop, an Everywoman's Center, and a New Africa House, a free bus system and much, much more.

Where did all of these great things come from? Why do students at UMass/Amherst have comparitively more student empowerment than most other colleges and University's across the state, country, and world? Because we struggled for it! Very little was given to us. We organized, we got arrested, we signed petitions, and, essentially, we confronted the status-quo. The Legal Services Office and the Everywoman's Center didn't always exist—students struggled long and hard for such gains.

Student empowerment is not something to be taken lightly. It is a responsibility that can be removed—as we saw clearly last semester when certain administrators attempted to eliminate the Board of Governors—the only structured student input into the Campus/Student Union. (Who do think pays for the Campus Center/Student Union?)

In recent years, student input and participation has become sufficently institutionalized so that it is easy to take Student empowerment for granted. This is clearly an unwise approach for student, as a group, to adopt. Whether it's RA pay cuts, a new alcohol policy, poor lighting, heterosexism on campus, a tuition hide, a new SGA constitution, the elimination of five fine sports teams, or a sexually harrassing professor—student empowerment is key.

The SGA Senators elections will be held Sept. 30 and Oct 1. There are certainly issues on which you have an opinion—even something like the location of a bus stop or the meal plan program—all of these issues are important. Our rights, responsibilities and potentials depend on you!

Loudest voices most oppressive

Last week on Rosh Hashanah (the Jewish New Year) I did something which I hadn't done for three years, I attended Hillel services in the SUB. On both days when I left the Student Union, an evangelist with a huge cross stood outside spouting his self-righteous rhetoric, surrounded by a large crowd. An irrational fear came over me, and I walked to the bus stop with an overwhelming feeling of anger and terror. As I rode home on the bus I remembered my grandmother's stories of the pogroms in pre-revolutionary Russia; she used to tell me that the attacks by the Cossacks were particularly fierce on the Jewish High Holy Days. I realized that my fears of the Evangelist were far from irrational.

This week Cliffe Knechtle of the Inter Varsity Christian Fellowship has reserved the Student Union Steps from Monday through today. Two days ago I heard Mr. Knechtle tell an Orthodox Jew that his life has no meaning because he has not found Jesus Christ. Yesterday was Yom Kippur, the holiest day on the Jewish calendar and Cliffe Knechtle planned on being out on the Student Union steps once again, and I am sure that he knew what day it was. I know that the Inter Varsity Chrisitan Fellowship's agenda this week is not purely accidental.

I love my culture and religion and am thankful that my grandparents came to the U.S. along with millions of other of Jews in order to preserve their culture. I would never deny the "born agains" their right to their beliefs. Yet almost every day in the past two weeks I have heard them attack others for being non-Christian, for being atheist, for being pro-choice, for being lesbian, etc . . . I have always loved this campus for its diversity but lately the loudest voices on this campus have been the most oppressive.

Yesterday I returned to the SUB on the holiest day of the year, on the third anniversary of my grandmother's death and I thought about what it means to be a Jew in a Christian society, something which my grandmother knew well.

By the way, Rabbi Perlmutter conducted his service behind the closed doors of the Student Union Ballroom, not on the steps of the building.

Freedom is worth dying for

I am writing to the Collegian for the first time in my four years at UMass because of a recent incident that disturbed me greatly.

On Monday, the United States Marine Corps held a meeting for students who went to Officer Candidates School this summer. OCS is a training camp in Quantico, Virginia where college students are brought together from around the globe to be screened and evaluated. The attrition rate there is approximately 50 percent.

Toward the end of Monday's meeting, one of the officers in charge said that we would see what some of our fellow students think of us. It would take too long to describe all that they had written, but they protested war and the taking of life. Unfortunately, whoever wrote these things did not stop to realize that most members of the armed forces feel that same way.

I joined the Marines five years ago to protect the rights and privileges that many Americans take for granted. I joined, not because I believe these freedoms are worth killing for, but because they are worth dying for. It pains me to be accused of being something I am not.

Pregnancy not trivial for women

In reference to Rusty Denton's article Tuesday, what he assumes about the pro-choice line of arguement is severely misconstrued. I think I am a typical pro-choice believer and I don't find pregnancy trivial in the least. If Denton bothered to talk to a women who has been pregnant at one time (whether she kept the child or had an abortion), he would have found that making a decision about pregnancy is a very difficult one.

Single women students who become pregnant may have to drop out of school to find a low-paying job to support the child. Children are expensive to care for, and could very well prevent someone from ever being able to afford to go back to school.

A fetus is, as Denton stated, a tissue of a woman's body. It is not a human being, but a potential one. Eggs and sperm are also potential living creatures when joined. Doesn't that lead to say that it is wrong to remove them also (i.e. vasectomies and hysterectomies)?

Of course, there are measures to prevent an unwanted pregnancy, but none are 100 percent effective. So, it seems that Denton thinks we should all be celibate until marriage, which is God's law. What's next, chastity belts? Taking away our right to express love physically to another human being will not solve any problem.

Taking away each individual's right to make their own choice about their pregnancies will lead to backroom abortions and mental and physical suffering.

Does Denton have any idea what it is to be pregnant? Of course he doesn't, he's a man. He has no idea what it's like to even worry about becoming pregnant, and all the mental anguish this causes some women. Pregnancy changes a woman's life, whether she has the child or not.

Denton has no need to worry, it will never happen to him. If men could become pregnant, Denton and others who have his holier-than-thou attitude would have made abortion a sacrament.

No, I have never become pregnant, but when and if it happens, I hope that the people around me are not as closed-minded as Denton's argument.

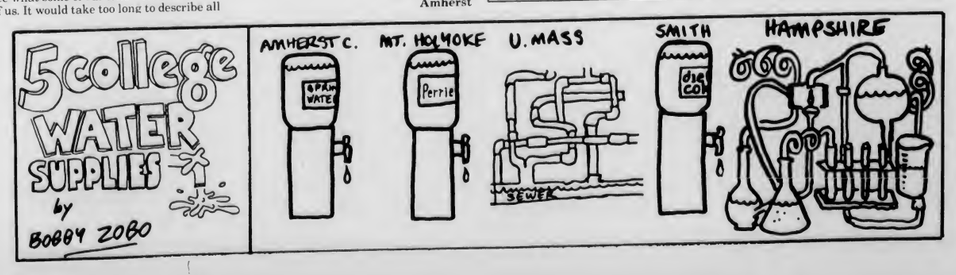
Unconditional acceptance is a danger to our development



A man stands on a hill with a wooden cross surrounded by a crowd of people. Somehow, this seems to have occurred at another point in our world history. But, this truly sad person on our campus, who has been deemed by most as "The Man with Cross", seems to be suffering from the delusion that he is enlightened. Those who recognize this imposter as such, or simply have too much or too little on their minds already, walked away untouched. But those who stayed, I couldn't help but notice, seemed strangely captivated by this evangelist.

It is clear that this man must have been to "Hell" and back or else he wouldn't have so much to tell about it. The Man with the Cross believes we are not really educating ourselves in this University; that we are "sinners' and "ignorant of the Word of the Lord." Those ideas, however relevant, were issued in such a contemptful, malicious way, they carried no meaning whatsoever. His invectives served only to ignite hostility in his listeners. The irony of this is that any rational and moderately sensitive human being who reads the New Testament can clearly see that Jesus Christ's teachings were inspired (whether through diving intervension or not), by love and a passionate committment to humanism. This character with the cross, quoting Christ, is as close to blasphemy as one is bound to get.

The most frightening thing about this event is not that this man is allowed on campus; freedom of speech is still considered a fundamental right of citizenship in this country. But the real fear for me is that those who listened to this man with the cross may have accepted his interpretations as the truth. The unconditional acceptance of any ideology is a danger to our developing society. And perhaps UMass is simply a microcosm of America. But is this man's rhetoric is coveted as holding universal significance, here, on this Campus, than our country is closer to spiritual self-destruction than I thought.

"Room 101" deals with human fears

"Room 101"
By Annette Taconelli and Robert Segedy
By ELIZABETH COX
Collegian Correspondent

Fear is a subject that we often shy away from dealing with. We find it difficult to discuss our fears—even with people that we're close to.

With the aid of a neutral device—the video camera, two novice filmmakers have captured frank conversations on the subject of fear. "Room 101," a documentary by Annette Taconelli, a doctorial candidate at UMass, and Robert Segedy, a local video technician, explore the often supressed emotion of fear.

"Room 101" (the title originated from George Orwell's novel 1984) consists of interviews, interspersed with haunting artword by Donna Bowman, and effective cinematography.

The people interviewed are from various backgrounds—from the Catholic ministry to people who race pigeons. Their fears are as diverse as they are—encompassing the common fears of nuclear war and death, as well as the more personal fears of loneliness and not finding one's place in the world. The humorous anecdotes of a philosphy professor in Pennsylvania lighten up the middle of the film, while the subtly underplayed relationships of Roman Catholicism, art and fear add a though provoking complexity to the film.

"Room 101" may be viewed as an artistic piece, a collage of moving interviews, art work and cinematography stemming from the emotion of fear. As a documentary, the feature-length hour 50 min. of interviews may been more effective and interesting with the help of some narration and condensation. It should be kept in mind that this is an amateur production. Annette Taconelli commented, "It's a bit unpolished, but we wanted it that way."

Either way, the film accomplishes its goal: to open up the topic of fear through discussion. The only way to overcome our fears is to admit them to ourselves. As Robert Segedy said, "Fear is a massive weakness, a universal emotion that everyone has."

"Room 101" funded by the UMass Arts Council, will be screened 8 p.m., Friday, Sept. 27 in Flint room 105.

Film Review

Get cultured with the Arts section!

"Living at Risk" insightful, subtle

"Living at Risk"
By Susan Meiselas, Alfred Guzetti, and Richard P. Rogers

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

The world premier of the documentary about Nicaragua, Living At Risk, will be shown at 8 p.m. Friday Evening, Sept. 27, in the Main Lecture Hall at Hampshire College. Shortly thereafter, it will open at the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston and the Film Forum in New York, among other places.

Screening this film on video might very well have affected my responses to Living At Risk as a film per se, especially in terms of its overall impact. Yet I found myself very involved with the works despite the shortcomings of my viewing it. It appears that this film lends itself quite readily to TV and hopefully its way into the mainstream of America through that medium.

The opening scene in Living at Risk; a street in Saint Domingo at dawn.

Why do I say hopefully? Because Living At Risk is perhaps the first film about Central America with which Americans can generichy identify. The reason for this is that the subjects of the film, the Barrios, are an upper middle-class family with very modern values not unlike Americans, and yet are people who, in varying ways, participated in the Sandinista revolution of 1979. Subtitled The Story of a Nicaraguan Family, the film sets out to do just that: to tell the story of a Nicaraguan family in context to the revolutionary period.

Perhaps no revolution has been successful without support and leadership from its middle and upper classes. America. France. Russia. Cuba. And Nicaragua was no exception. While it was comprised of workers, campesinos, and rebels, it was also comprised of students, professionals, and artists. Middle-class people were well-educated in a liberal tradition and well-grounded in the ideals and practice of Christian community, and therefore found the dictatorship of the tyrranical Somosa intolerable.

However, since the revolution, the Barrios family become divided over the performance of the Sandinista government. Still, four of the five Barrios children have remained committed to installing the social reforms of the fledging struggling government. This then is really their stories, their personal experience and views of post-revolutionarey Nicaragua.

The film follows these four young Nicaraguan professionals as they work in different areas of Nicaragua—Miguel, an engineer-turned-agricultural official; Federico, an aspiring doctor turned agricultural planner; Martisabel, who had a chemical business with her husband, although both are now working for the government; and Maurico, a doctor working in a remote province to start a

Anne Bancroft and Jane Fonda argue in a scene from "Agnes of God," which opens at Mt. Farms Theatres this weekend. Film also stars Meg Tilly.

For the sixties, each of us must have a respectful word to say. Feel as you may about them, there is always in every band you listen to, traces of the sixies. No one would be using distortion boxes if it wasn't for the sixties. The point of this is that some people who became famous in the sixties can still play better than a lot of today's stars. One of these is Jorma Kaukonen, former lead guitarist of the Jefferson Airplane, later Starship.

Jorma, who plays guitar with his own band now, will be playing outdoors on Sunday afternoon in Woodbury, Connecticut. When Hot Tuna got together last year most people couldn't handle the music because it was too electric. Don't be fooled. It sounds like the last few Hot Tuna albums, so it's heavy but its really really good. Sorry, I just love the guy. The concert starts at noon. Warming up are Max Creek and the New Riders of the Purple Sage. For more information call 203-263-2203. The New Riders will also be playing at the Iron Horse that same night, later on.

There are some other things going on in the area, believe it or not. Tonight the Stompers will be at Pearl Street, for some real excitement. Singer Kenny Rankin will be at the Iron Horse as well.

Tomorrow night UMass professor Archie Shepp makes a rare appearance at the Iron Horse with his quartet. Usually his band is really hot, even if he isn't, so you can't lose. The Bamboo Steamers will be playing at Sheehan's.

On Saturday we have rock star Holly Near coming to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton. An opportunity that is so close would be a shame to miss it. Elsewhere George Gritzbach will be at the Iron Horse and Paradise Funk will be at Sheehan's with the Llamas.

Sunday Jorma will be in Connecticut and New Riders will be at the Iron Horse.

Monday Leo Kottke, guitarist extraordinaire (as we say in the rock cliche trade) will be at the Iron Horse for two shows.

Tears for Fears will be in Hartford in Wednesday.

Last week while Ronald Reagan was being interviewed on the Christian Broadcasting network, Frank Zappa and a couple of senator's wives were being interviewed about record rating. All but Frank were joking and cutting Frank off before he got to speak his peace. It seems like he is looking out for our interests which is nice to know. Also, what would they do with a Bob Dylan album that had both "Lay Lady Lay" and "All I really want to do is Baby be Friends with you?" Certainly something to think about.

hospitable at a former coffee plantation.

The story that unfolds is compelling and convincing. The personal vignettes of their lives are seen against the backdrop of a social environment torn by hope and despair.

This film subtly reminds us through demonstrating similar class values that the people of Nicaragua and the people of the United States are both Americans, "living at risk."

Graduate Students

Do you feel that you play no role in the University?

That your needs and interests are not considered?

The Graduate Student Senate is currently filling graduate positions on many campus-wide committees, such as the Board of Governors, the Fine Arts Council, the Legal Services Governing Board, the Transit Advisory Committee, the Graduate Council, and a host of others dealing with all aspects of the University community.

If you want more information, or wish to serve on one of these committees, contact your department's Senator, or the Graduate Student Senate Office, Room 919, of the CC - 545-2896.

Reconstruction of Amherst gymnasium aims to open building in January

By CARYN BOWERS
Collegian Correspondent

Reconstruction of the Amherst College gymnasium, which was destroyed in a fire ignited by an electrical malfunction last year, is now half way completed.

"There's no doubt that the building is a little behind schedule," said Peter Gooding, athletic director for the college. Gooding explained that with a fire of that magnitude, there's a certain amount of testing involved before anything can be done and the testing was more complicated than expected. "We're hoping to get into the building in January," he said.

Although the building burned to the ground, much of the concrete foundation remained undamaged. Gooding also said there isn't a tremendous amouth of interior work to be done, considering it was entirely built of wood.

Repairs to the foundation are almost finished and will be covered with a new artificial turf floor. The roof is already up and wall tiling will begin shortly.

The gym was insured, but negotiations are still begin made to determine exact added expenses. Also, design plans are subject to change. "The cost of replacing a $1.6 million gym eight years later will be much more," said Gooding. He estimated the price at more than $2 million.

The Tully Corporation, an architectural and building conglomerate of Melrose, is designing the new Amherst College gymnasium for a second time. The corporation built the first gym in 1976. The college was satisified with the corporations' original work.

One major improvement for the gym will be the lighting. Three large skylights were removed and are being replace by strip windows along the roofline. Regular ceiling to floor windows will also be installed in the walls to allow more natural light to enter the gym.

The student lobby and the exhibition court will be relocated to utilize space and an empty storage area will be connected to the pool. The area will be for nautilus asnd weight training.

The pool will be completely renovated and swimming lanes will increase to meet regulation specifications. There will also be a separate shallow teaching pool.

Former Massachusetts Collegian editor dies

Funeral services were held Monday for Dr. Theodore Leary, 71, a former editor of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, who died in Gloucester last Friday.

Leary, a native of Turners Falls, received his bachelor of science degree in 1935 from the University of Massachusetts. He graduated in 1931 from Turners Falls High School, where he had been the state baseball batting champion.

Leary worked as a correspondent for the Boston Trascript before attending medical school at George Washington University. He received his medical degree in 1940 and served his surgical residency at Washington General Hospital until 1944.

During World War II, Leary was awarded a Navy commendation for care of wounded men at invasions of Iwo Jima and Okinawa. He later served as chief of orthepedic wards at Chelsea Naval Hospital prior to establishing his medical service in Arlington. Leary retired in 1975. During his retirement he studied computer science at North Shore Community College and floriculture at Essex Agriculture in Danvers.

"We sort of went through the motions in game one," said the coach. "We did some good things, but not anything stellar."

At that point, it seemed as though the roof was caving in around the Minutewomen, as UMass fell behind in game two, 3-13, the largest deficit of the season.

"We were down 0-2 and then we went into a tailspin," said Sortino. "Before I knew it, we were down 3-13 and I knew we were stuck.

"No one thing caused it," added Sortino. "We just couldn't do anything right up to that point."

but the spikers were anything but out of the match. UMass came alive and chipped away at the Crusader lead thanks to several Holy Cross miscues and a rejuvenated offense.

A Violetta Gladkowska kill brought UMass to within nine at 4-13. The Minutewomen then went to an offspeed attack and combined it with Crusader mistakes to draw to 7-13. Two service aces by senior co-captain Ann Ringrose and a kill be sophomore middle hitter Marcy Guiliotis made the score 10-13, and the comeback was on.

Two more Holy Cross errors reduced the Crusader lead to one, before Senior co-captain Sally Maher nailed a kill down the line to tie things up at 13. Gladkowska then served an ace to give UMass its first lead of the game, 14-13. A Holy Cross dink to the middle stopped the comeback and gave the Crusaders a big side out.

But, it would be here where Holy Cross would make their most crucial mistake of the match.

After gaining the side out, which is a changing of serve, Crusader head coach Al Morel made an illegal thirteenth substitution. A team is alloweed only twelve substitutions per game. The error resulted in a UMass side out and the spikers had the serve back. The Minutewomen capitalized on their serve and capped the comeback 15-13.

"We were obviously rattled from being down so bad," said Sortino. "But we regained our composure and, somehow, we did come back. I'm very pleased with that."

The spiker comeback in game two visibly took its toll on Holy Cross as UMass cruised through game three, handing the Crusader a decisive 15-3 shellacking. But Sortino gave Holy Cross credit for being so tough.

"They were ready for us, but we weren't ready for them," said Sortino. "When you're undefeated, everyone is looking to knock you off. We just weren't prepared."

UMass will be prepared for this weekends UMass Volleyball Classic, being held at Boyden Gym Friday night and all day Saturday. Sortino expects her players to be ready.

"We need to work on our attack coverage a little more," said Sortino. "A lot of it has to do with fact that we hit so hard, the ball comes right back if it gets blocked. We just need to set better reaction.

UMass will square off against the University of New Hampshire at 7:30 p.m. on Friday night. The Minutewomen will then face local rival Springfield College at 9. On Saturday, the spikers go up against Central Connecticut State at 9 a.m., and the University of New Haven at 10:30.

Other teams scheduled to appear are Northeastern University, Southern Connecticut State University, C. W. Post College, Cornell University and Holy Cross.

and when you only give nine shots they won't score many goals."

The coach was also pleased with the way his team adjusted in the second half. "In the first half we did not keep the ball with the team," said Gettler. "The second half we did."

The Minutemen will put its perfect home record on the line against the University of Vermont this Saturday at 1 p.m. on Boyden Field.

UM lacrosse schedule set

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team has set its schedule for the upcoming season.

Coach Dick Garber's Gorrillas will play five home games in 1986. St. John's University, Harvard, C. W Post, The U.S. Military Academy and the University of New Hampshire will play UMass at Boyden Field.

The Gorillas will face a rugged away schedule, facing Cornell, Brown, Dartmouth, Syracuse, Rutgers, Yale, Boston College and Delaware away.

Cornell, C. W. Post, Yale, Delaware, Brown, Syracuse and Army all were ranked among the Top 12 in the nation last season.

This fall, the Gorillas will scrimmage with Army at West Point on November 3.

St. John's is the only new team on the UMass schedule. The Gorillas will not play Hofsta this year.

Auburn's no joke to Majors

Auburn Coach Pat Dye and Tennessee's Johnny Majors had their little joke this week. Fortunately, no one from ABC-TV was around to hear it.

Saturday's Auburn-Tennessee game in Knoxville will be televised by ABC and matches Auburn tailback Bo Jackson, the nation's No. 1 rusher with 247.5 yards a game, against Tennessee quarterback Tony Robinson, who leads the country in total offense at 417.0.

I'll hold Bo out if you hold Robinson out," Dye said to Majors over the telephone.

"Let's negotiate that," Majors replied.

Barring some unforeseen accident between now and Saturday, Jackson and Robinson will play, of course.

Dye says Robinson is "near-perfect in the decision-making process. I don't know if I've ever seen a quarterback with as strong an arm as he's got who can throw it 60 yards downfield and also flick it out six or seven yards to back or scramble or drop it off."

UMass tough in clutch, edges PC 2-1

Bing's late goal gives Minutemen the win, defense stops Friars

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

Sophomore Andy Bing blasted a shot from 40-yards past Providence College goalkeeper Barry Williams with 8:41 remaining in the game to give the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team a 2-1 victory yesterday at Boyden Field.

Bing has been hot of late, scoring three goals and adding two assists in the last three games. The midfielder has a knack for making the big plays.

"I seem to get lucky," said Bing. "I like to go for the ball and try to score. If you keep shooting enough, it's going to go in."

The win was the fifth in the last six outings for UMass and raised its record to 6-3. The Minutemen are also 3-0 at home.

Both teams played tight defense in the opening minutes with neither having a clear advantage. The Minutemen broke the ice with 22:13 remaining in the first period on a nice play in front of the PC net.

Junior Ferdie Adoboe fed freshman Mike Mugavero 10 feet in front of Williams. Mugavero played the ball off of his chest and hooked the ball past the keepers left.

The Friars came back quickly taking an advantage of a lapse of UMass defense.

PC's John Farren hit a soft pass in front of the Massachusetts' net. Brendan Lynch was left uncovered and put the ball past keeper Don Donahue's left. Donahue did not have a chance.

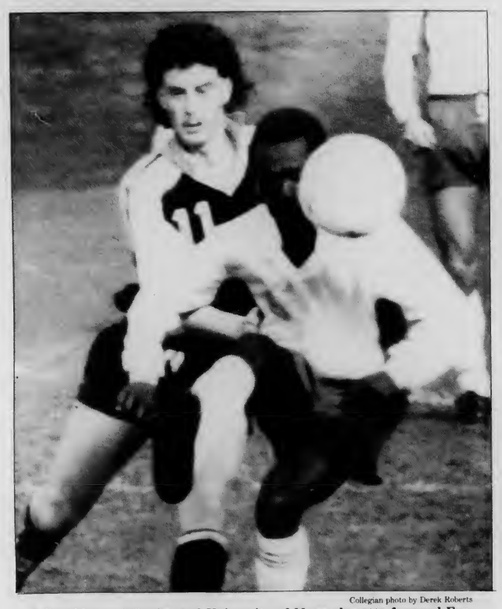
The Minutemen had a golden opportunity to retake the lead with 9:43 to go in the half. Adoboe split two defenders and rushed the PC net from the left side. He fed the ball across to the right giving Tom Giordano an open net. Giordano put the ball over the top of the goal.

Providence came out strong in the second half. At the 41:00 minute mark a PC attacker got a shot off from 15 yards which hit off the left goalpost. Ten minutes later Farren broke alone on Donahue, but his shot went wide right.

From that point on, Bing took over with three brilliant rushes on the Providence net.

The first came with 28:00 minutes left in the game. Bing blew past two PC defenders and came in from the left side. He fired a shot from 45 yards out which was just wide to the right. Adoboe had a chance to tip the shot in, but he could not quite catch up to the ball.

Bing's second rush came only one minute later. He again came down the right side, but this time cut to the middle and fired his shot from about 30 yards. The ball hit off the top crossbar and bounced back in front. Nick Marciano misfired the rebound over the net.



Bing made his final rush count. This time the midfielder came in from the right side, cut in front, and shot for the upper left corner of the net. Williams reached across his body to catch the shot, but he misplayed the ball. The shot deflected off of his hands and into th enet for the deciding score.

"When we get the ball the coach says we should try to take it to them," said Bing, "go to the goal, that's what I did. I missed twice, hit the post once, the last time I just decided to take a shot at it."

Other than Bing's heroics, the key for the Minutemen was the play of its defense. UMass allowed only nine shots and Donahue came up with four saves.

"Defensively we played very well," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "Only nine shots.

Minutewomen in action today

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

Last Thursday, Pam Hixon's seventh ranked University of Massachusetts Field Hockey Team bused north to Durham, N.H. to battle the nation's second ranked team, the Iowa Hawkeyes. Thought the Minutewomen outshot, outcornered and outplayed the Hawkeyes, they came home on the short end of a 2-0 score.

One week later, rested and healthy, the Minutewomen are looking to return to their winning ways, hosting the Providence Friars, today at 3:30 on NOPE (Totman) field.

"A loss is a loss," Hixon said, referring to their match against the Hawkeyes. "The score was not indicative of the game, but instead of reacting emotionally to a defeat, our players tried to analyze why we lot.

"We've been playing since August without a break," she said. "This week off has given us a chance to rest, regroup and reorganize our team concept. It was a welcome week."

The Friars, coming off a tough 2-1 loss to the nationally ranked University of Connecticut, are a young team, with over half the roster being underclasswomen. The Friars return Sophomores Marlene and Michelle Ricci, two highly regarded twins that are expected to trouble the Minutewomen.

Michelle joins senior tri-captains Patty Hanlon and Lisa McGilvary to form a stingy defense while her sister anchors the offense along with senior tri-captain Beth Galuzzo. But if UMass hopes to roll up impressive offensive numbers, today could be the day as the Friars will have a freshman in goal.

"We'll be looking to take advantage of the scoring opportunities we failed to capitalize on against the nation's second ranked team (Iowa)," Hixon said. "We'll be looking to set the tempo and make them respond to our style.

"We want to come out strong and make the goalie keep the ball in play, force her to beat us. We want to put them on their heels.

"At this point, our game is sound, all that's needed is refining," Hixon said.

"Our game plan is to play with better ball control and imporve our play off of corners. That means Megan Donnelly and Chris Kocot are going to have to work a little harder to score some goals."

After playing the Friars today, the Minutewomen travel to Springfield College, Saturday at 1 p.m. to take on Springfield on the infamous Benedum Field.

Benedum Field, an astroturf skillet when the weather is warm, was the host of the 2-1 UMass victory over the Virginia Cavaliers in the season opener.

Volleyball still unbeaten

And the streak goes on . . .

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team extended its unbeaten string to thirteen games as the spikers administered yet another UMass beating to a Holy Cross team 15-11, 15-13, 15-3 on Tuesday in Worcester.

However, Tuesday's victory over the Crusaders did not come easy, as head coach Elaine Sortino would be the first to testify.

"We were very, very flat," said Sortino. "We really didn't have a good warm up. That's when I thought we were in trouble."

UMass took game one 15-11, but, according to Sortino, not in very convincing fashion.

Gloria rolls by Amherst in anti-climax

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
and LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

As Hurricane Gloria wreaked havoc on parts of Massachusetts Friday, Amherst emerged virtually unscathed.

Although half of the University of Massachusetts residential area students fled Amherst in anticipation of the storm, those who stayed expressed disappointment at the hurricane's diminished winds.

"I had my camera set up to take hurricane force winds and I ended up taking pictures of leaves blowing around," Mark Silbiger, 20, a resident of Belchertown, said.

The University prepared for Gloria by covering most large windows with duct tape and sandbagging buildings prone to flooding, such as Campus Center.

Police and campus officials were unavailable to comment on damages caused by the storm.

Executive Dirvetor of Housing Services, Joesph Zannini, said Food Services was prepared to serve food for three days in case the storm hit and the biggest concern was power outages that would have left some residence hall students without water.

"A couple of trees in Amherst landed on garages," Richard Jasmin, an employee of J&K Tree Service in Greenfield, said. "It wasn't that bad."

Students emptied shelves at area package stores in preparation for "hurricane parties," which numbered in the hundreds.

"There was an excitement that was generated by the no-class situation," said Michael Sophinos, 20, a resident of Butterfield. He participated in a hurricane party to dismiss "the idea of impending danger and to opt for spontaneous get together and fun."

"I think they (meteriologists) made too much of it," said Meryl Daum, 18, a resident of Gorman dormitory. "I wanted to be in the middle of a storm, but I didn't want anyone to get hurt."

Chris McMaster, 20, a resident of Gorman dormitory, said "I think the school was just planning for the worst and they were taking the proper precautions.

I'm kind of glad it wasn't what it was all hyped up to be," McMaster said.

"With all the build-up and all the anticipation of a huge storm, it was disappointing," Silbiger said.

"People are smart, they were prepared," said a manager at Stop and Shop who refused to be identified. "We sold out of sterno and candles. We had to ship in bottled water from Vermont."

Eating disorders studied this week

By CHRISTOPHER MARAK
Collegian Correspondent

Food and body image are being addressed in films and discussion during Eating Disorders Week beginning tonight at 7 p.m. in Knowlton House.

Sponsored by the Residential Education Network, the activities will be held at the women's centers on campus. Residential assistants from several residential areas will participate in the discussions on eating disorders.

"We hope to reach not only those who are suffering, but those who are concerned about the issues," said Ange Dibenedetto, women's centers sexism awareness coordinator.

Two types of disorders, anorexia and bulimia, will be discussed tonight at the open house. Anorexia is a disease which involves starvation and bulimia is the process of binging and purging.

Both types of eating disorders stem from psychological factors that lead to a lack of desire to eat properly. These disorders often affect women who want to be thin.

Although these are the most commonly recognized types of eating disorders, they are not a major threat the the University of Massachusetts, according to Karen Weiner, University Health Services nutritionist.

"Most of the incidents of weight loss at the infirmary are due to improper nutrition," Weiner said.

"Most of the cases are freshmen adjusting to a change in lifestyle who develop poor eating patterns," Weiner said, noting that ten percent of the nutrition clinic's patients are such cases.

"Our goal for the week is to raise the awareness of both men and women on issues surrounding food and body image," network sponsor Amy DeRoode said.

Mary Aubrey from the Everywoman's Center will be the guest speaker during the week.

The events scheduled for Eating Disorders Week are:

Open House—tonight at 7 in Knowlton House.

"Killing Us Softly," a film and discussion on images of women in the mediat—7 p.m. Tuesday, in Dickinson House lounge.

Open House—9 p.m. Wednesday, in Van Meter South.

"I Don't Have to Hide," a film and discussion on food and body image at 7 p.m. thursday, in Butterfield House lounge.

SGA election starts today

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Student government officials anticipate an "average amount of competition" for the Undergraduate Student Senate elections today and tomorrow, as 95 of a total 120 seats are waiting to be filled.

John Crowley, chair of the governmental affairs committee, said seven residence halls will have contested seats, meaning that more than one person is running for each seat. He said compared with the last ten years, this is about average competition.

Ten residence halls have no official candidates, but some of these will be filled by write-in candidates, Crowley said.

There is usually a high voter turnout within competitive halls and a much lower turnout for halls with just write-in candidates, he said.

Crowley said a 20 percent turnout would be "great," but he anticipates between a 10 and 15 percent showing.

"If you take the commuter area seats out (of the toal figure) it would be higher," Crowley said.

But Crowley, citing a difference this year said, "I wouldn't be surprised if there's a higher turnout in the commuter area" because of the increased competition.

The importance of the senate elections is that it "sets the tone for the next year," he said. "All the events that you see on campuse are tied in directly to this vote."

The election will decide what type of ideology will prevail in the senate and what programs will receive more funding, he said.

Times, dates and locations of Senate ballot boxes.

BCP awareness week opens with photo exhibit

By ANITA ROYE
Collegian Correspondent

For a student whose second language is English coming to an English speaking college can be a harrowing experience, but the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) can help relieve the tension.

BCP is an academic support system, now in its eleventh year, that advises student on courses, offers personal counseling, and provides free tutorial help. The program also offers financial aid counseling to all bilingual students, including Asians, Hispanics, and Europeans.

Bilingual Education Week began yesterday with a Vietnamese photograph exhibit in the Student Union Art Gallery at 11:00 a.m.

The purpose of the Bilingual Education Week is to alert students to the advantages of BCP. "There are a lot of efforts to recruit minorities and give them an awareness of their cultural background," said Lucy Nguyen, an academic counselor at the program.

The activities include a panel discussion concerning the drop-out rate of Hispanics, presented by prominent speakers in the fields of education and bilingual-multicultural education, such as Yolanda Ulloa, director of education and bilingual education at the Springfield, MA School Department, and Luis Fuentes, director of the bilingual-multicultural program at the University of Massachusetts.

Also, there will be a Career Night on Tuesday, designed to counsel students on career choices such as law enforcement, engineering, and business administration.

"For bilingual students, there are many opportunities to have a job, and still work with bilingual communities," said Nguyen.

Clean-up continues in Mass. after hurricane

BOSTON (AP)–Thousands of Bay State residents made do with candles and canned goods for another day yesterday as utility crews worked overtime to restore power to 200,000 homes and business still without electricity from Hurricane Gloria.

Homeowners took advantage of a perfect fall day to rake up leaves and brances downed by 100 mph gusts that ripped through parts of the state Friday afternoon when Gloria churned up the Eastern Seaboard. Tree removal companies, meanwhile were busy clearing roadways, yards and blocked rivers.

Massachusetts officials said it would be early next week before they could estimate the value of damage wrought by the storm throughout the state.

In Boston, Mayor Raymond L. Flynn said damage to that city, including lost wages, business and tax revenue, "starts at $10 million and you can work your way up from there."

State officials estimated that $5 million to $7 million of the state's $25 million annual apple crop was damaged, and state Agricultur Commissioner August Schumacher said the estimate could go higher.

"The apple people are really hurting," he said. The hurricane also damaged half the state's $800,000 peach crop and 30 percent of the state's $3 million silage corn crop, he added.

The only huricane-related fatality in Massachusetts was an off-duty firefighter from Dedham, officials said. Robert Otto was killed Saturday when a tree he was cutting fell on him.

At least three Massachusetts homes were destroyed, 233 had major damage and 1,321 units had minor damage, according to Kevin Soyt, a spokesman for the American Red Cross in Massachusetts.

He said the estimates were made by Red Cross damage crews who spen the weekend driving through the hardest-hit areas of the state.

At the height of the storm, nearly 500,000 homes were in the dark, and power companies said it could take up to five days to completely restore electricity to Massachusetts.

Commonwealth Electric, which serves southeastern Massachusetts, reported that over 50,000 customers were still without power yesterday as were 39,913 Massachusetts Electric Co. customers and less than 60,000 Boston Edison customers.

State Civil Defense Agency officials put the total of homes and businesses without electricity Sunday at 200,000.

"We're hoping to pick up all of our circuits and most of our primary lines by tonight Sunday," said Boston Edison spokesman Mike Monahan. "It looks like we'll have everybody back by Wednesday. That's our goal."

Crews from Illinois, Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Washington, D.C. and Quebec, Canada, have been called in to help the elctric companies restore power throughout the state.

Power outages were reported Friday in at least 40 communities as winds gusted up to 97 mph in Boston and 81 mph at Chatham on Cape Cod. One to 3 inches of rain fell in central and western Massachusetts before Gloria weakened.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis allowed retail food stores to open at 8 a.m. yesterday enable people without electricity and with spoiling food to restock. State lawa forbids retail stores from opening before noon on Sundays.

Massachusetts officials ordered that food in commercial establishments unrefrigerated for 12 hours be thrown away.

"The major losses at this point are really beginning to be food due to the power outage," said Soyt of the REd Cross.

He said about twao dozen trucks in the greater Boston area were distributing sandwiches and drinks to senior citizen homes and housing developments that remained without power yesterday and estimated an equal number of Red Cross trucks were distributing food elsewhere in the state.

By last night, the last of the 216 Red Cross shelters that had been operating at the height of the storm were closed down.

Smith inducts new leader with lavish ceremony

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Mary Maples Dunn was inauguarated as the eighth president of Smith College yesterday in ceremony attended by delegates of 85 universities worldwide.

Dunn, in her inaugural address, which received a standing ovation from the approximately 2,000 listeners, stressed the importance of maintaining women's colleges so that women can continue to develop the skills needed to be leaders.

"The things that a women's college can do for women by and large are absent from co-educational colleges or universities," Dunn told the audience, dotted with alumni from every graduating class since 1914, including Julia Child, who graduated from Smith in 1934.

Dunn, a noted author and historian, spoke of the "deep and disturbing existential problems" facing women on college campuses, such as the stereotype that all-women's colleges are "communities of old lmaids, of nuns and of unattractively emancipated and radical feminists."

Dunn said that one of the most important reasons for her accepting the position as Smith President was because she has "a deep and abiding love for women's institutuions, a powerful sense of their worth, and a pleasure in facing the problems of this period in their lives."

Citing Smith College as an example, Dunn said that women's colleges have begun to recover their self confidence. Financially and physically Smith has been growing to suit the needs of the students, Dunn said, noting that Smith students are a great strength of the college.

The Inaugural Convocation began with Smith students entering the hall carrying flags from more than 60 states and countries. Following the students were delegates dressed in a colorful array of academic robes from 85 colleges and universities from all over the globe.

The ceremony included the presentation of a key and school seal to Dunn by Euphemia Hare Steffey, chairperson of the Smith board of trustees, a greeting speech from the faculty given by George E. Dimock and a greeting from the president of the Smith student government, Katharine Moon.

Other speeches were delivered by Phoebe Resse Lewis, president of the alumnae association, Peter Pouncey, president of Amherst College, and Mary Patterson McPherson, president of Bryn Mawr College, where Dunn was undergraduate dean.

Pouncey, in his address, referred to the Five-College community as "the big elephant and four little beauties," in reference to UMass and the remaining small private colleges.

Following the inauguaration ceremony, an estimated 4,000 people attended a garden party in Dunn's honor. The food was made from the original recipes of Julia Child, created solely for the event.

Fraud series set for Holyoke

By NANCY KLINGENER
Collegian Correspondent

Academic fraud—the practice of stealing or inventing information for publication—will be the subject of a series of lectures at Mount Holyoke College this fall.

Academic fraud has been a major concern at a Mount Holyoke said Stan Rachootin, professor and member of the committee sponsoring the lecture series.

"We thought it was time we examined ourselves," said Bill Quillan, English professor.

The lecture committee looks for subjects that are, "very unlikely for any department to discuss," said Rachootin. "This series will let students know what happens when things go wrong on the other side.

"I hope that one reaction is to realize that academics are people too," Rachootin said. "It's not the intent of the series to get out the word that everybody is fraudulent."

The effects of academic fraud are apparent in the work of Sir Cyrill Burt, upon which much of the English school system is based. Burt proved his theory that people from higher economic classes are genetically more intelligent. By inventing a pair of identical twins separated at birth who later tested at the same level.

The lectures will address fraud in the haumanities, science and art. Dr. Richard Lewontin, a population geneticist from Harvard University was scheduled to deliver the first lecture on Sept. 27.

YER OUT!!!!—Student takes head-first dive in mud patch near Southwest after Hurricane Gloria passed through Amherst Friday.

Seminar slated

Foreign language addressed

Students enrolled in foreign languages courses may soon be able to learn a language through a program involving the media of other countries. The program is part of the Five Colleges Foreign Languages Faculty Seminar scheduled for the 1985-86 academic year and the program is being funded by a $10,000 grant from the Finve colleges, Inc. It includes a year-long seminar for faculty to hear speakers and see demonstrations on the advanced technology involved in foreign language instructions, said Mona Peterson of Five Colleges, Inc.

ONe area to be explored in the program is the use of interactive video in instruction. This would include setting up satellite dishes to enable students and faculty to watch television programs directly from other countries live or on video cassett. Peterson pointed out that Columbia University already has a similar program set up to watch television from the Soviet Union. Satelite dishes can also be set up to monitor televison from Quebec, Canada.

The conference is funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities Challenge Grant for the Faculty Development Endowment Fund. Its purpose is to make individuals in the faculties of the Five Colleges more aware and familiar with the technology available to them, Peterson said.

More efficient building planned

By JENN HEMENWAY
Collegian Staff

The state could buy 35 to 40 percent more with its tax dollars if a cost saving approach to construction now used by industry, were implemented.

According to University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph Duffey, the space in buildings without fixed office walls can be rearranged with partitions for different purposes. This saves time and money during construction.

"We need to make use of that kind of building; I don't propose this for all the buildings, but we've never used this kind before," said Duffey. These buildings cost 30 percent less than what is paid when going through all the steps needed for the planning of conventional buildings, with much saved in architect fees alone, he said.

Planning has begun for use of these pre-engineered buildings, said Robert Nayler, the director of planning and facilities development at the University.

"Right now we have a project just started for the school of engineering," Nayler said. He also said this building will house school of engineering graduate students and the extended education division of the engineering program. "Graduate students don't have adequate space," Nayler said.

A pre-engineered building of 30,000 square feet is being planned now. "A lot depends on what happens when we get an architect and engineer in here to compare costs; these kinds of buildings go up quickly so labor is cheaper," Nayler said.

Duffey said money could also be saved by shortening the time it takes to plan the eleaborate buildings.

"They stretch the projects out much longer than they have to, sometimes to years," Duffey said, adding that just the cost of inflation necessary to plan this out is raising costs.

Nayler said the buiding may be located behind Gunness in Engineering East, but the current site is still open for further study.

Oppression and education

Bob Brigham

Yes, it will be a most wonderful day when people will "not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character," as Martin Luther King said.

For now, though, we all must realize that racism is alive and well in the United States. Ignoring that facts helps no one, since all of us lose when human lives and potential are wasted. The black civil rights movement helped to raise the popular social consciousness to the point where racism and discrimination are seen for the evils they are; but the movement in no way eradicated those evils.

According to the Employment and Earnings Report published by the U.S. Department of labor Bureau of Labor Statistics (Sept. 1985), white men over 25 years old have an unemployment rate of 4.4 percent. Black men in the same group have a rate of 11.1 percent; white women have a rate of 5.4 percent; and black women have one of 11.5 percent. Further scrutiny of this report reveals that black workers are skewed into service occupations with a 24.5 percent rate. Only 12.3 percent of whites have service jobs. While 24.2 percent of whites are in managerial and professional specialty jobs, only 13.9 percent of blacks are similarly employed.

Although women are employed at a rate comparable to men in managerial and professional specialty jobs; 19 prcent of women are employed in service occupations as opposed to only 9.5 percent of men. While 5.8 percent of men have administrative support/clerical positions, an amazing 29.3 percent of women are so employed.

I do not believe these statistics represent the current range of abilities of women or minorities in the work force. Nor do they represent the fulfilled goals or potentials of these people. Economic disadvantage, racism, and sexism continue to fuel the inequities cited here. Indeed, these concepts are inextricably linked.

It is ludicrous to pity the white racist man who will hate even more and rationalize his bigotry when an equally skilled Asian or Hispanic is hired instead of him. We live in a white world in this country. It is also a male world; and a heterosexual, Anglo-saxon, Christian one. Privilege and opportunity are still bestowed on many, with regard to these qualities, as a birthright. As a white, Anglo-Saxon male myself, I don't have to contend with the issues that women, people of color, and people of non-Christian religions must deal with when looking for a job. And, God help me if I ever choose to come out as a homosexual during the interview process.

Finally, it is not up to the black and other minority communities to educate whites about race oppression. Because many whites won't do this themselves though, minorities have taken on the task. In addition to dealing with prejudice and its consequences on a daily basis, they have had to take on the burden of turning around and saying, "This is wrong; I am being denied opportunities, and I am being exploited." In the same way, women should not have to be the ones to educate men. Nor should Jews have to educate Christians, and homosexuals and bisexuals shouldn't have to teach heterosexuals. We all have enough to contend with.

It is simple racism to deny the history of oppression against people of color. It is racism to ignore continuing prejudice and discrimination, and to argue that protective laws don't need to be built into the system to help secure the rights of minorities. I wish we all were blessed with some quality that makes us "different" or "unacceptable" to the majority; or at least that we were blessed with enough compassion to recognize injustices committed against other human beings.

Creating a better society

David Valade

Welcome to the United States, land of freedom, truth, and justice. Yet, when considering the political system in this country, we are severly lacking in all three of these ideals.

Our government has made a systematic attempt to suppress the truth. President Reagan subjects government employees to lie detector tests and other methods of preventing communication that would serve to enlighten the public. Blame for this, however, cannot be placed only on Reagan.

Before he denied the press access to the the Grenada invasion, the system of coverups was well in place. Recent disclosures about U.S. intelligence agencies aiding Nazi war criminals show this was happening at the time of World War II. Even as far back as the Declaration of Independece, the public was being denied information that was vital to decision making in a democratic society.

By now, some of you are reacting by saying "Well, what about national security?". Yes, there is information vital to our national security that must be kept secret. Given the state of world politics and distrust, this is a necessary evil. The information of concern, however, is about the everyday matters of government. Why is this withheld? It is not of national security interest. The only other reason is to mislead the public about what the government is doing.

Without an informed public, it becomes impossible to exercise political freedom. Decision making that is inherent in freedom cannot be made based on inaccuracies and half-truths. In countries that are currently struggling to free themselves from past oppressive systems, literacy is considered a primary objective in moving away from repression. Only an enlightened public an attain true freedom. Here, we have a high literacy rate, so the tactics of keeping people ignorant must be varied.

Justice is also sadly lacking in the United States. Here, justice has been disregarded and replaced with "due process." This equates properly followed rules with the philosophical concept of justice. What is left instead are rules that are subjugated to the will of the powerful few.

So what went wrong with the dreams and ideals that this country was founded upon? Only history can provide this answer and at best it will be incomplete. History is recorded by those that control the system. What history will show is the justifications for our current justice system. The reasoning behind this creation will not be included.

By now, certain reactionary types are exclaiming "But what about the Soviet Union? It's better here than there!" Yes, it is better here, but better is not good enough. We can create a better society than currently exists here or in the Soviet Union. We need to judge what we can be, not what the Soviet Union is. The power and the future are ours. It is up to us as to what we do with them.

David Valade is a UMass student.

Faith in humanity restored

Herb Ramy

It started out like any other day, the day that my faith in humanity was restored. It was a Friday, and I had about an hour left before my first class began. After realizing that there was no possible way to get another days use from my last pair of socks I knew it was time to do my laundry. I dragged down the stairs what clothing I could, and had some of the more lively pieces follow me on their own.

Entering the laundry room, I found to my astonishment both a washer and a dryer not being ussed. Prior experience had taught me that this situation wouldn't last for long. I immediately placed the correct change into each machine, giving them both the appearance of being in use. I then sat and waited the half hour necessary for the washer to complete its cycle.

During this half hour many people walked into the laudry room hoping to find a dryer they could use. Everyone of them left with the same look of anger or frustration on their face. As each one left I knew that one day they would learn to play the game. Either they would learn to play the game, or they would spend the next eight semesters with dirty laundry.

When the washer finally shut off, I looked around to make sure no one was watching. Seeing that the coast was clear, I grabbed my wash and threw it into my previously selected dryer. Realizing that it was getting late, I placed some fresh change into the dryer and went off to class.

It being Friday, there were many distractions to be found in the town of Amherst. So, it wasn't too surprising that I didn't return to my dorm until nearly midnight.

Walking by the laundry room, I remembered what had been nagging at the back of my mind all evening. My laundry was still in the dryer.

After waiting for a moment to regain may composure, I walked into the room knowing fully well what to expect. I knew what happened to the laundry of fools who left it alone, unguarded for long periods of timles. If it was there at all, it would be strewn all over the rooms as a reminder for other to beware.

After a quick inspection of the floor, it was evident that my laundry wasn't there. Almost hoping against hope, I looked on top of the dryer to see if at least something was left.

To my astonishment, there was a neatly and carefully folded pile of laundry sitting there. At first I didn't recognize it, but slowly I was able to identify certain articles of clothing in the pile. It was a full minute, though, before the realization hit me that this was my laundry. It was inconceivable. Someone had actually taken the time to do this for me. I'm not ashamed to say that I was moved to tears.

To whoever did this deed for me, I give my sincere thanks. Not just for folding the laundry, mind you, but for showing a young cynic that humans still have the capacity for goodness.

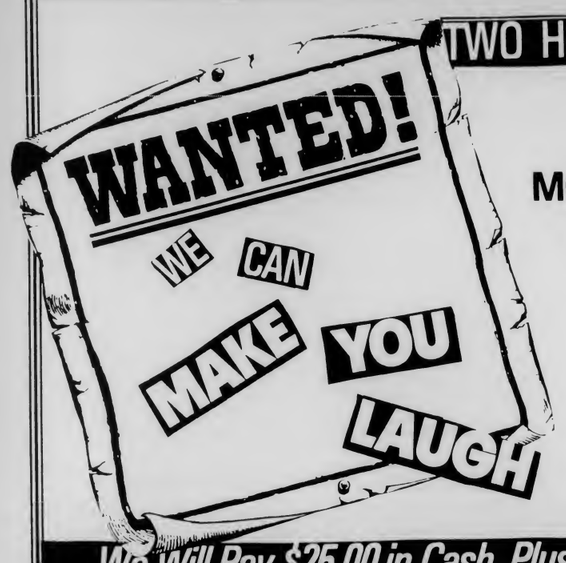
Letters

On AIDS and the mainstream



On behalf of Stuart Gottlieb, I would like to rebut the corporate response of Ms. Murphy and Mr. Jackson with regard to Gottlieb's "insensitivity" toward AIDS victims. These two maintain that by denying the victims the use of certain facilities, such as public education, dnetal care, and housing, we are both ostracixing them and denying them "the lifestyle to which they have become accustomed." They further maintain that AIDS victims deserve virtually unrestrained coexistence with non-victims.

This logic is faulty for two reasons, the first being our dangerous lack of knowledge about the disease. The first case of AIDS was diagnosed in June, 1981. Now, four-plus years later, surprisingly little is known. We simply do not know enough about the causes or effects of the disease to risk the health of non-victims.

The second reason for barring AIDS victims is the risk that they, the victims, run. In a letter this month to the New York Times, Dr. Edward H. Resiner Jr. M.D. wrote, "AIDS patients are many more times susceptible to the everyday strep, staph, and other germs that threaten you and me, than we are to the exotic organisms that lay them low."

In separating the victims of AIDS from the mainstream, we are maintaining the health of the afflicted, and possibly that of the non-victim, until a cure can be found for this horrible killer.

ARTS

"Noises Off" is witty, gunshot-paced

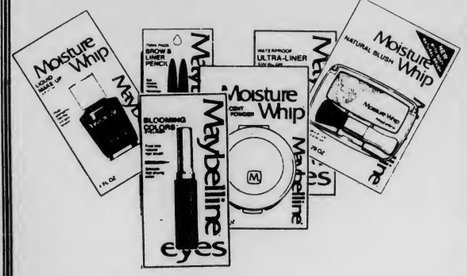
"Noises Off"
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Sunday Sept. 29

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

It was so bad, it was good.

Noises Off, the British parody of a hopelessly inadequate but nevertheless stalwart acting comopany, was the season opener at the Fine Arts Center (FAC).

And, unlike the ridiculed troupe in the show-within-a-show, Nothing On, the cast of Noises Off was excellent. Noel Harrison was particularly fine as the harried director enjoying some dalliance with assorted cast members, and Patricia Kilgarriff was wonderful as the loud leading lady with a lover half her age. But it was the stunning Lydia Laurans who stole the show as the stereotypical "dumb blonde" who couldn't keep her contact lenses on her eyeballs. The only drawback was Selsdon's (Moultries Patten's) insistence on tossing away the ends of his lines.



The play was rich in sharp, witty lines, lots of gunshot-paced slapstick (like a painful-looking telephone cord to the groin), and hilariously misplaced props, (including everything from hot water bottles to sardines). The three acts let the audience eavesdrop on the company in dress rehearsal, backstage, and at the end of their emotionally and professionally rocky tour.

And as hellish as it must have been for the struggling little company of Nothing On, Noises Off was heavenly for the rest of us.

Noel Harrison and Lydia Laurans in the Fine Arts Center's season opener, "Noises Off."

★the Harvard game

UMass ended the quarter ahead 3-0. It started the second quarter with an eight play drive to the Harvard one. On third down from the one, Simeone lost a yard. Stull passed on the easy field goal again, electing to have Simeone attempt a pass to Barnwell, linebacker Brent Wilkinson batted it away.

Harvard, after a sack by Eddie Sullivan (who had a great day with 12 tackles and three sacks) punted from its own seven. UMass drove to the Crimson 25, stalling as Simeone gained nothing on second down at the 25 before he underthrew Crowley at the 19. Kaczorowski's 42-yard field goal attempt was short with 2:21 to go in the half.

Harvard took advantage, gaining 15 yards on a poor interference call before quarterback Brian White looked for Denson at the UM 41.

Denson was covered by safety Bob Shelmire and as the pass arrived, it was tipped up by linebacker Todd Rundle. The ball fell into Denson's hands and he raced untouched 60-yards for the touchdown. George Barnwell fumbled it away at his own 35 two plays later and kicker Rob Steinberg (after Harvard was stopped by the UMass defense) booted a 43-yard field goal for the final margin.

Harvard, outside of the 60 yard gift, gained 32 first half yards and had only four first downs. UM's defense, especially Rundle, Sullivan, Platek and nose guard Mike Dwyer, stuffed the Crimson's running game, allowing only 104 yards on the ground.

The second half was downright boring. UMass had its chances, driving to Harvard's 34 before Barnwell fumbled, to its own 40 before Simeone was intercepted, to the Crimson 42 before another pickoff and finally getting the ball at Harvard's 46 with 1:24 left, only to see Simeone get intercepted by Lee Oldenburg.

UMass was hurt by a season-high 70 yards in penalties, but had the ball almost 10 minutes more than Harvard.

Rhode Island, with All-Americans Tom Ehrhardt and Brian Forster, will challenge the proud UMass defense on Saturday, but without a more cohesive offense the Minutemen will suffer like they did on Saturday. "Let's hope," said Stull, "this type of game doesn't happen again."

Volleyball ranked 12th

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team has been ranked nationally for the first time.

Coach Elaine Sortino's women have been ranked 12th nationally in the Division II poll, the only northeast school to break the grip California and Midwest schools hold on the poll.

The Minutewomen, 13-0, are ranked first in the Northeast poll. They won both the UMass Invitationals and the Central Connecticut Tournament.

The UMass Classic, scheduled for Friday and Saturday in Boyden, was cancelled due to the hurricane. The games could not be rescheduled, meaning UMass lost six games.

UMass will play next Tuesday, taking on local rival Mount Holyoke in Hadley. They return home on Saturday to host Northeastern University, a rival Division II power that previously held the top spot in the Northeast poll.

★field hockey

Though the Minutewomen lost their intensity, playing much of the second half on their heels, according to Springfield head coach Dottie Zenaty, Hixon's former coach, during her playing days at Springfield.

"We were lucky. Our kids had nothing to lose. There was a lot of pressure on UMass to win because they're supposed to win all the time," Zenaty said.

She was quick to point out though, that despite the loss, she said UMass will still represent New England in the NCAA Tournament in November.

"UMass can play a lot better than they did today," she said. "No question, player for player UMass is far superior than us."

Despite the upset, Hixon said she didn't think that the loss was devastating but it certainly wasn't one that the team needed.

"There's no time to think about it," she said. "We've got to go forward from here."

Springfield tied the game with 10:01 remaining in the game as Sophomore Penny Guilmain fired a loose ball past UMass goal keeper Lynn Carlson, starting her first game of the season.

For the game, UMass outshot the Maroons by a staggering 41-7 margin, and had more corners, 19-2. Carlson made three saves.

UMass gives Harvard a tip, 10-3

Deflected pass stops Minutemen, Simeone replaced at qb by freshman

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE—When you hold a team to 178 yards of total offense and 10 points, you normally expect to win any football game.

But the University of Massachusetts defense, as good as it is, discovered it couldn't win by itself as the Minutemen lost, 10-3 to Harvard on Saturday in Cambridge.

The UMass offense had the ball 17 times, nine times inside the Harvard 46 yard line, but failed to get more than Stan Kaczorowski's 41-yard field goal. For the first time in 1985, UMass did not deserve to win, fumbling the ball away four times and being intercepted three times to fall 2-2 on the season.

Harvard, 2-0, didn't exactly have the victory coming to them either, scoring on a 60 yard touchdown pass after the ball was deflected and again on a 43-yard field goal after recovering a fumble on the UMass 35 and gaining only nine yards on five plays.

"We're not going to win any games by not scoring when we have the chances," said UMass coach Bob Stull. "Defensively, we played a great game. The turnovers killed us though. It's demoralizing to march down the field and lose the ball again and again. Then they score on a tipped pass and after a fumble, it was a frustrating game."

Senior quarterback Jim Simeone, starting for the injured Dave Palazzi, was not sharp. Simeone was five-of-16 for only 39 yards. He was intercepted three times. On the ground, he gained 59 yards, calling his own number 19 times on the option, once more than tailback George Barnwell (76 yards and three fumbels) and six times more than fullback Al Neri (42 yards).

On Sunday, the UMass coaching staff decided to bench Simeone, putting freshman Bill Shaughnessy first on the depth chart for Saturday's Homecoming game against Rhode Island. Shaughnessy, a 6-1, 175 pounder from Quincy, was 0-for-four in relief of Simeone.

Palazzi, who made the big plays in leading UMass to its first national ranking since 1981, was obviously missed. UMass drove deep into Harvard territory in the first half (reaching the 18, 11, 45, 2, and 35) and scored only three points.

"Who knows?" questioned Stull when asked if Palazzi's absence was the reason for the lack of offense. "We thought we could run the ball on them, but we couldn't get the big play. The fumbles and interceptions were costly, we gave them the game. Jimmy, I'm sure, did his best."

Credit the Harvard defense with stuffing the Minutemen offense and giving veteran coach Joe Restic his 79th win, a Harvard record.

"I felt very lucky at halftime, we were given two gifts for the points," Restic said. "Our defense was outstanding. They're (UMass) a good football team, they're physical and very tough, we just made some big plays."

The first quarter was as erratic as both teams sputtered offensively. UMass safety Paul Platek recovered a Robert Santiago fumble on his own 24 just 42 seconds into the game, the first of 11 turnovers the teams would combine to make.

UMass ran three plays for five yards as Barnwell lost five yards on third-and-five at the 18. UM was called for a delay as Kaczorowski (a guard kicking for the injured Silvio Bonvini) changed into his kicking shoe. After the junior was set, he scored his first collegiate points, booting a 41-yarder with 12:23 to go.

Harvard's Terry Denson fumbled the kickoff after being nailed by Dan Sullivan. The ball was recovered by UM's Chris Wood at Harvard's 19.

Simeone overthrew an open John Crowley before Neri gained two yards. Crowley caught a pass for seven yards to the 11, bringing up a fourth-and-two. Stull passed on the easy three, calling for Simeone to try an inside keeper, he was stopped inches short of the first down by Brian Sullivan.

All eyes are on the ball as a Massachusetts player battles a Vermont player in action Saturday at Boyden. UMass won, 1-0.

UMass edges Vermont, 1-0

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team raised its record to 7-3 as midfielder Andy Bing scored on a direct kick in the second half to beat Vermont, 1-0 on Saturday at Boyden.

The Minutemen, winners of six of their last seven and undefeated at 4-0 at home, fought a chippy defensive battle with the Catamounts before being awarded the direct kick.

Matt Dowd shuffled the ball over to Bing and the middie rifled a shot into the left side of the net for the victory.

Freshman goalie Sam Ginsburg registered the shutout, his second of the season.

For Bing, it was his fourth goal in as many games and second game-winner in two games. In four games, he has scored ten pints for the Minutemen.

UMass will continue its homestand this week, hosting the Elis of Yale on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

The Minutemen will then host the annual UMass Invitationals at Boyden Field on Saturday and Sunday. Northeastern University, the University of Hartford and St. Joseph's willbe in town to battle the Minutemen. UMass then hosts Rode Island on October 12.

Women's soccer downs UVM, 3-0

UMass wins its 100th game

It was one to remember for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team as the Minutewomen won their 100th game, beating Vermont 3-0 on Saturday.

UMass, ranked third in the nation, is only the second school in NCAA history to win 100 games as a program, Harvardd being the first season. In eight seasons, UMass is 100-22-8 overall.

The Minutewomen are now 6-0, outscoring their opponents 32-0 and outshooting opponents 127-7. Against Vermont, UMass outshot the Catamounts 17-1 and had an 8-1 advantage in corner kicks.

UMass scored at the 42:30 point of the first half as forward Cathy Spence taillied, assisted by Susan Bird (with a pass from the midfield).

Freshman forward Michelle Powers scored the next two goals, the first game 43 minutes into the half, assisted by fullback Chris Schmitt. Powers scored again 17:43 into the second half, after a head from forward Monica Seta.

Freshman goalie Carla DeSantis registered the shutout, being called upon to make only one save.

UMass committed 20 fouls, Vermont was whistled for 14 fouls.

Field hockey splits two games

UMass upset by Springfield

By JOHN A. NOLAN
Collegian Staff

The last time the 4th ranked University of Massachusetts Field Hockey Team played on the sizzling turf of Springfield's Benedum Field, the Minutewomen escaped with a 3-2 victory over Virginia.

The Minutewomen returned to Benedum Field, Sunday, fresh from a 3-0 win against Providence College at NOPE last Thursday, but weren't as fortunate, as unranked Springfield College stunned UMass, 2-1 in overtime.

"We panicked," UMass head coach Pam Hixon said. "We did everything right in the first half, but we only played 35 minutes. Somehow we lost sight of what we had to do."

Springfield sweeper Ingrid Gonesh's goal with 1:11 gone in the 10 minute extra period capped a frustrating loss which saw UMass squander numerous offensive opportunities, unlike it's victory over Providence during which forward Lisa Griswold scored two goals and defenseman Megan Donnelly added a penalty shot. All Thursday's scoring came midway through the second half.

The Minutewomen, now 4-2, dominated the first half, outshooting the Maroons, 26-1, and 11-0 in corners. Territorially, UMass held the ball in the Springfield and nearly the entire half, relentlessly firing away at Springfield goal keeper Alanna MacDonald.

"She did a good job," Hixon said.

MacDonald thwarted several UMass scoring opportunities, clearing a Griswold rebound that had initially eluded her, while withstanding six consecutive corners during which she was made three saves off Donnelly drives.

UMass finally scored with just 40 seconds remaining the first half as Donnelly, an All-American, fifled home a shot from the top of the circle off a corner from senior forward Judith Morgan with Chris Kocot assisting.

"It was like watching two separate games," Hixon said. "We just stopped moving. We weren't patient or persistent, it was as if we were behind, not ahead."

Hixon said that though she didn't think that her team looked past Springfield, she said she though UMass didn't take Springfield as serious as it should have. When asked if she thought the team took Springfield for granted, she said they did.

"We need to get more fire and desire," she said. "We can't be cocky and wish the ball into the net. You won't score if you don't play hard all the time."

The new peace pagoda will be dedicated this weekend with activities in Leverett and Amherst. It took over 18 months to build the shrine.

Pagoda represents world peace

Shrine to be unveiled

By ANITA ROYE
Collegian Correspondent

The first shrine in North America dedicated solely to peace will be the focus of a five-day celebration this week, culminating with an unveiling of the shrine on Saturday.

The New England Peace Pagoda, a 100-foot high dome, located in Leverett, was the effort of several groups of monks, nuns, and other volunteers, many from the Japanese Buddhist order, Nipponzan Myohji.

The shrine was built to represent "a crystalization of peoples' pure hearts, and the embodiment of an effort to renounce weapons and violence," Sister Clare Carter, a Buddhist nun associated with the project said. Construction began in March of 1984.

The celebration begins tomorrow at 7:30 a.m. with a peace walk from Pulaski Park in Northampton to the University of Massachusetts. The walk is in commeration of Mahatma Gandhi's birthday.

A rally will follow the peace walk at 11:15 a.m. at the Campus Pond. John Schuchardt fo Plowshares Eight, a predominantly Christian organization geared toward disarmament, will speak on the necessity for world peace.

Musicians and the Dragon Dance Theater will also perform at the rally.

The inauguration on Oct. 5 at the pagoda

WFCR radio looks to expand

Hoping to expand its air-time and increase diversity in programming, WFCR-FM, a Five College public service radio station based on the University of Massachusetts campus, is considering the purchase of WTCC-FM, in Springfield.

"There are several advantages to having two stations under one administration," Joan Rubel, general manager at WFCR said. "We would be able to combine the resources of both stations and put more money into programming."

WFCR, however, has competition in acquiring WTCC's license, according to Rubel. The WGBH Foundation, located in Springfield, and Connecticut Public Radio have also expressed an interest in WTCC, Rubel said.

Rubel, who could not estimate the cost of obtaining WTCC's license, said WFCR is still investigating the possibility of owning both stations.

"Not only do we have to learn more about the legalities of the situation, but also what WTCC has in mind when they do relinquish the license," Rubel said. "They (WTCC) may have certain requirements or litigations as to what kind of 'legacy' they want to leave."

Rubel said WTCC is probably considering the release of its license because of the financial drain it may have put on Springfield Technical College where the radio station is based.

Rubel said 60 percent of WTCC and WFCR's programming is classical music. Both stations subscribe to National Public Radio.

Ferraro returns to Amherst

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

Former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro and Naomi Tutu, daughter of South African bishop Desmond Tutu, will give speeches next weekend to highlight Hampshire College's 15th anniversary celebration.

Ferraro's speech at 8:15 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 11, will kick off the alumni weekend. Tutu, whose father Desmond won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, will speak at 4:15 on Sunday, Oct. 13.

Ferraro's last visit to the Pioneer Valley was in October 1984, when she attended a rally at the Campus Pond, attracting 20,000 people. It was the largest rally of her campaign.

The rally was attended by Gov. Michael Dukakis, then senatorial candidate John Kerry and other area Democrats.

This year's speech, scheduled for the robert Crown Center on the Hampshire campus in Amherst, is arranged in conjunction with the anniversary celebration, which will begin Friday with a parents' weekend. The celbration continued Oct. 13,

Petition to nullify senate elections filed

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

A written petition to nullify the commuter area senate seat elections scheduled for yesterday and today will be filed by the Student Government Association's attorney general.

The debate centers around the positioning of senate candidates and leaflet distributors to the polling places while students were voting yesterday, Scot McCracken SGA attorney general said.

SGA election rules prohibit candidates and their supporters from campaigning, actively within 50 feet or in sight of a polling place during an election.

Candidates and their supporters, McCracken said, were handing out leaflets in the Hatch by the ballot boxes yesterday. The leaflets contained names of candidates and the issues they stand for. At the bottom of the leaflet, it stated: "You can take this leaflet into the polling booth" which McCracken said is a violation of election rules.

"You cannot hand out literature within 50 feet of a ballot box," McCracken said. "More alarming or more insulting is that the officials at the ballot boxes today were people like Dave Martin who's running for office."

Martin, a candidate for a commuter area senate seat, said he was at the ballot boxes because not enough people were available to work at the polling places yesterday. He said the Governmental Affairs Chairman John Crowley requested for anyone able to work the boxes to do so.

Martin said he thinks it will be a shame if the commuter elections have to be done over because of the positioning of leaflet distributors.

"I think Mr. McCracken is being used by political forces for political ends," Martin said. "I wish he was a little more aware of this."

"You leave yourself open to stuff the ballot box," McCracken said of the candidates who stand around the election boxes. "I'm not accusing anyone, I'm just making sure the constitution is observed."

After the written petition is filed with Senate Speaker John Ruddock, it will be placed on tomorrow night's senate meeting agenda for debate.

"I don't see any problem in getting this (commuter election) nullified," McCracken said. "They directly broke the constitution."

Reagan optimistic about peace talks with Hussein

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Reagan expressed optimism Monday about overcoming obstacles to the opening of Arab-Israeli peace talks this year, while Jordan's King Hussein stressed that negotiations must take place at an international conference attended by the Soviet Union.

Reagan and Hussein met for nearly an hour in their second round of talks this year. The meeting came against the backdrop of Reagan's announcement Friday of a controversial, $1.55 billion weapons package for Jordan.

The United States and Israel have objected to holding peace talks at an international conference because that awould give the Soviet Union a role in shaping the future of the Middle East. Israel does not have diplomatic relations with Moscow, and the Soviets have provided arms to Syria and other Arab countries hostile to Israel.

A senior administration official said Reagan and Hussein focused their talks "very intensively" on the organization and structure of an international conference.

"I thin headway has been made. This is not the moment, this is not the place to get into the details of that headway," said the official, briefing reporters under rules granting him anonymity.

Regan and Hussein both have talked about holding negotiations under "appropriate auspices" but have differed on what that should be.

"We're not excluding anything," said a White House official, speaking privately. "We are exploring what appropriate 'international auspices' might contain. We don't want to get involved in something where Israel is made a spectator."

In Hussein's view, the "appropriate auspices" for talks is a U.N.-sponsored conference attended by Middle East delegates and the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council: the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France, and China.

ADDRESSES PARTY—South African President P.W. Botha addresses the ruling National Party yesterday in Port Elizabeth. He offered to include blacks on the President's Council, a 60-member body that advises on legislation.

Botha offers to let blacks onto Council

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha yesterday offered to include blacks on the President's Council, a 60-member body that advises on legislation, but again ruled out a one-man, one-vote system that would give the majority blacks control.

Botha, addressing a congress of his ruling National Party in Port Elizabeth in the eastern Cape province, delcared his commitment to a united South Africa that allows for black rights but said any future system must also protect the rights of whites and other minorities.

The President's council, a kind of upper house of Parliament, was revised last year to include mixed-race and Asian members for the first time, but whites still outnumber members of other races and control the body.

Botha appealed to black leaders to join in negotiations, and he did not repeat past conditions for prospective participants such as renouncing civil disobedience.

The key question is how to include non-white group in a constitutional system built by whites over three centuries, Botha said, adding, "That is, how they can share in a liberated South Africa. All reasonable South Africans want to see that freedom become their share."

The president offered no specifics, saying details would have to be worked out in negotiations.

"The facts are that we are busy working to outgrow apartheid in the discriminatory and negative sense, and have done so in many respects," he said.

His address was made available to reporters in Johannesburg.

More than 750 people have died in the past 13 months in rioting against the system of white domination, called apartheid. All but seven victims have been blacks or people of mixed race.

Earlier yesterday, police said the bodies of three more blacks were found, bringing to eight the number known killed in weekend clashes blamed on black infighting in Durban and on the eastern Cape.l

In Cape Town, police arrested six mixed-race youths and dispersed 150 more as a group marched to a government office building to demand reforms in schools. Cape Town's 464 mixed-race schools, shut down in early September after rioting there, were scheduled to reopen for the final term today.

Heckler asked to resign

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan asked Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler yesterday to give up her Cabinet post for the ambassadorship to Ireland, the White House announced.

Mrs. Heckler, who launched a campaign in recent days to save her job at the helm of the government's largest department, asked for and was given a few days to think about it, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said.

Mrs. Heckler met with Reagan alone in the Oval Office for 50 minutes yesterday afternoon to try to talk him out of reassigning her.

But Speakes said the president, who denied earlier in the day that he would fire the HHS secretary, urged her to accept the job as "a promotion."

Earlier, Reagan had declared himself satisfied with the performance of Mrs. Heckler, whose management ability and loyalty to conservative principles have been questioned by top administration officials.

Mrs. Heckler, after leaving the White House, ignored reporters' attempts to question her. She returned to HHS headquarters after the session and met with some members of her staff. A spokeswoman said the secretary would have no immediate comment on the session with Reagan.

Reagan, who had never asked a member of his Cabinet to step down, apparently was convinced by his chief of staff, Donald T. Regan, and other advisers that Mrs. Heckler should be moved out of the leadership of the giant bureaucracy. But Speakes insisted the president was not dissatisfied with her performance and that she was not being fired.

Increased taxes on liquor and perfume in new fiscal year

WASHINGTON (AP) - Americans will find liquor and perfume more expensive and a scheduled tax cut on cigarettes likely to be scrapped when the government's 1986 fiscal year begins today.

And pressure begins on states to adopt tough new laws to collect child-support payments from absent parents.

The cigarette tax had been scheduled to drop from 16 cents a pack to 8 cents. However, Congress now appears likely to approve a bill to keep it at the 16-cent-rate - meaning $5 billion in extra revenue over the next three years - and may also add taxes to snuff and chewing tobacco.

The 8-cent levy may be in effect for a short time because it appeared unlikely the House and Senate could agree by midnight yesterday on details of a bill extending the full tax. Once a bill is approved, it almost certainly would be retroactive to Oct. 1.

The states have their cigarette taxes, too, and 17 of them have enacted increases that take effect if the federal levy drops. Of the 17, seven have laws that would roll back the state tax increase if Congress reinstates the full 16-cent federal tax.

While the Senate Finance Committee has voted to impose a federal tax on snuff and chewing tobacco, there is no certainty that measure will become law.

Health Services hopes to continue to defer costs

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

University Health Services expects to be able to continue to defer student health costs if its three-year accreditation is renewed by the Joint Commission on Accreditation o Hospitals.

Health services was recently inspected by five surveyors sent by the commission and received a list of recommendations to improve its services. However, Health Services probably will not find out if its accreditation will be renewed for six months.

"The accreditation is important to us because we can bill Blue Cross/Blue Shield and other third party organizations with it," Dr. David Kraft, executive director of Health Services, said.

Under the current health plan, students have the option to use other health policies instead of the supplemental health plan offered by the University, which cost $160 for this school year. Blue Cross/Blue Shield and other family insurance policies are often combined with the basic student health fee to save both Health Services and students money.

"Without the joint commission accreditation, we will not be able to charge third parties to keep fees as low as possible," Kraft said. Students would have to pay the University's supplemental health plan without the accreditation.

The commission examines the in-patient units and urgent health care areas to make sure they are up to standard, Kraft said. Health Services is also accredited by the Accreditation Association for Ambulatory Health Care. The association examines the other areas of Health Services such as the out-patient units and health education services.

The recommendation from the commission outlined several precautionary suggestions that are not standard procedure at Health Services, Kraft said. Currently, there is no routine check to make sure patients at Health Services do not pick up infections while they are being treated at the center.

Although the five surveyors did not find any instances where this has happened, they recommended that Health Services develop a standard precedure. Another recommedation was to monitor high cost pharmacy items on a regular basis and to make several small physical renovations to the building.

UMass president to visit China

Plans to tour universities in exchange program

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

President of the University of Massachusetts David C. Knapp is leaving for a 15-day visit to the People's Republic of China Sunday.

Knapp, his wife Rita and theDirector of International Programs Barbara Burn will visit four universities and several other places where University students and faculty are currently on exchange.

They will tour Beiljing, Xian, Shanghai, Hangzhou and Kunming where the University has been running several exchange programs at "partner institutions."

"We'll be visiting with presidents of the institutions. Many have already visited here and we're returning their visit," Knapp said. "We want first hand impressions of exchange agreements and other types of agreements we're thinking about making."

Knapp said the University is interested in strengthening relations with the universities in China so the exchanges can "serve useful puposes to both us and them."

However, Knapp said he is not sure if the University can anticpate an increase in students. The University will not make any speeific plans to set up more exchange programs until it looks at how well the other programs are working.

Knapp plans to visit several press agencies where University faculty are currently working in addition to the several universities around the country. There are currently four or five faculty members from UMass who are working alongside Chinese university faculty on their mutual interests. Burn said there are also 20 UMass students on exchange in China.

The University is probably one of only several universities in this country with the most exchange agreements in China, Knapp said. In addition to examining the exchange programs in China, Knapp will spend some of his time as a tourist. "I'm afraid I'm just like any other American. (I want) to see the sights and get a sense of the culture and physical environment."

Cop car damaged during chase

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts police officer lost control of his cruiser and hit a median strip on Massachusetts Avenue Sunday afternoon while chasing two speeding motorcycles, police said.

One of the motorcycle drivers was stopped on Governor's Drive and the other was later arrested in Salem. Both were charged with speeding and refusing to stop for a police officer.

In other police reports:

A 19-year-old man was injured when he was thrown from the back of a pick-up truck Saturday morning on North Pleasant Street.

The driver of the pick-up truck took a turn too quickly, threw the passenger from the truck and left the scene. Police said the man who fell off the truck received a gash on his forehead and was treated at University Health Services. The driver was charged with leaving the scene of an accident and driving to endanger.

A 1960 Chevy Camaro, valued at $4500, was stolen from parking lot 22. The car had been missing since Wednesday, police said.

A pizza delivery person knocked on a window and accidently broke it in the lobby of Kennedy tower Thursday night. Police said the man was scared and ran away after a security person heard the window break. Police later stopped the person who was identified from a license plate number.

will feature the former head of the Greater London Council, Illtyd Harrington, and Gandhi's granddaughter, Sumitra Kulkarni.

The idea for a peace pagoda was initiated by the Rev. Mamoru Kato. The structure is designed to signify a dedication to peace, a symbol of the renunciation of war and a determination to be free of nuclear arms. Leverett was one of the first nuclear-free zones in the country. The Peace Pagoda was constructed to be a symbolic prayer for peace for all groups, and is intended for everyone who has an interest in peace issues.

"The Peace Pagoda is the physical embodiment of a universal prayer; a prayer for peace that must embrace the whole of mankind," Kato said.

Carter said Leverett was chosen because of its "openness, tolerance and the stand it takes on peace issues."

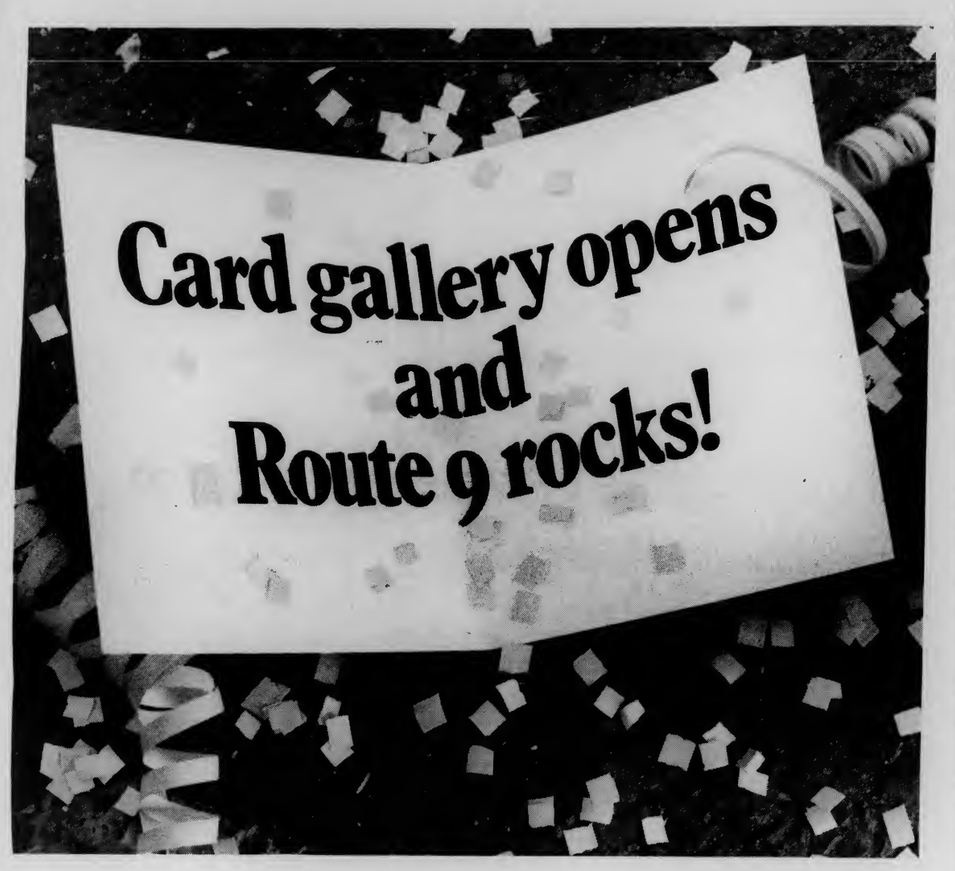
with an alumni weekend.

"There is not a great deal of embellishment to go along with this speech," said Peter Gluckler, executive assistant to the president at Hampshire. "The evening program does not include a formal ceremony."

Glucker said preliminary plans are to keep the Ferraro speech open to the public, but noted that the possibility remains that seats may have to be reserved because of limited space.



"Seats will be reserved for the board of trustees and the media," Gluckler said. "Beyond that it is open to the public, but that may be changed."

New England joins hunger fight

BOSTON (AP)—More than 300 rock and folk musicians from New England teamed up with nightclub owners to raise money to fight hunger in New England and around the world.

David Giammatteo, co-publisher of The Beat magazine, organized the Beat-Aid concerts, which he hoped would raise $70,000.

"The fact that 160 bands and 27 clubs can come together as a community in just six weeks is incredible," he said. "This proved there's not another local music scene anywhere in the country like ours."

The shows were held Sunday, with most clubs putting them on in the evening. Some, including Bunratty's in Boston's Brighton section, Jonathan Swift's in Cambridge and The Last Call in Providence, R.I., held day-long sessions.

Battle over pay equity bill fought in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) Congressional Democrats thought they were waltzing toward passage of law this year that would lead to equal pay for women. Then House conservatives stopped the music.

Angry women's groups and labor unions say the few Republicans who have stalled the legislation with scores of amendments are fighting a losing battle against one of the most significant women's issues of the decade.

But opponents - backed by President Reagan and major corporations - believe thay are buying time to inform Americans that the proposal to raise pay for certain jobs traditionally held by women could destroy the economy.

At issue is a House bill scheduled for action this week proposing to study whether women and minorities in the federal workforce are victims of pay discrimination.

If it becomes law, it could be used to establish a system, of comparable worth under which men and women would receive the same salaries for different jobs judged to be of similar value. If the bill fails, the women's movement and labor unions will have lost an important test of strength.

"If they make this a big national issue, they're going to get a black eye," predicts the bill's sponsor, Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio.

"Women and minorities have a stake in the bill. If conservatives want to fight it, good. Let them alienate the blacks, women and Hispanics in their districts."

Ms. Oakar's pay equity bill passed the House by a 413-6 vote last year, but it never came up for a vote in the Republican-controlled Senate. To increase the chance of passage this year, the measure was broadened to include minority groups. In addition, an identical bill was introduced in the Senate by Sens. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., and Daniel Evans, R-Wash.

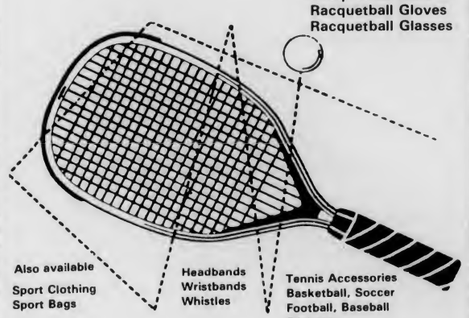
This year, Ms. Oakar said, Senate approval is more likely because Evans is a co-sponsor and because 22 Senate seats held by Republicans are up for re-election next year.

The president has ridiculed comparable worth as "hare-brained" and Clarence Pendleton, Civil Rights Commission chairman, call it "the looniest idea since Looney Tunes came on the screen."

Gloria ruins state apples

SPRINGFIELD (AP)—State officials estimated yesterday that Hurricane Gloria, which roared through the central Massachusetts apple orchards in the midst of the picking season, caused up to $8 million damage to the state's $25 million fancy apple crop.

"About half of the Mackintosh's had been picked and none of the Red Delicious and Cortland's," said James Cassidy, chief of the state's bureau of farm products. "It came at the worst possible time. We probably lost 15 to 20 percent of the crop. There will be plenty of cider to drink, but where the farmers make their money is on selling for the fresh market."



"The apples appear to be the hardest hit, with the severe damage centered on Bristol, Middlesex and Worcester counties, although there was also some damage to corn that hadn't yet been harvested," said Raymond E. Duda, the state executive director for the U.S. Agriculture Department's Stabilization and Conservation office following a meeting with state Agriculture Commissioner August Schumacher Jr.

Duda said officials expected to present more detailed information to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis following an Oct. 11 meeting hard to put a finger on it, because some areas we thought would be hit hard weren't and others were," he said.

"We were lucky. We had no problems at all," said Howard Atkins of Amherst. The family's 250-acre orchard was right in the path of the hurricane as it moved north up the Connecticut Valley.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Cool is the rule in school

Rusty Denton

There I am cruising down the strip in the PVTA bus, looking too cool for words. My hair is swept back in casual yet suave elegance; mirrored sunglasses hide my gaze, and my lips pout in studied boredom. It is not cool to smile too much or for too long, so I don't. Pointed gray Gucci's, flashy shirt, and pleated linen trousers complete my wardrobe. I am ultimate.

Many people are embarassed to look as cool as I do, but I have my friends. One sits two seats ahead. I cannot tell if he would like to talk to me because his eyes are hidden by his mirrored shades. To my left is a cool woman. Her hair is in artful disarray, and her pastel fingernails rest lightly on her tapered, striped trousers. I would like to get to know her, but we are too cool to talk to each other.

Coolness requires two things: you cannot appear to care about anything, and everything must appear to come easily. I nonchalantly cover my notebook whenever possible. True cool needs no notes. Also, I take only subjects which come easily to me. My first class today is Chem 103E, Identifying Glassware. It would be more cool to breeze through advanced metaphysics, but it is important never to be in over your head. Glassware I can handle.

Classroom etiquette is more difficult. It is good not to sit too far up front, and spare moments are best spent in bored gossip or discussing leisure activities, such as skiing, concerts, and other expensive habits. I prop my sunglasses in my hair, and nod to the professor as I glide into the room. This is key; other students wonder if we have a prior acquaintance.

As soon as class is over, I snatch a Collegian to camouflage my notebook, and stroll blithely into the Hatch where I can see and be seen. I choose the wrong cashier.

"Well, hello there, Liberace! You know, I have a boy just like you, but I straightened him out fast. I said to him..."

I interrupt, "Keep the change." 59 cents is not worth a lecture.

I notice one of my friends at a table. His designer boxer shorts are drooping below his designer corduroy shorts. This, too, is cool.

My lunch group is exclusive. I adjust my shades and give my cohorts a significant look as I notice the beauty from the morning bus wandering by. She and a friend take the nearest seats at the adjacent table. They proceed to critique the same low-life movie my associates are discussing. Naturally, we invite them to join us. Naturally, they do. We arrange a dinner date.

Eventually, our group breaks up. I have just missed a political science class, but I try to make my 2:30 anthropology class, The Politics of Profanity. Swearing is cool, as long as it is done dispassionately.

My day is almost over. I am tired, but I maintain my air of effortless control. I find my roommates passing GQ back and forth. They are my support group. We wonder how long the funds from summer dead-end jobs will hold out before we have to settle for Sears Best. We order a pizza. We decide to toast it on the hibachi as an excuse to be outdoors in floral Bermuda shorts. We break out burgers when the pizza is charred.

It is getting late. There are only two cool ways to study: casually, with distaste, or with the curtains drawn. we are all behind, so we opt for the latter. At midnight, we break out jammies from home and snooze. I fall asleep thanking God I was not born to be a yahoo.

The guest that won't leave

Elizabeth Luciano

The party at our house last weekend was cool. The people were cool, the tunes were cool, and most of the neighbors were cool. There was only one problem.

The Keg in the Bathtub.

We never got around to tapping it, and not even my athletic roomates can move it. The Karate Expert can't move it. The Marathon Bicyclist can't move it. The Equestrienne can't move it. And Liz the Wimp certainly can't move it.

It seems the keg is happy in our bathtub. I've tried to convince it to at least get some fresh air.

"Do you really want to spend the rest of your life in the bathroom?" I asked. "Aren't you lonely? Don't you want to go out and play with all your little keg friends?"

No go. The Keg in the Bathroom is apparently a lone wolf. So I appealed is its sense of responsibility.

"Your mother is going to be worried about you. She's arranged for the movie theaters to flash your picture on the screen during the previews; HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MISSING KEG?

But the Keg in the Bathtub wouldn't leave, not even to call home.

My roommates don't mind the Keg in the Bathtub. In fact, they're growing rather fond of it. It's a handy place to put their drugstore-sized collection of shampoos, shaving creams, and conditioners. They like the Keg in the Bathtub.

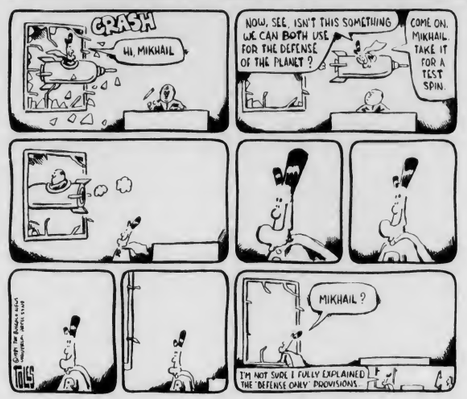
"Maybe I'll make a skirt for it, so it matches the shower curtain," one of them mused.

But I am not at all happy with the Keg in the Bathtub. It's invading my privacy. I just don't get into showering in front of casual acquaintances; call me a prude. I've been wearing a bathing suit in the shower ever since Sunday morning.

And I hinted around to the Keg in the Bathtub about kicking in a little rent money. I was standing around, waiting for the Silkience to adjust to my hair's special needs. Anyway, the keg flatly refused, which really ticked me off.

"You're outta here," I told it. "You're history."

"That's what you think," the keg snarled.



That did it. One aggravation I can live without is a smart-valved keg. I have got to get it out of the bathtub.

Party at my house, this weekend.

Defensive vs. offensive

Lawrence Soucie

What do President Reagan's star wars missile defense system, the great wall or China, the Maginot line, and bullet proof vests have in common? They are all defensive weapon systems. Another thing these systems have in common is they have been very expensive. The only thing that separates star wars from the rest is that every defensive weapons system ever built has been easily defeated; star wars hasn't been built yet.

Who can calculate the cost of building the great wall of China, the only man-made structure that can be seen from the moon? That, too, probably started as a ridiculous idea by some aging, senile leader. Millions were spent developing bullet proof vests made of Kevlar; teflon coated bullets which cost pennies slice through them like butter. The French spent millions on the Maginot line; the Germans went around it.

The sad list goes on for as long as history, but the point is, it is much easier to develop offensive weapon systems than defensive missile systems. Why is this so? I used to work on a defensive missile system in the Navy and perhaps I can offer some insight into this question.

First, there are design specifications. When the defensive system is designed, it is able to defend against any technology available at that time. However, it is true that "necessity is the mother of invention," and, since an enemy knows what is needed to defeat the system, one can simply invent a new offensive weapon.

The second reason defensive weapons are easily defeated is the element of surprise. One has to be on guard at all times, while an enemy can get a good nights sleep and "sucker punch" you when it is convenient. Imagine how difficult it would be if somebody told you that they were going to shoot you in the back sometime during the next 10 years. After looking over your shoulder constantly for seven years, you begin to tire and boom - you're dead.

The third, and perhaps the most significant but least understood, reason is the question of energy, a very, very, very small part of which bounces off the incoming missile and shows up as a blip on a radar screen. There are two problems with this: first, an attacking aircraft can detect the defending radar's transmit pulse at better than 10 times the range that the defending radar can detect the small amount of reflected energy from the attacking aircraft. This means the attacking aircraft knows exactly where the defending radar is loacted.

The second energy problem is jamming. Suppose a microwatt of energy is reflected off the attacking aircraft. All that the attacking aircraft has to do is transmit a one watt signal (at the same frequency) directly at the defending radar and this will completely saturate the defending radar's receiver because their signal is one million times stronger. Of course, it is more complicated that that, but it takes more energy to defend than it does to attack.

If Ronald Reagan gets his way with star wars, the United States will spend billions to put together another defensive system in operation, which if it works, will be the first time in the history of mankind that a defensive system has been successful. The Union of Concerned Scientists, and anyone else that is willing to put aside what they want to be true and accept what is true, have come to the conclusion that star wars will not work, at least not for long. How will the Russians defeat it? Who knows. Maybe they will build more and faster missiles. Perhaps they will use decoys and jamming. Or maybe they will sneak in a few conventional bombs and place them in critical locations to create chaos just prior to a nuclear strike. Maybe, all they will have to do is coat their missiles with teflon to defelct the lasers and particle beams which took us billions to develop. Whatever the case, if we build such a system, history will not be on our side.

Marching Band was outstanding

I would like to commend George Parks and the University of Massachusetts Marching Band for their outstanding effort in front of the 60,000 people who attended the Patriots game at Sullivan Stadium last weekend. The band provided great excitement for the disgusted Patriot's fans. at halftime, they did their unique version of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture, which kept most of the fans seated. In their seats, they started the "Wave," and challenged the beer call "Taste Great/Less Filling" with another section. I felt honored to be a UMass student at the game because I heard many people commenting on their professional appearance, even the critical drunkard who sat in front of me said "Hey! They're O.K." Thank You, keep up the good work.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Black students have problem with Africans

Communication is the key

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

For a long time, there has been little communication between the black students and the African students on campus. In an effort to try and combat this problem, the African students Association has organized a panel discussion to see what can be done to solve this problem.

The discussion was originally scheduled for last Friday evening. However, because of the hurricane, the meeting was postponed until a later date.

The purpose of this meeting is to bring blacks and Africans together to see why we aren't talking to each other," said Kango Lare-Lantone, a member of the African Students Association.

Lantone considers all black Americans to be Africans of Diaspora. Diaspora means all blacks who do not live on the continent of Africa.

"There are some black Americans who do not consider themselves Africans, but only as black Americans. Until history proves it and it hasn't done that yet, black Americans are Africans," he said.

The structure in Africa depends on simply having a better understanding of the black community around the world. "The African government should be more active in what is going on in the black community around the world."

When Jesse Jackson ran for president, he didn't go to Africa. "The government wasn't active in encouraging his initiative. This was the first time a black man was running for such a high office. We should have showed our pride and happiness by inviting him over. It would have helped break a chain of stereotypes that people have about Africans," he stated.

"This type of thinking is very dangerous. By having contact with Africans, hopefully, will help dissolve this type of stereotype," he said.

Lantone feels that the United States isn't aware of international struggle or the importance of international connections. "It is important to have international connections because they have a lot of impact of how issues get solved."

In a letter to Bishop Tutu, author expresses his view

Editor's Note: James Baldwin, reknown author and five-college professor who is teaching this semester at Hampshire College, wrote a letter to Bishop Desmond Tutu about his thoughts on the situation in South Africa.

Tutu is the winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize and the general secretary of the South African Council of Churches.

This letter is reprinted from the August 23, 1985 issue of The New Statements with permission. Part I appears today. Part II will appear on Friday's page.

"Though I am not a religious, or, more precisely a churchgoing man, I, like all black Americans, come out of the church—the black church, for we were not allowed to be members of the white one. I can, therefore, use an image which is part of my inheritance and say that you and I, who have never met on earth (but who may meet in that kingdom that you are struggling to make real) have already met: in hell. And a more felicitou dwelling place has a very precise meaning for those who meet in hell.

But this is a very particular and peculiar hell. It is not built four square. It is hard to convey the quality of the inhabitants. Every system involves a hierarchy, so perhaps I could suggest a system of this hell by observing that those who meet there manage to meet because they know where they are. The others—the minority in your country, the majority in mine—never meet because they imagine that hell is a place for others. Their also imagine that they control this system.

It will be considered offensive—unpatriotic—to compare the South African situation to the American situation: nor will I, in fact, make such a comparison because I do not know enough about your country (I may not know enough about my own). yet, you must have sometimes been struck, as I have been, but the vehemence of the Western leaders (my own nominal representative in France en tete) concerning global freedom and democracy; deep concern over Polish freedom, the determination of the American government to bring freedom to South America and the Phillippines by any means whatever, and the ineffable gallantry of the British Prime Minister's insistence on freedom for the islands off Argentina.

But none of this bellicosity is exhibited in the case of South Africa.

To back track, and in order to make my point clear: I am certainly concerned about the freedom of the Poles in Warsaw; but the Poles, in Chicago, are Whites who hate Blacks. I am certainly concerned about Ireland: but the Irish, in Boston, are Whites who hate niggers. I may be ambivalent concerning the physical purposes of the state of Israel, but American Jews are, in the main, indistinguishable for American white Christians; and I would not like to be an Arab in Jerusalem. And Israel is, also, an ally of South Africa—which Western nation, indeed, is not? (And, it is worth pointing out that the ANC is as homeless as the PLO, for the same reasons.)

And finally, to discuss—I dismiss—'the Russian menace': I have known very few black communists; black Americans, on the whole, are far less romantic than white Amricans. The Russian menace has been invented by the West in order to distract attention from the moral and actual chaos in the West. People one day ahead of death by starvation do not huddle before their camp fires (assuming that they have any fire at all) reading Marx or arguing about dialectical materialism. And it is worth pointing out that my country, which accuses Cuba of exporting 'revolution', is the most notorious exporter of revolution of this century.

ARTS

Smith art exhibits cover the spectrum

By JOE SHARTAND
Collegian Correspondent

Susan Heideman is exhibiting her art work at Smith College's Museum of Art, in Tryon Hall, until Nov. 24. The paintings focus on tide pools, gold fish, and sea plants.

Heideman is an associate professor in the Art Department at Smith College. She received a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in 1972 at the Boston University and a Master of Fine Arts from Indiana University in 1974. She has received many scholarships for her paintings.

Her exhibition utilizes, primarily, two basic colors: red and green. These colors are smeared on the canvas into the likeness of gold fish and sea plants. She uses photographs of tide pools in Maine in order to convey them in her paintings.

These works appear to be reaching for abstraction, yet they have nothing to say. Her portrayals of tide pools are less inspiring than the real thing and only seem to be a recording of those photographs that she uses. The artist isn't saying anything except that this is how it looks under water. According to her interpretation, it isn't very exciting.

In direct contrast to Heideman's uninspiring art was an exhibit in the next room call Leaders. Leaders is a collection of photographs, paintings and sculpture of famous personages. There are photographs of James Joyce and Henry James that have been widely published on the book covers of their works. A caricature of Marianne Moore by David Levine is one of the more conteemporary portraits of the collection.

Leaders, unlike Heideman's exhibit, inspires thought, because the various artists were attempting to accomplish something. They tried to capture their subjects's inner workings as well as their physical appearance. They succeed and these are the photos and paintings that we will look at in order to remember these famous leaders. Their grimaces, smiles, and frowns give us clues to their personalities. The artists were able to capture this on their canvases, and at the same time, gave a little bit of themselves. Heideman, unfortunately, does not give us much of an idea as to what she is about.

"Creator" interesting but implausible

CREATOR
Starring Mariel Hemingway and Peter O'Toole
Mt. Farms Theatres

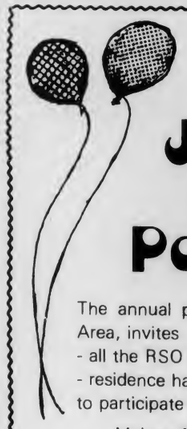
By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

Creator fails in making its story and characters plausible. The plot has intriguing possibilities, but never believably carries any of them out. Peter O'Toole, as an eccentric scientist, is trying to ressurect his dead wife from her cells. This idea is put on the back burner when the film decides to focus on the characters' love lives. Victor Spano, as O'Toole's assistant, falls in love with Virginia Madsen, and Mariel Hemingway becomes enamored with O'Toole. Besides these complications, there is David Ogden Stiers trying to ship O'Toole out of his university. But, from the beginning, it is obvious that everything will turn out all right in the end, because they love each other. Therein lies this film's credibility gap.

Peter O'Toole, on the other hand, doesn't do much acting here either. Instead, he appears bemused about the character whom he is playing. His perpetually amused blue eyes give him the appearance of being above everything, without being snobbish. It's as if he's thinking that these silly directors, producers, and writers can make him do embarrasing things, but it doesn't matter. For example, when Spano opens up to O'Toole, after his father's death, O'Toole just sits there as Spano rambles on, while a slight smirk rests on O'Toole's gaunt face and his amused eyes are slightly removed from the situation. He seems to be pondering something other than Spano's problems. O'Toole is the only likable person in this entire film.

Jeremy Leven's screenplay, adopted from his book, doesn't contain very realistic dialogue. He suses such phrases as 'God's testicles," "the big picture," and "sunuvabith" ad nauseam. The characters have to utter cliches, like when Spano says to O'Toole, "I want to be just like you, when I grow up." How many graduate students would actually say such tripe to their teachers?

The situations are almost as unbelievable. Spano raises



Movie Review

The main theme of this movie is that love will cure anything that ails you. Mariel Hemingway cures O'Toole of his obsession with his dead wife and Victor Spano revives Virginia Madsen from a coma. Besides being too sentimental, these ideas are unbelievable. In real life, death is not conquered by love. It's the other way around.

The characters are almost are almost as unreal as the plot. Most of them behave in stereotypical fashion and come off as performers, not real characters. Mariel Hemingway is brass and loud in her role, as a sex-crazed 19 year-old, and is a very dislikable character. Even when O'Toole first meets her, and she tearfully tells him that she might be pregnant, she comes across as phony. She isn't actually in mental anguish because she might be pregnant; she is acting like she is in mental anguish. From Manhattan to Personal Best, her acting style has declined from realistic to shallow.

his girlfriend from a coma with love talk. O'Toole revives his dead wife from a cell. Also, Mariel Hemingway accidently blows up O'Toole's lab, years of work and the beginnings of his resurrected wife. Yet O'Toole isn't even mad. In fact, he tries to get her back so that he can marry her.

Ivan Passer, awho directed Cutter's Way, has made a very forgettable film. The actors and actresses aren't very interesting and Passer doesn't seem to have tried to get any acting out of them. He even seems embarrased of the O'Toole-Hemingway romance. We see Spano and Madsen in bed quite a few times, yet O'Toole is nothing but fatherly to Hemingway, even though she has his baby at the end. There seems to be an implicit prejudice in this film, as well as many others; that it is disgusting for old people to make love, that they are meant to be parental figures, and nothing more.

Jorma Kaukonen and band play Woodbury

Jorma Kaukonen and Their go the Neighbors
Woodbury Ski and Raquetball,
Woodbury, Conn.
Sunday, September 29

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

It's hard to know what to say about a concert that only last 45 minutes because the performer got lost and was late, but this is what happened at Sunday's Jorma Kaukonen show in Woodbury.

Playing with a three piece band, Jorma played about six songs including "I Heard it Through the Grapevine," "Keep Your Lamps Trimmed and Burning" and an awful version of "Sitting in Limbo"

The concert started slow, but by the fourth song, "Come Back Baby," Jorma's playing had vastly improved. Alternating solos between straight and slide playing styles, played through distortion and phase shifting devices, Jorma and his band brought layers of musical textures into play bringing to mind a sort of dreary realism; the sort of thing that French symbolists used to thrive on.

The band then broke into Kaukonen's equivalent to Lou Reed's "Heroin," "Junkie on Angel Dust" or "Man for All Seasons" as it was called on record. Like "Heroin" the song has slow verses but a rhythmic chorus that gets your blood going. And this performance of the song was no exception.

So things were moving along but then Jorma Kaukonen and his band left the stage because the town of Woodbury had a 6 p.m. curfew on music. So because Jorma had arrived quite late the show was short. There was one short encore and it was over. Oh well.

Opening up for Kaukonen were the New Riders of the Purple Sage and Max Creek. Max Creek played a very long set of pseudo-Grateful Dead songs that at times was agonizing, but ended with a really good cover of "Slow Down." For some reason Max Creek has the worst attributes of the Dead without the benefits.

SAlvatore Macchia, Dorothy Ornest, Nancy Lehrer and Charles-David Lehrer will prform at 8 p.m. tonight, Bexanson Hall. Admission is free.

Herter Art Gallery has dished up a double feature. Colette's Beautiful Dreamer Uniform Series and Leonel Gongora's Paintings/Drawings will be on display through Oct. 17, in the gallery. Seems a little backwards to have a reception follow an exhibit, but hey—whatever colors their canvasses, right?

Photography enthusiasts may want to get over to Emerson College prof Lauren Shaw's show at Greenfield Community College's South Gallery, open Monday-Friday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Said exhibit runs through Oct. 16, which gives you plenty of time to bribe your automotively blessed friends...

Music fans have a full week coming up at the FAC. There's a faculty recital at 8 p.m. tonight in Bezanson Hall (see photo). 8 p.m. Friday night brings the Multiband Pops Concert, sponsored by the Department of Music and Dance. Said concert offers everything from jazz to symphony to the Minutemen Marching Band. And the price is right, too...

Water polo wins UMass tourney

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's water polo team won the UMass Tourney over the weekend by defeating Amherst College and RPI in their two scheduled matches. The Minutemen scored a total of 27 points while giving up only seven, enabling them to claim the tournament victory.

In their first match against Amherst College on Saturday, the Minutemen were helped greatly by goalie Fred Marius. Marius, a senior, stopped 10 shots on goal in route to a 7-4 Massachusetts victory. The other key in the fast paced UMass win was the clutch scoring of Mike Hoover. Hoover successfully put three penalty shots into the net and also had an assist. Other UMass scorers were Jim Flannery with two goals, and Owen Mcgonagle and Bill Feeney with one shot netted each.

The second match against RPI turned out to be nothing more than a chance to get the second team water time. UMass handily defeated RPI by a score of 20-3 with scoring contributed by virtually everyone on the team. Hoover once again led the attack with eight goals and two assist. Feeney was also a force with four goals. Other scorers include Paul McDonough with two goals and two assists, and Jim Flannery, Drew Donovan, John Piaget, and Jim Boudreau with one goal each.

Coach Russ Yarworth was obviously satisfied with his teams performance, which upped their recod to 5-2 on the season.

"We played some good polo, but after a long week with intense workouts my players were a little tired and that led to some sloppy play especially in the Amherst game. Once rested I feel we will be more than ready for the league tournament, and realistically challenge for second in New England."

UM women's tennis loses tough match

By LAURA KAUFMANN
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team lost to the University of New Hampshire, 7-2 on Sunday in Durham.

UMass, 3-2 this season, pushed the Wildcats to three sets five different times, indicating the match was much closer than the score shows.

"The scores were so close, if we had played at home we probably would have won," said senior co-captain Ann Marie Mackertich.

Mackertich was one of the winners with a 6-4, 6-1 victory at the third singles position. Michelle Cope and senior Joyce Giracella were the other winners, taking their number two doubles match 4-6, 7-6, 6-3.

Senior Diana Biagioli lost her first match of the season, in three sets at the number two singles position. Junior Laura Morgan, playing fifth singles, was another three-set loser.

Freshmen sisters Ann-Marie and Mary Beth Polinsky dropped yet another three-set heartbreaker playing third doubles.

UMass plays at Wellesley on Wednesday.

beating hapless Middlebury but losing to Dartmouth. The final tally stood Dartmouth 28, UMass 39 and Middlebury 61.

UMass was led by Lauren Heyle's time of 17:58, which was good enough for fourth place. Winning the race was Dartmouth's talented Maura Teevens, who carved a 16:51 out of the rugged course. Teevens' teammate Kelly Keller was second in running a 17:02.

"I feel that we've made good improvement so far this year," said Minutewoman coach Carol Gardiner.

URI's aerial show landing at UMass

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Rhode Island's offense, to use one word, is scary.

The Rams are going to throw that ball at least 40 times against the University of Massachusetts on Saturday, if not more. Senior All-American quarterback Tom Ehrhardt and All-American tight end Brian Forster are possibly the best passing combination in the country.

URI burned the Brown secondary for 461 yards through the air in a 32-27 loss to Brown on Saturday. Ehrhardt was 30-of-67 with Forster catching passes for an NCAA record 327 yards. Last season, Ehrhardt threw for 405 yards and three touchdowns in a 20-19 victory over UMass.

"You have to think pass almost every time against them," said UMass defensive line coach Steve Telander. "We can drop five of six guys back in the secondary, but they could throw a trap run against the line and pick up some easy yards. They're tough to get ready for. They have a great team."

The Rams, like UMass, are 2-2 and on the verge of dropping out of the national rankings. Harvard's 10-3 victory over UMass and Brown's win over Rhode Island were upsets and both teams need victories to get back on track. The game is UMass' first Yankee Conference clash, URI is 1-0, beating UMass 34-14.

The UMass defense, one of the nation's toughest, should be able rush Ehrhardt. Down linemen Mike Dwyer, Ed Sullivan, Mike Kowalski and Manny Fernandez have been playing well, but the Minutemen secondary will have the pressure on them.

Starting cornerback Carlos Silva remains doubtful for the game with an unjured ankle. Duckworth Grange started for him against Harvard and played well. Senior co-captain Paul Platek has been solid at strong safety. Free safety Bob Shelmire also has looked good along with cornerback Chris Wood.

The extra defensive backs will be either freshman Andrew Thomas, sophomore Chris McCray, junior Scott Brown or sophomore Kirk Willimas. Potentially UMass may drop as many as seven players back in the secondary.

The defense has allowed less than 11 points a game, 80.5 yards-a-game rushing, 162 yards, passing and only nine points in eight second half quarters (none in the fourth period).

Per 100 yards gained, UMass opponents have scored but three points.

The defense, UMass learned against Harvard, needs the offense. Following the loss to Harvard, coach Bob Stull selected freshman Bill Shaughnessy to start at quarterback ahead of senior Jim Simeone (three interceptions against Harvard).

Shaughnessy, a 6-1, 175 pounder from Quincy, was an all-Suburban League performer for Quincy High. As a basketball player, he was second in the state with 28 points-per-game as a senior. He captained both the football and basketball his senior year.

Shaughnessy looked nervous in a brief stint against Harvard, throwing incomplete four times. Knowing he will start and working with the first team in practice this week should help accomplish that goal.

Tailback George Barnwell ran for 172 yards against URI last year. Keeping the ball away from the Rams and Ehrhardt is a key on Saturday and a good running game will help accomplish that goal.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: UMass has ten players on the injured list, including eight starters. More on the injuries later this week, Stull called Rhode Island, "an explosive offensive team that has the best passing-receiving combination in Division 1-AA."

Players of the game against Harvard included Stan Kaczorowski, Mike Briggs, Eddie Sullivan, Dan Sullivan, Rod Turner and Dan Rubinetti. The season series with the Rams is led by UMass, 29-28-2.

Volleyball feels no pressure

But spikers cautiously approach Mt. Holyoke

By ROGER CHAPMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team is currently on top of the world. Elaine Sortino's Minutewomen are nationally ranked for the first time, occupying the 12th position, are the top ranked team in the Northeast, and are sporting a perfect 13-0 record this season.

But fifteen minutes down Route 116 lurks a potential spoiler in the form of Mount Holyoke College. The spikers travel to Hadley today, looking to keep their national ranking and unblemished record intact.

"Being nationally ranked is a compliment to our program and it puts us on the map," said Sortino. "And certainly means a lot to the kids. They were totally surprised."

However, the pressure that often accompnaies being ranked does not seem to bother Sortino or her players.

"To me, pressure is internal," said Sortino. "The pressure in this program is within us, its never from the outside and it never will be because of ranking or anything else. It's because we want to be a good volleyball team and we want to be a good program."

"We have nothing to lose and everything to gain," added Sortino. "It's a wonderful feeling to be ranked in the Top Twenty of volleyball and be east of the Mississippi."

"I don't feel any different now than I did last year at this time where the pressure is concerned."

UMass does not face a pushover in Mount Holyoke. They have attended the Division II national tournament several times recently, and have always been a tough match for the spikers. Sortino does not expect an easy time of it.

"It's a very important match, mainly because we haven't played in a week," said Sortino. "They have good coaching, good players, good recruiting, and they always play well at home. They're going to be very, very tough.

Because of the cancellation of the UMass Classic Volleyball Tournament, the spikers lost a potential of six games and have been idle since last week's sweep of Holy Cross. The Minutewomen experienced a let down against the Crusaders and came fairly close to dropping their first match of the season.

"I think the Holy Cross experience was a good thing, because we went in there and waited until we had our backs to the wall and had to comeback," said Sortino. "I think we really learned from that. We are taking Mount Holyoke very seriously."

Sports information photo

Senior hitter Annie Ringrose and the University of Massachusetts volleyball team are at Mount Holyoke tonight.

VOLLEYBALL HITS: Today's match against Mount Holyoke is the first of three critical matches for the Minutewomen. The spikers face Northeastern University on Saturday and the University of New Haven on October 9. Both teams are ranked in the Northeast region behind UMass.

Today's match is scheduled to start at 7 p.m.

Minutemen lose X-country meet, women split

By PHIL SAYLES
Collegian Correspondent

Running amid the last vestiges of Hurricane Gloria, the University of Massachusetts cross country teams had an up-and-down weekend with the men losing and the women splitting tri-meets at Hanover, NH, on Saturday.

For the men, Dartmouth led the three team field with a low score of 27, while Northeastern managed to squeak by the Minutemen by a scant four points, 49 to 53.

"We entered this meet on pretty much even terms with both the other teams," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien, "but we failed to run aggressively. We let Dartmouth come out and take control of the meet. I guess you could say that we just had a lazy meet. It was a learning experience for us, and I'm happy to have this type of defeat happen early in the season so we can work on it."

UMass was paced once again by senior John Panaccione, who finished third with a time of 22:41. The race was won by Dartmouth's Frank Powers and Tom Kempainen, who both ran a 22:32.

"John proved once again his ability to compete with other top runners in every meet," said O'Brien. "He has been very consistent in his career."

The depth of the rest of the team, which had shown so much promise in the opening meet, failed to materialize. The next finisher for the Minutemen was Jan Novak, who posted a 23:10 for tenth place. Sophomore Bill Stewart finished on Navok's heels with a time of 23:11.

"Other than Panaccione, the team was simply not able to get into the flow of the race," noted O'Brien, who was also quick to stress that his confidence in the team has not ebbed. "We have a talented team, and I'm sure we'll have a successful season."

The UMass women managed a split at their meet,

New plants to beautify the campus

By ROBYN RUGGIERO
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to spruce up the campus, the Physical Plant plans to landscape and improve certain areas of campus, including the Faculty Club and by University Health Services.

The most prominent of these plans includes a public arts project underway in the Southwest Residential area. The Arts Council project, located at Hampden Court, is a sculpture and landscape design collaborative. Although Physical Plant personnel are doing the work for the area, the project is the result of a competition between UMass art students.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey will speak at an unveiling of the project Oct. 5. University landscape architect William Lambert said the project will be 'a spot of interesting color, texture and form. A place you'll want to pass time with friends.' Chairman of the University's Physical Planning Committee David Booth said, 'It should be a big splash.'

Physical Plant workers planted shrubs at the three projects while the heavy construction was completed by Warner Brothers of Sunderland. The total cost of the three projects is about $140,000, Lambert said.

Landscaping around the Faculty Club began last fall and was completed in the spring. Corrective draining, piping and catch basins were installed to eliminate water pooling which caused ice to form on walkways.

The building is now accessible to handicapped people since the walkway from Stockbridge Road has been regraded. This will allow the Advisory Committee for Handicapped Affairs to hold their reception there for the first time, Lambert said..

The building was built in 1728 and because of its historical background Lambert said he 'designed planting plans using plants which the original inhabitants could have planted.'

The plants surrounding the entrances to University Health Services 'add a splash of color that is continuous from February to August, then in the fall leaves from trees will take on color,' Lambert said. The building was made handicapped accessible three years ago and now meets all handicap codes, he added. Landscaping improvements began two years ago.

The intent of the planting is to add pizzazz so that people going into health services will feel cheery,' said Lambert. 'I hope they feel a little bit better by being surrounded by something pretty. If you place people in an aesthetic environment they are happier. This whole campus should look like a park and be functional at the same time.'

Elections hit a snag

Rules broken

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association's governmental affairs committee last night voted to nullify the commuter area senate and governing board seat elections.

The vote allows the committee to make a recommendation at tonight's undergraduate student senate meeting that the commuter area's election votes be invalidated and a new election be ordered for sometime next week.

There was about a 20 percent voter turnout in voting Monday and yesterday, said John Crowley, governmental affairs chair.

The committee's action stems from an incident where SGA Attorney General Scot McCracken allegedly witnessed campaign leaflets being distributed closer than 50 feet to the ballot boxes which is illegal. He said he also saw a candidate sitting by the box of which the candidate was running. McCracken yesterday filed the petition to nullify the commuter area seats.

The candidate in question, Dave Martin, who is running for a commuter area senate seat, yesterday said he was sitting at the table by the ballot box. He said this was the only violation he committed and that he did not hand out leaflets, but rather confiscated any that he saw while at the table.

Responding to the committee's decision, Martin said he thinks it is recommending too much to the senate.

"I think if anything, they(the committee) should have nullified just the (commuter) senate elections and not the (commuter) governing board elections," Martin said. "It seemed like the only evidence they could prove was that I worked at the booth."

Crowley said Martin came to him and asked if any help was needed at the polling places. Crowley said "I never said to him that people on the ballot can't work in their own area. So, we both share the responsibility."

"John Crowley and I should have had better sense," Martin said. "The fact is there were too few people working."

If the senate votes to nullify the commuter votes, which by all accounts is highly probable, the election will be rescheduled for early next week, Crowley said.

Meanwhile, students overwhelmingly did not support, by a 762 to 294 vote, the proposed financing of the 10,000 seat sports facility which is currently planned to open in 1990. The referendum states that the administration and the Board of Trustees are planning to finance the arena by a mandatory student fee, which will be implemented when the arena opens. The proposed fee calls for about $160 per student per year for 24 years. Instead, students approved of smaller fees and half of those voting no opted to pay no amount towards construction at all.

Report: homosexual services lacking

UM environment fosters oppression

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The needs of lesbian, gay, and bisexual students at the University of Massachusetts are rarely met by campus services, contributing to an oppressive environment for these students, according to a report commissioned by the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Titled 'The Consequences of Being Gay: A Report on the Quality of Life for Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst', the survey resulted from a series of events concerning gay rights and harassment in the fall of 1984.

Felice Yeskel coordinated the report working as a Human Relations Planner and Advocate. The survey compared data coming from several questionnaires completed by homosexuals, bisexuals, and heterosexuals and concentrated mostly on the 174 students responding to a survey developed by Yeskel and the Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office directed at gay, lesbian, and bisexual students.

The report is the first 'systematic' attempt to document and clarify the needs of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students, Yeskel said. 'Campus agencies now have information and we hope and assume they will respond to the role of their respective agencies reflecting on the data we have compiled,' she said.

The report presents both quantitative and qualitative data to document the existing environment at UMass. The findings reflected on general harassment and discrimination, support services for victims of harassment and discrimination, student services, academic life, housing, and demographics of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students.

The respondents indcated that UMass administration, faculty, staff, student government and student publications fail to adequately meet the needs of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students. And campus services fail to provide adequate support for the gay, lesbian, and bisexual community at UMass.

The report concluded that the lesbians, gays, and bisexuals most open about their sexual orientation are the most likely to encounter harassment and discrimination. The lesbian, gay, and bisexual population 'experience a range of verbal and physical assault which exceeds that of any other group of students,' it stated.

Only the Everywoman's Center and the Lesbian and Gay Awareness Trainers (graduate assistants) were immune from the overall negative evaluation of student services, receiving approvals as 'adequate' from 80.7% and 83.3% of the respondents respectively.

'So many sources correlated that the report points to substantial problems,' Yeskel said. 'Intuitively, we suspected it all from earlier conversations but it's more powerful to have data from the sources. This all points to many problems on all levels for lesbian, gay, and bisexual students on campus.'

The recommendations of the report state four chief goals towards improving the environment for gay, lesbian, and bisexual students at UMass and fifteen specific recommendations.

The goals are to create positive social, academic, and employment conditions; increase University understanding and awareness, reducing negative attitudes; reduce the effects of alienation among members of the homosexual and bisexual community; ensure enforcement of established campus policies prohibiting harassment of and discrimination against lesbians, gays, and bisexual students.

Power outages prompt state probe

BOSTON (AP)- The ability of Hurricane Gloria to pull the plug on 500,000 Massachusetts electricity customers has prompted legislators to plan an investigation into how Bay State utilities could better cope with future storms.

Rep. William Galvin, House chairman of the Government Regulations Committee, said yesterday a special commission would focus on future needs instead of second-guessing utilities for their performances in dealing with the impact of last week's storm.

"This is not a witch-hunt and we do not want to assign blame. We are not ungrateful for the efforts of people who work with utility companies and what they have done," he said. "But we live in an area where such storms are not unknown and we're saying, "There's got to be a better way."

Meanwhile, the state Department of Public Utilities said it had gotten so many complaints about one power company-Eastern Edison, which serves the Brockton and Fall River areas-that it has decided to investigate its performance.

The storm disrupted service across the state, but the DPU said half of all the complaints during the past two days were from the 155,000 Eastern Edison customers.

Galvin said the legislative hearing, planned for next week, would focus on technological changes that could limit similar power failures in the future.

"Electricity has been around 100 years, but there have not been many technological advances in the whole area," said Galvin, D-Boston. "We also want to look at who's responsible for clearing trees and branches away from power lines and at the total plan for restoring power-who gets it back first."

Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said he felt many utilities hadn't learned their lesson following the Blizzard of 1978. Officials who designed emergency preparedness systems after that snowstorm should have 'learned from that experience and addressed this storm in a more effective manner than I believe it was addressed," Hynes said.

Officials at the Boston Edison Co., which has 600,000 customers throughout eastern Massachusetts, said they would be vindicated by any legislative probe.

"That's their choice. All I'm saying, quite frankly, is that I'm satisfied Boston Edison did absolutely everything. We were as well prepared as we could be for a hurricane to hit our system," said spokesman Mike Monahan.

The DPU plans several hearings to investigate Eastern Edison, which had 107,000 customers without power at the height of the storm. Last night, 19,200 customers remained without service.

Drug may safely combat AIDS

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—An experimental new drug stops the AIDS virus from reproducing and attacking blood cells in the laboratory, and initial tests show it can be given safely to AIDS victims, researchers said yesterday.

"I think this is very promising. This is one of the most potent drugs" against the AIDS virus, said Dr. Hiroaki Mitsuya of the National Cancer Institute. "The advantage of this agent is that it is less toxic in vitro," or in the test tube, than other experimental AIDS medicines.

The drug, known chemically as azidothymidine, has been code named compound S by its developer, the pharmaceutical firm Burroughs Wellcome.

The effort to treat AIDS has been stymied by the difficulty of attacking viruses in general and the virus that causes this lethal disease in particular. The new drug works by short-circuiting the chemical process that the virus uses to make copies of itself inside human white blood cells.

Reports on experiments with the drug by Mitsuya and others were presented at a meeting of the American Society for Microbiology.l

Currently there is no effective treatment for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and victims often die of so-called opportunistic infections, attacks by germs that healthy people easily ward off. More than 13,000 Americans have gotten the disease, and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control estimates that the number will double over the next 13 months.

Experts caution that much more work will be necessary before they can say whethere compound S will play any role in the treatment of AIDS.

"No therapeutic claim has been made," said Dr. Samuel Broder of the cancer institute.

He added: "I am cautiously optimistic that the virus can be defeated. And I am cautiously optimistic that this drug can be developed and that other drugs of more refined technology can be brought to bear on it."

Mitsuya's studies show that in the test tube, at least, the drug protects infected cells from being killed by the AIDS virus. Once the drug is withdrawn, however, the cells die.

Testing of the drug on AIDS victims, most of them with advanced cases, began in July at the cancer institute and at Duke University. About 12 to 18 patients will be enrolled in the studies.

So far, the research has found that the drug can be given safely, but experts said there is no information yet on whether it changes the course of the victims' illness.

The AIDS virus attacks blood cells known as helper T cells, or T-4 cells, that orchestrate the body's defenses against disease.

US helicopter fired at in Europe

WASHINGTON (AP)—A U.S. Army helicopter flying a routine surveillance mission along the West German border was attacked without provocaton over the weekend by a Czechoslovakian jet fighter, the Pentagon disclosed yesterday.

The jet, described as a high-performance L-39 fighter, fired twao to four rockets at the helicopter but failed to hit it and then flew back across the border to Czechoslovakia, said Pentagon spokesman Robert B. Sims. The American helicopter was carrying two crewmen, neither of whom was injured.

The United States filed a strong protest over the incident on Monday, Sims said. He declined to answer questions about whether the Czech government had responded to the protest or offered an explanation for the attack.

The State Department also refused to discuss the protest.

The incident occurred Saturday at 7 a.m. EDT, north of the German city of Freyung, near the village of Finsterau, in airspace about one mile inside West Germany.

"The attack, which took place inside Federal Republic of Germany airspace in clear weather, was observed and confirmed by two separate groups of German civilians," Sims added.

He said the helicopter was an Army AH-1S Cobra gunship, assigned to the 2nd Armored Calvary Regiment at the Feucht Army Airfield outside Nuremberg. Helicopters from that regiment routinely fly daily surveillance missions along the border and there was no reason for the attack, the spokesman said.

"It's routine border reconnaissance to see if there is a change in fortifications along the border or an increase in troop concentrations and as forth," Sims said, adding American pilots were under strict rules not to move any closer than 100 meters—or 330 feet—of the border.

Although the spokesman said he knew of "no unusual tension in the region," he added that Czech or other Warsaw Pact aircraft routinely violate German airspace in the region, which lies in southeast Germany near the borders with Austria and Czechoslovakia.

The incident on Saturday was the 17th such incursion since April, but the first in which an American aircraft was fired upon, he said

The Cobra is an older type of helicopter gunship that saw extensive service in Vietnam. The AH-1S is armed with 20mm cannon and can also carry TOW anti-tank missiles. The Pentagon declined to say whether the copter involved in the weekend incident was carring any missiles.

Sims referred only to the 20mm cannon, adding that he was under attack and took evasive action. But Sims said he could not discuss what type of missiles were fired, how close they came to the helicopter, or why they missed.

The photographs of three Soviet Diplomats and the embassy's doctor,

Kidnapped Soviets alive despite threats

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—A telephone caller said yesterday that two of four kidnapped Soviet Embassy employees had been killed, but intelligence sources said they were alive and the purported abductors produced photographs of them.

The instant photos, in color, showed all for Soviets with guns at their heads. An accompanying message said they would be killed unless a Syrian-backed offensive against fundamentalist Moslems in the northern part of Tripoli was called off.

There was no indication in the pictures of the da;y or time the photos were taken. The photos were delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut with the statemen, which said: "We will start carrying out the death sentence on the first hostage at 9 p.m., 2 p.m. EDT sharp unless the atheistic campaign against Islamic Tripoli stops."

But as the deadline passed, there was no indication whether any action had been taken. Leftist militias backed by Syria, the Soviet Union's main ally in the Middle East, have cornered fighters of the fundamentalist militia Islamic Unification in Tripoli, the port city 50 miles north of Beirut.

Two of the men in the pictures were identifiable as the kidnap victims from pictures in their residence permits, photocopies of which were circulated by the kidnappers earlier in the day. Lebanese authorities verified that the permits were authentic.

The photos and statement purportedly were from the Islamic Liberation Organization, Khaled Ben al Walid forces, the Beirut Secter, a Sunni Moslem group linked to the Islamic Unification movement.

Central Area fights disorders

By SANDRA DIAS
Collegian Correspondent

The media has been largely responsible in perpetuating images of the so-called "perfect woman" which has resulted in an increas in victims suffering from anorexia nervosa and bulimia, according to Ann DiBenedetto, sexism awareness advisor for residential east.

In an effort to draw attention to the causes and effects of anorexia and bulimia, the sexism awareness committee and a group of Central Area residential assistants kicked off "eating disorder week" wtih a film and discussion last night in Dickinson Lounge.

"Eating disorders such as anorexia and bulimia are symptoms of our society which sells to us how we should look. Women and men have received so many messages about the perfect body. Men pump iron. Women punish themselves by either binging and purging or starving and it's something women need to get help for," DiBenedetto said.

The film shown last night titled, "Killing Us Softly" revealed how advertisements portray women as sex objects and subordiante members of society. The film cited several popular ads which create an image of ideal female beauty in which thinness plays a major part.

"There needs to be a higher level of awareness in regard to the issue of eating disorders and the impact that it has on women's lives," DiBenedetto said.

The discussion made up of about 20 women and about 10 men stressed that eating disorders, though they primarily effect women, are not solely "women's issues."

"People feel guilty about being born into such a sexist society," DiBenedetto said, noting that men as well as women have the opportunity to educate themselves, and make individual choices without falling prey to society's stereotypical ideals.

Those involved in last night's discussion agreed subliminal messages in advertising have a definite effect on how many women perceive themselves as human beings. In order to overcome these false reflections society must call for an end to this oppressive yet generally ignored type of communication.

"A lot of attention has been paid recently to eating disorders because of the serious side effects which have come to light and people in the media who have had bouts with the illness," DiBenedetto said.

Eating Disorders Week continue Wednesday with the grand opening of the Central Area Women's Center in Van Meter Lounge from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. A film titled "I Don't Have to Hide," followed by a discussion on specific forms of eating disorders will take place from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Thursday in Butterfield Lounge.

Engineering, business link up

A University program, designed to develop new approaches to the petrochemical industry, was unveiled by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and the chemical engineering department yesterday.

The center will be the only academic research project in the U.S. using high technology to design systems for petrochemical plants. "We're finding ways to invent better and safer processes," James Douglas, the center's director, said. Eight companies, including Eastman Kodak, Dupont, General Electric, Exxon and Mobil, have signed two-year contracts with the center, pledging $30,000 a year. Douglas said he hopes to double the number of sponsors in the next two years.

"This is the third time in three years the University has sought and established a formal relationship with industry," Duffey said, referring to the two existing programs in polymr and computer sciences.

"This program is another point in the game of developing a pre-eminent university," Provost Richard O'Brien said. "We believe our future is tied with that of industry."

The center will work with industries to design and improve chemical plants, Douglas said. "We can design a petrochemical plant in an hour. This software tells us what is worth doing and what should be abandoned."

Douglas said the project evolved as an attempt to find a better way to teach engineering design to his students. 'We found a way to put rules of thumbs together and get shortcuts. This computer plots results in microseconds that take me a half an hour."

The computer is able to develop simulations in plant design, Douglas said. This could help reveal a defect that could make a toxic accident such as the one in Bhopal or West Virginia less likely.

"We're working on a hierarchy of design concepts," Douglas said. "Safety and environmental considerations are within that hierarchy."

The program is located in the chemical engineering department. It will have about 30 graduate students working on it.

Coal pollution cleanup goes on schedule

By CAROLYN PHILLIPS
Collegian Correspondent

The cleanup of the University of Massachusetts coal pile that has been polluting Taylor Brook is now running on schedule after more than a year of missed deadlines.

"An interim solution has been in effect since July 1," said Roger Cherewatti, director of the UMass Physical Plant. This short-term solution involves the building of a concrete curb to prevent run-off from flowing into Taylor Brook.

The run-off will be collected in a sedimentation pond and sent through a pumping station into the town's sewage system. The coal pile is being sprayed with a detergent, sodium lauryl sulfate, to slow down the activity of the bacteria that causes the pollution.

A University report from the department of environmental sciences noted that the coal pile is a source of sulfuric acid in the stream. Local farmers have linked the polluted stream, which runs through their farms, to the deaths of several of their cows.

Ming-Jung Coler, professor of environmental science and Oliver Zajicek, professor of chemistry are conducting tests of the run-off and growth in the stream to make sure the spray is effective.

"Whether the solution has been effective or not won't be known until May or June," Cherewatti said.

"The permanent solution will be completed by the fall of 1988 or early 1989," Cherewatti said. He is presently in the process of hiring a designer for the long-term solution to the coal pile problem. This $1.8 million project involves lining the bottom of the pile and building a treatment plant to filter run-off.

The coal pile will be divided into thirds once the permanent solution plan is underway. Each third will be used up every spring and part of the lining will be installed.

The $130,000 for the interim solution and the $1.8 million for the permanent solution are being funded by the state Department of Capital Planning and Operations.

Locked bicycle stolen, obscene calls received

A Huffy bicycle valued at $400 was reported stolen from the bike rack next to Arnold House Monday night, University of Massachusetts police said. The bike had been locked.

Two female students reported receiving a number of obscene phone calls in their room in Van Meter Dormitory Monday afternoon. The caller's voice was difficult to recognize, police said.

A UMass student was reported missing Monday morning, police said. Her roommate told police that the woman was supposed to have returned to their Squire Village apartment but failed to show up. Police also received a missing persons report on the student from the woman's mother. The missing woman later called and reported her whereabouts.

Choosing a long distance company is a lot like choosing a roommate.

It's better to know what they're like before you move in.

Living together with someone for the first time can be an "educational" experience.

And living with a long distance company isn't any different. Because some companies may not give you all the services you're used to getting from AT&T.

For instance, with some companies you have to spend a certain amount before you qualify for their special volume discounts. With some others, voice quality may vary.

But when you choose AT&T, there won't be any surprises when you move in. You'll get the same high-quality, trouble-free service you're used to.

With calls that sound as close as next door. Guaranteed 60% and 40% discounts off our Day Rate—so you can talk during the times you can relax. Immediate credit for wrong numbers. Operator assistance and collect calling.

So when you're asked to choose a long distance company, choose AT&T. Because whether you're into Mozart or metal, quality is the one thing everyone can agree on.
